HESSISCH-NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE of Kassel writes: The technique and the ideology of the rioters are identical in all cases. Violence is supposed to shake law and order, shake up the citizens and make the state feel insecure. It certainly would be wrong to lump honest demonstrators and militant chaotic people together. A hard core of violent elements misuses the peaceful democratic expression of one's opinion. The limits are unclear. Violence is being challenged wherever the thinking is dominated by intolerance and ideological blindness. It is just a small step from verbal violence to physical violence. If legitimate democratic actions escalate into criminal acts, the immediate culprits are not always the only responsible persons. Some apply violence, others accept it. Both are fatal for a democratic state.

RHEIN-ZEITUNG of Koblenz writes: It is understandable that the citizens are more and more concerned by the things that can be read and seen for days and weeks at the demonstration and protest fronts of big cities in the Federal Republic. Must we accept this much longer from rowdies, chaotic people and a leftist mafia? Do we live in a state of slowpokes? Those reacting with such questions to the occupation of houses and battles in the streets dubiously lump together justified demonstrations against grievances and organized violence directed against the state. Stones or bags filled with paint can in no way be considered arguments against empty houses or the shady dealings of real estate speculators. But in view of the serious background of the protest movement of the frequently helpless youth, one cannot warn seriously enough against generalizations and inconsiderate hardness. Where young people demonstrate for good reason against powerplants, the tearing down of houses or because of El Salvador, those people appear--as one knows--who are being wirepulled through the whole Federal Republic, and who welcome the occupation of houses as a vehicle for changing the system, for applying violence and for fanning anti-Americanism. It is most difficult to differentiate between them, but it is absolutely necessary if the constitutional state does not want to embark on a dubious course.

FRANCE-BRAZIL DECLARATION ON FIGUEIREDO'S VISIT

PY031544 Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 31 Jan 81 p 4

[Joint declaration signed by Brazilian President Joao Figueiredo and French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing in Paris on 30 January]

[Text] 1. In response to an invitation extended to him by the president of the French Republic, Brazilian President Joao Figueiredo and his wife made a state visit to France from 28 to 30 January 1981.

On the French side, the talks were attended by Raymond Barre, premier; Jean Francois-Poncet, minister of foreign affairs; Rene Monory, minister of economy; Andre Giraud, minister of industry; Michel Cointat, minister of foreign trade; Pierre Ribes, secretary of state for posts and telecommunications; Olivier Stirn, secretary of state to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Jacques Wahl, secretary general at the President's Office; and Jean Bellard, French ambassador to Brazil.

3. The two chiefs of state made an in-depth examination of the developments in the international situation, especially with regard to Latin America and Europe. They also reviewed their bilateral relations and development prospects. The talks were held in an atmosphere of warmth and friendship, truly in keeping with the historical and cultural ties binding the two countries.

The two presidents noted with satisfaction that the objectives outlined in the joint declaration of 5 October 1978--which was signed on the occasion of the visit to Brazil of the president of the French Republic--had been fully achieved. Ministers and high-ranking officials of the two countries have held frequent and fruitful talks on both political and economic issues. The presidents expressed their desire to see French-Brazilian cooperation furthered and diversified in the years to come.

4. Examining the world situation, the two presidents had the opportunity to express once again their government's support for the principles and objectives of the UN charter. They emphasized the role the United Nations should play in maintaining peace and security in the world and in promoting effective international cooperation.

The two presidents emphasized their support of the principles of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of, and nonintervention in the domestic affairs of other countries. The above principles and the desire to solve controversies through peaceful means and to promote dialogue and cooperation should become the norms for relations among all states. They also condemned "apartheid" and every other form of racism.

5. They conveyed their apprehension over the serious tensions that have developed in several regions of the world.

They contended that each state has its share of responsibility to contribute to strengthening dialogue among all nations and to build an atmosphere of confidence in international relations.

They acknowledged that this task will be successful only if the legitimate interests and aspirations of the peoples of all continents are duly considered.

They also discussed the situation in Afghanistan. They believe that foreign intervention in that country is both unacceptable and incompatible with the tradition of independence of the Afghan people. They reaffirmed the need for a political solution which would encompass the withdrawal of foreign troops and the reestablishment of conditions which would provide guarantees for the independence and sovereignty of Afghanistan, and which would allow the Afghan people to freely decide their future, free from any foreign interference.

Reaffirming their views on the Middle East conflict, they emphasized the need to achieve peace based on an overall, just, durable solution.

Commenting on the extended Iranian-Iraqi conflict--which is taking place in a particularly sensitive region--the two presidents contended that a political solution must be achieved urgently, precluding foreign involvement. They expressed their wishes that those two governments may resort to peaceful means to solve their conflict. They reaffirmed the significance attached by the internatioal community to respect for freedom of navigation in keeping with the rules of international law.

They expressed their concern over the tensions affecting the African Continent. Regarding Namibia, they expressed their desire to see it achieve its independence, which already has been internationally recognized, within the time limit of the process outlined in the UN plan and in line with resolution 435 of the UN Security Council.

They consider that the African states can achieve their priority objective of promoting socioeconomic development only through peace and security, which in turn must be guaranteed through respect for the basic principles established by the Organization of African Unity.

6. The two presidents reiterated their support for the values shared by the Western community, provided they are based on the sovereign equality of all states and on the respect for the various nationalities. They stated that West Europe and Latin America should play an important role in this context. They also conveyed their desire to further relations between France and Latin America and between Brazil and Europe. They regretted the persistence of pockets of violence, especially in Central America.

They expressed identical viewpoints on the importance of building a European community and of the integration processes underway in Latin America.

Commenting on Brazilian relations with the European Economic Community, they conveyed their hope that these relations will be furthered on the basis of the new agreement signed on 17 September 1980, which established a framework for developing a more diversified commercial and economic cooperation which would be mutually beneficial to both parties.

7. The presidents stated that the world economic situation worsened during the past year. They reiterated the need to resume the North-South dialogue to establish a more just, equitable international economic order which would be instrumental in reducing the gaps existing between developed and developing countries.

They believe the main problems affecting the international community today are: both domestic and foreign inflation, growing protectionist threats, the steady and unpredictable increase of energy prices, the instability prevailing on the markets of basic products and the lack of adequate financial instruments to promote development. They expressed the need to find solutions to these difficulties, not only by resuming the North-South dialogue both within the framework of the United Nations and in other organizations but also by seeking a permanent dialogue between producers and consumers and by concluding international agreements on products.

In this respect, they expressed regret that the overall negotiations established by resolution 34/138 of 14 December 1979 did not start on the date set, and they conveyed their hope that the current chairman of the General Assembly may succeed soon in his efforts toward redefining an agenda which would be acceptable to all. Finally, they took note of the recent adoption by the 35th General Assembly of the 2d international strategy for development.

8. In the area of bilateral relations, the two presidents noted with satisfaction that trade between the two countries has increased in recent years, and they reaffirmed their desire to strengthen their economic cooperation.

They expressed their willingness to support increased French investments in Brazil, emphasizing the prospects existing in the agroindustrial and chemical sectors and in the area of production of capital assets.

They also emphasized the significance that meetings among businessmen from both countries have in expanding bilateral economic relations.

9. The two presidents noted with satisfaction the signing of a package of financial agreements related to the opening by the French Government of mixed credits encompassing these areas of cooperation: energy (coal, hydroelectricity and petroleum), transportation and electrical material.

10. After stating that dependence on energy has heavily affected the Brazilian and French economies, they emphasized the need to give priority to actions designed to reduce this dependence.

In this respect, they expressed satisfaction over favorable prospects of cooperation in several traditional ways of producing energy and over the results achieved with regard to a package of projects concerning: coal, coal gasification and the transportation of gas; production of electricity generated by a thermal process; hydroelectrical development; petroleum prospecting; and cooperation in the area of manufacturing and supplying petroleum and coal equipment.

The Brazilian president outlined his country's unprecedented efforts toward developing renewable sources of energy based on biomass. The French president conveyed his appreciation for the briefing and expressed interest in expanding cooperation in that field, especially concerning the utilization of substitutes for fuel. They agreed that the two governments will encourage cooperation and defined a specific cooperation agreement in these sectors. Then, the Brazilian mines and energy minister and the French industry minister exchanged letters on cooperation in the area of renewable energy.

The two chiefs of state stated that the peaceful utilization of nuclear energy is an important factor in achieving economic development. They reaffirmed their aim of redoubling their efforts to promote the dissemination of the peaceful utilization of the nuclear energy but always avoiding the proliferation of nuclear weapons. Within this spirit, they expressed their satisfaction at the signing of a recent agreement between the two countries for the construction in Brazil of a uranium hexafluoride plant. They expressed their willingness to examine the prospects of Brazilian-French cooperation in the nuclear sector.

11. The two chiefs of state noted that other sectors also hold favorable prospects for cooperation.

In the aeronautics field, they noted with satisfaction the decision to undertake an important project involving an air navigation control and security system that will permit the continuation of fruitful cooperation in this sector.

The two chiefs of state congratulated each other on the development of trade exchanges regarding airplanes. They gave special importance to the helicopter program which permits the transfer and adaptation of an advanced technology, thus implementing the development and production of helicopters in Brazil.

They emphasized the importance that they give to the evolution of cooperation between the two countries in the field of information and telecommunications and they agreed to continue the talks that will lead to agreements in these two fields. Their desire for cooperation was achieved with the installing in Sao Paulo of an experimental video screen system, a technique that is used by the French "Teletel" system.

Other projects refer to: railroad and urban transport; maritime transport; the Carajas project [iron ore and aluminum project in Para State]; the Suape industrial and port complex and the economic development of irrigated lowlands and scrubland.

12. The two presidents congratulated each other on the signing today of the maritime delimitation treaty between Brazil and France along the common Guiana border. They also noted that the following agreements were signed during this visit: judicial cooperation in civilian, commercial, labor and administrative matters; industrial property; technological and industrial cooperation in the coal sector; cooperation in consular matters; environment research (National Research Council-Orstom [Office for Overseas Scientific and Technical Research]); biomedical technology and metrology, quality and standards control.

13. The two presidents expressed their satisfaction with progress in cultural and artistic exchanges between the two countries and they demonstrated their interest in intensifying and expanding the exchanges through more extensive cooperation in both the cultural and education sectors through the use of films and television, where an important agreement already exists.

They recommended that special attention be given during the meeting of the joint cultural, scientific and technical commission that will take place from 18 to 20 March in Brasilia to implementing the priority projects that are under study in the aforementioned sectors, especially those regarding French technical assistance to Minas Gerais State for the building and operation of the Belo Horizonte television channel that will be dedicated to education.

The two presidents congratulated each other on the increase in university cooperation in the scientific and technical fields, which has been a positive result of the basic agreement on university cooperation signed on the occasion of the previous presidential meeting in October 1978.

They expressed their interest in further developing and strengthening bilateral cooperation in the scientific and technological field.

They noted with satisfaction the effectiveness of the new process of technical cooperation between the two countries which provides for the reformulation of the legal expert statute and the concentration of action on questions jointly decided upon and annually reviewed, particularly in priority areas such as agriculture and the training of qualified personnel for industry and research. Regarding the training of personnel, the two presidents were satisfied with readjustments to be made on programs in the areas of transport, aeronautics and metallurgy.

They noted with interest the expansion of cooperation programs between the two countries in the areas of biomass utilization, vegetable physiology, gas-generating units, biotechnology and rubber tree cultivation.

They noted the importance of the meeting of the French-Brazilian commission for industrial technology cooperation scheduled for the first half of this year to initiate implementation of the industrial technology cooperation agreement signed in 1978.

14. At the end of his official visit, the Brazilian president expressed his deep gratitude for the warm hospitality shown to him by the president of France, and he invited the latter for an official visit to Brazil. The French president thanked the Brazilian president for the invitation.

MILITARY DELIVERIES TO IRAN 'NOT OPPOSED'

[Text] Following the delivery of four Mirage F-1 planes to Iraq and the uproar that this delivery has aroused in Tehran, France has made it known that it will not oppose in principle deliveries of military equipment to Iran. That is the reply that Paris has dispatched to the Iranian Government.

The reply, however, is accompanied by an important condition: France wants the problem of the missile-armed boats purchased by the shah, which are blocked in Cherbourg, to be settled first. This necessitates an examination of the financial dispute between France and Iran which has been held in abeyance since the return of Ayatollah Khomeyni to Iran.

LE MONDE VIEWS 'SELECTIVE' ARMS DELIVERIES

LD031251 Paris LE MONDE in French 3 Feb 81 pp 1,7

[Jacques Isnard Report: "Iran Strongly Protests Supply of Mirage F-1 Aircraft to Iraq by France"]

[Text] It was in June 1977 that France agreed to sell Iraq 36 Mirage F-1 air defense interceptors equipped with air-to-air missiles and ultramodern electronic countermeasures. In May 1979, an additional contract between the two countries related to another 24 Mirage F-1 aircraft of the same model. Iraq pilots and mechanics were also to be trained.

Although the Soviet Union for a long time was the virtually exclusive supplier of the Iraqi Armed Forces, France supplied Iraq with AMX-30 combat tanks, light automatic machineguns, antitank missiles and Gazelle, Alouette, Super-Frelon and Puma helicopters before the war with Iran. Iraq, for its part, supplies around 23 percent of France's annual oil needs. And of all the industrialized countries, France is the main client for Iraq oil (27 million tons per year).

According to the terms of the industrial contract, France was in principle to have begun supplying Mirage F-1 aircraft to Iraq at the end of November 1980 at the usual rate of small consignments of four or five models every 6 weeks or 2 months in the working year. That is a rate of around 24 aircraft per year, enough to regularly set up an operational squadron of around 15 aircraft, provided the armaments, logistical support and consignments of spare parts meanwhile have been provided.

Since November, the aircraft build have been stored at a French Air Force base where Iraqi pilots have been able to continue their training. It seems that France first wanted to see on what terms the U.S. hostage affair in Iran was or was not settled. This slight delay in delivery partly explains the two visits made by the Iraqi prime minister to Paris last September and December. The first four Mirage F-1 aircraft destined for Iraq arrived in convoy on Saturday, 31 January at Larnaca airport in Cyprus where, a few days before, a Jordanian military aircraft landed Iraqi personnel and fuel reserves. "This delivery," the Quai d'Orsay explained, on Sunday, 1 February, "is being carried out in keeping with the contracts signed in 1977. The French Government already has announced that the obligations stemming from those agreements will be met in accordance with the promises made."

"It is difficult for us to imagine," the Iranian Islamic Republic's Embassy in Paris replied in a communique issued the same day "that France, whose leaders miss no opportunity to assert their respect for freedom and democracy and their friendship toward all peoples, would go so far as to supply weapons as important as this to a cruel aggressor like Iraq."

On 24 September last year, the French Government said it was "concerned" by the conflict between Iran and Iraq and there was, in fact, reason to think that, in face of this continuing war, France would apply the established principles of suspending arms supplies to zones of tension. This was all the more to be expected since such military supplies for Iran were indeed suspended, out of a prior order (made in the shah's days) for 12 missile-launching patrol ships from France. Nine ships were delivered to Tehran before the conflict with Iraq and the other three have been placed under guard in the Cherbourg shipyard, although 90 percent of the payment due under the contract already has been made.

There so far has been no official comment from Tehran. This Monday, 2 February, the daily ISLAMIC REPUBLIC said that France "has now committed all its forces to destroying the Islamic revolution" in an article published under the heading "France's Act Against Iran." Informed circles in Paris, however, say that the Iranian authorities were warned, more than 1 month ago, of France's intention to begin implementing the terms of its contract with Iraq, which, in addition, is trying to secure from Paris the delivery of modern warships and permission to assemble 150 Alpha-jet support aircraft in Iraq. At present, it does not seem that the dispatch of the first four Mirage F-1 aircraft to Baghdad noticeably alters the balance of forces between Iraq and Iran. There are several reasons for this. In all, Iraq has more than 330 fighter aircraft, mostly Soviet MiG, Tupolev, Ilyushin and Sukhoy aircraft, and, in the conflict with the Iranians, the Iraqi Air Force has been used cautiously, chiefly in operations to bomb particular targets, owing mainly to Iraq's difficulty in guiding its attack aircraft from the ground. In addition, it will take another few months before the Iraqi Mirage squadron is really operational, although individual planes could be entrusted with an air-defense mission or a ground-support mission with air-to-surface weapons.

On the political plane, however, Paris' double decision to deliver the Mirages to Baghdad and to hold back Tehran's missile-launching patrol ships will have the effect of demonstrating that France is adopting a selective attitude in implementing its arms contracts.

LE MONDE REPORTS ON FRENCH-IRANIAN TRADE BALANCE

[Text] French-Iranian trade has returned to a virtual balance. In the first 11 months of 1980, French imports were to FR2,866 million compared to FR3,883 million from January to November 1979) and exports FR2,816 million (compared to Fr1,550 million). The Foreign Trade Ministry indicates that the high increase in sales (up 82 percent) can mainly be attributed to products which by their nature were not included in the embargo decreed by France, that is, agricultural and foodstuffs products, pharmaceutical products and goods used for medical purposes. Between January and September 1980, exports of foodstuff products represented 38 percent of total exports compared to 22 percent in 1979 and 12 percent in 1978. At the same time, sales of durables and intermediate goods which represented 55 percent of total exports in 1979 represented only 36 percent. According to the Foreign Trade Ministry, the maintenance of sales of such goods is due to the execution in 1980 of contracts signed before the 4 November 1979 embargo, notably the supply of two airbuses to Iran Air at the beginning of the year.

GOVERNMENT REFUSES TO SIGN AGREEMENT WITH VANUATU

[Text] Following the expulsion of the French ambassador in Vanuatu, formerly New Hebrides, France has decided not to sign the planned cooperation agreement between the two countries. The root of the matter is a dispute over visas and particularly the decision by the head of the Vanuatu prime minister's office to attend a congress in support of independence in Noumea. Here is the reaction of Olivier Stirn, secretary of state to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs: [Begin recording] It was agreed at the end of last week that three visas which were requested would be granted but, as far as the director of the prime minister's office is concerned, we feel he should not attend this demonstration in support of independence, which is being organized in Noumea. That is self-evident. It would be difficult to see France signing a cooperation agreement with a country where the director of the prime minister's office attended a demonstration hostile to the French presence in one of its own territories. Subsequently, this agreement is not respected. The French ambassador was declared persona non grata. We will arrange for our aid workers to return soon and this ends a period which we totally accept--wish for. We therefore regret what is happening but, naturally, we draw consequences from it. [end recording]

FORLANI DISCUSSES TERRORISTS' FOREIGN TIES ISSUE

AU031631 Rome ANSA in English 1540 GMT 3 Jan 81

[Text] Rome, 3 Feb (ANSA)--Italian Premier Arnaldo Forlani today told the lower house that there are grounds to believe but no concrete evidence, that Italian political terrorists are aided and abetted by foreign governments. Forlani was addressing the house on controversial allegations that Italian urban guerrillas receive aid from abroad. The premier's speech was the latest round in a dispute which has sharply divided his four-party coalition, and appeared aimed at satisfying both sides.

The controversy was triggered by head-of-state Sandro Pertini's remarks to French television two weeks ago which first raised the issue of Italian terrorists' foreign links. The interview was followed by a sharp protest from Moscow, which also countered charges from United States Secretary of State Alexander Haig that the Kremlin aids international terrorism.

Forlani's own Christian Democrats and the small Republican Party had sided with Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni, who said there is no proof of foreign involvement in Italian terrorism. Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio, on the other hand, asserted such proof exists and was backed by the other government partners, the Socialists and Social Democrats.

Forlani began his speech by denying that his government ever moved from the prejudicial assumption that Italian terrorism can be attributed exclusively to Italian domestic causes, since terrorism can in many occasions evolve in situations of international conflicts. In order to combat terrorism the premier said all its roots must be cut off, "removing all the causes which can nourish it from within...and severing all the ties which may have been woven" abroad. Referring to criticisms that the government did not issue a position statement after Pertini's interview, Forlani said that such a step would have been "improper" but added that the allegations "will not be allowed to drop" and gave assurances that the government will press with investigations to ascertain whether "one or more foreign states" are involved in destabilizing Italy. The premier said evidence has been found of Italian urban guerrillas' foreign connections and cited the foreign-made weapons found in possession of members of the front line urban guerrilla organization. He also mentioned the links between the Italian neofascists and French and other European neo-nazi groups as well as the refuge many wanted Italian ultrarightists have found in Latin America.

Referring to the latter, he said there is evidence of "hospitality and relations with foreign organizations" based on a common fascist ideology. The Italian Government leader also cited intelligence reports indicating "the possibility that some activities are planned or assisted by foreign government agencies". He said the government is committed to uncovering every possible connection but added that the information at hand "has not confirmed in such a way as to allow us a judgment of absolute certainty".

At this point Forlani stressed how "the still vivid memory of the birth and development of dictatorship in Italy" is at the root of Pertini's concerns, which worsen when one considers" the "increasingly intense and serious" tensions developing on the frontiers of the two world blocs. "The (Italian) Government has declared its alarm for the hegemonic tendency and expansionist policy of the Soviet Union, as demonstrated in Afghanistan," he said. He also cited the case of Turkey, a nation which fell "victim to authoritarian suggestions".

According to the premier, the problem of foreign terrorist links cannot be seen without an analysis of the backdrop of international events. By the same token, "the deterioration of the international political situation" and the "serious change in direction" of the East-West detente process allows development of new negative factors "over which Europe can lose control and its constructive presence". Forlani said this "menacing prospect" requires a "clear commitment of active solidarity among democratic nations in defense of security and peace" and a "different national cohesion" to "successfully counter the base challenge of the enemies of democracy."

Forlani went on to say that national cohesion is a necessary condition of relations between Parliament and the government, between the majority and the opposition because a "widening contrast and attacks against all programs aimed at renewal can raise the level of tension between parties, in Parliament and throughout the nation to the limit of a general and dangerous disorientation." In order not to "close our eyes to the possible international ramifications" of Italian terrorism, the government will continue to urge a clear and open cooperation of all countries that relations with Italy, especially because "statements of condemnation of the phenomenon are important but are not enough...and it is necessary to do more." In this light, the premier appealed to all neutral nations, to the nonaligned and to Eastern Europe to join the proposal Italy presented at the ongoing Madrid Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe which calls for greater cooperation among nations to combat terrorist activities.

Forlani concluded by calling on foreign nations to consider it "more a duty than a commitment to cooperate reciprocally with measures of prevention, concrete acts and by supplying evidence" to jointly combat terrorism.

NORWEGIAN TRADE MINISTER CONCLUDES 'USEFUL' TALKS

[Jorgen Anton report: "Steen Talks in Rome"]

[Text] Rome, 28 January--"My contacts with Italian ministers and party leaders have been useful, but it is obvious that they were not the same as signed contracts," Trade Minister Reiulf Steen said on Wednesday at the end of his 4-day visit to Rome.

Italian Trade Minister Enrico Manca was his host during the visit, and the two ministers looked into the possibilities of expanding mutual trade. This will now be further investigated by experts from the two countries.

In the first 10 months of 1980, Norwegian exports to Italy were worth 1.15 billion kroner, that is 144 million more than the value of exports [as published]. These figures do not include 1.5 million tons of Norwegian oil which goes to Italy via Great Britain.

New oil contracts were also discussed and Steen did not conceal the fact that Norway is looking for technology in return for the oil. But no decision will be made until later on whether there is any foundation for new agreements.

The Rome visit also gave Steen the opportunity for talks with the leaders of the three Italian labor parties, Enrico Berlinguer of the Communist Party, Bettino Craxi of the Socialist Party and Pietro Longo of the Social Democratic Party. Reiulf Steen did not reveal any details of these talks, but stressed that he had noted only minimal differences between the Socialists and the Social Democrats.

SPANISH PAPERS COMMENT ON SUAREZ RESIGNATION

LD0316659 [Editorial Report] Madrid Spanish-language newspapers published on 30 January carry editorials commenting on Spanish Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez' resignation and advancing various possible reasons for his decision.

Madrid EL PAIS maintains on pages 1 and 6 that Suarez' resignation is "the gravest political development" since Franco's death, and after suggesting possible explanations ranging from "military tensions" to pressure from reactionary sectors of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] and Suarez' own lack of ability and psychological collapse, it asserts:

"The church on moral issues, broad military sectors in the field of autonomy and sectors of the financial oligarchy with respect to taxation and economic policy have shown themselves to be increasingly dissatisfied over the last 2 months. In September last year, Suarez strove with what was the last of his possible governments to restore the coalition of currents and ideologies which formed the UCD after the dictator's death. The first impression which we perceive now is the permanent inability of the party in power to offer a democratic alternative, undoubtedly because of the indentification of the predominant interests in the UCD with those traditionally represented by the previous regime's bureaucratic and political apparatus."

It concludes: "The king has now begun consultations on the formation of a new cabinet. From the viewpont of constitutional normality, the desirable thing would be for it to form a government capable of completing the present legislative period. But the uncertainties about Suarez'resignation itself, the strains experienced within the UCD and the precariousness of the party's position make it advisable to call a general election as soon as possible. We say this reluctantly, because this is not good news and because we would have liked a more worthy conclusion to this stage, during which Suarez himself has done much for this country. But it is the will of the Spanish people and not the damaged prestige of the ruling political class which can and should make a response to the crisis which has arisen.

Madrid ABC asserts on page 2 that Suarez' resignation marks the climax of "a series of tensions which have occurred within his party--the UCD--which were in turn only the reflection of a wavering policy with obvious mistakes which succeeded in creating not only an adverse atmosphere inthe various sectors of the country, but also a general situation of disenchantment." While acknowledging Suarez' achievments, it maintains that, nevertheless, "Nobody can deny either that in view of the situation which Spain was experiencing, with a government without a clear and determined course, there was no other solution which would not entail the prime minister's resignation. The misgovernment from which we were all suffering was accompanied by the lack of a sound parliamentary base which would have permitted full exercise of authority and a firm stance on certain national problems."

Noting that "an enlargement of the parliamentary forces represented in the government would give the latter a degree of stability which it has not known since the now distant date of March 1979," it adds: "Because it was Adolfo Suarez who resigned, and not the UCD, it may be asserted that Spain is about to begin another democratic stage which, now that the initial stage of establishing the democratic institutions is over, will open up new horizons for the system of government which we Spanish people have chosen by a majority."

Madrid YA also pays tribute on page 5 to Suarez' work during the transitional period before continuing: "However, the same qualities which enabled him to achieve such results were now turning against him, when the needs were different and required different qualities." It notes the UCD's lack of a parliamentary majority and its internal dissensions and mentions the consequent possibilities of a split in the UCD leading to formation of a socialist government, a coalition of the Socialists and the UCD people closest to them or a general election.

It adds: "In light of this situation, we reiterate what we are saying with a view to the UCD congress. We were calling for party unity and adjustment to its electoral base: unity is a prerequisite to enable the party to negotiate the support which it needs without becoming anybody's satellite. And let those who may feel the temptation of dissidence reflect that they would be its first victims and that, however many difficulties coexistence with those to the right of them may cause them, those difficulties which the radicalized left of their new and hypothetical allies would create for them would be greater."

PROCEDURE DECIDED FOR PRIME MINISTER'S INVESTITURE

[Text] In connection with the debate for the investiture of the candidate for prime minister, the Congress of Deputies' committee of party spokesmen met yesterday under the chairmanship of Landelino Lavilla to consider the procedure to be followed, and came up with a set of draft orders comprising in essence the following points:

The candidate for prime minister will set out his program to the chamber, after which there will be a suspension of proceedings, probably for 24 hours.

When the plenary session reassembles, all parliamentary groups who request it will be allowed to speak for 30 minutes each.

The candidate will reply to these speeches in either an individual or collective way and the president of the Congress will permit supplementary questions and replies.

The vote will then be taken. This will take the form of a public rollcall. Should the candidate fail to obtain an absolute majority--that is, 176 votes--at this first vote, a second vote will be taken 48 hours later.

There was a discussion among the spokesmen on whether, in such an event, the candidate would have to speak again. In the end they decided that there should be a new debate.

The spokesmen also decided that Congress sessions will not resume until 17 February unless this debate for the investiture of the candidate should be scheduled before that date. The agenda for the session of 17 February is to be fixed by a further meeting of the spokesmen on 10 February.

GOVERNMENT STATEMENT ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report: "No Zone Without Parts of Soviet Union"]

[Text] The Norwegian Government has informed NATO's Permanent Council that Norway's view is that every nuclear-free zone in Europe must also include parts of the Soviet Union. At the same time the government stressed that it would do its utmost to prevent the present antinuclear debate in Norway from developing into a campaign against NATO membership, and assured the NATO Council that Norway will continue to be a firm and loyal ally.

In its statement the Norwegian Government pointed out that President Kekkonen had proposed the establishment of such a zone in the Nordic countries in the past, but that the idea had been rejected by the other Nordic countries. It was also pointed out that the Nordic countries are already a nuclear-free area and that all the Nordic countries have signed the nonproliferation agreement.

According to NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA's information, the government pointed to the fact that there are nuclear arms deployed in the vicinity of the Nordic countries, on the Kola Peninsula, in other parts of the Soviet Union and in the Baltic. An arrangement of nuclear-free zones in Europe would be reasonable if parts of the Soviet Union were included, the statement said.

It is still the government's view that large parts of Europe, including parts of the Soviet Union, must form part of such a zonal arrangement. According to NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA's information, the Kola Peninsula is not given special mention, nor is the question of zone arrangements where deployed nuclear arms covering the European continent would be reduced in East and West, as has been proposed in the Norwegian debate.

The Norwegian statement further declared that the Norwegian people feel growing concern over the continued nuclear arms race. The debate chiefly began after the NATO council's December 1979 decision to modernize tactical nuclear defenses.

LABOR PARTY OUTLINES PLANS TO DISCUSS CSCE, SALT

[Text] At the Labor Party disarmament committee's meeting yesterday Gro Harlem Brundtland outlined the present work of the Palma Commission, of which she is a member. This commission will discuss the SALT negotiations at a meeting on 6-8 February.

Foreign Ministry Under Secretary Johan Jorgen Holst gave an account of the CSCE negotiations in Madrid, where he will travel early next month. Gro Harlem Brundtland will take part in the Madrid meeting in mid-February. Holst also briefed the party's disarmament committee on the work of the political consultation group wihtin NATO which Norway helped to set up in connection with the U.S.-Soviet negotiations on nuclear arms in Europe.

Gro Harlem Brundtland told ARBEIDERBLADET that the disarmament committee also had the question of nuclear-free zones on its agenda and discussed the debate taking place at present in connection with the draft manifesto. She stressed that the committee's views are a contribution to the general discussion of the draft manifesto which is now taking place within the party organization.

SWEDEN

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS URGE TALKS ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

[Lars Hellberg report: "Swedish Demarche on Nuclear-Free Zone"]

[Text] Stockholm, 27 January--The Swedish Social Democrats have asked the Falldin government to "contact the other Nordic governments to discuss the possibility of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries."

Before the proposal was put forward in the Riksdag on Tuesday, comprehensive talks were held between Norwegian and Swedish Social Democrats.

Swedish Social Democratic politician Gertrud Sigurdsen told AFTENPOSTEN that the question had been the subject of broad discussion at a meeting of the Nordic Social Democrats' security policy group in Helsinki before Christmas.

The Swedes have followed the discussion within the Norwegian Labor Party in great detail. The explanatory statement which accompanies the proposal states that the Swedish Social Democrats have always been in favor of a nuclear-free zone but that the differing views in the Nordic countries have meant that it has been impossible to implement such a zone. Today the Swedes think that "a new situation" has been created now that "the Norwegian Government and Labor Party have spoken out in favor of the proposal."

Since the proposal saw the light of day in the Norwegian Labor Party's draft manifesto, it has been the subject of considerable discussion among social democrats, within NATO as well as in the Nordic countries. Sweden and Finland see the Helsinki meeting as a sort of parallel to the social democrats meeting in Amsterdam on 10 January with representatives from the smaller NATO countries.

In the broader NATO context Norway has not met with any objections to a Nordic initiative on this already sensitive question.

The initiative for the coordination of Nordic approaches to the proposal for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries comes as part of a comprehensive package of proposals from the Social Democratic Riksdag group.

"A nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries would be an important part of the work for a nuclear-free Europe," the proposal's explanatory statement declares.

At this stage, the Social Democrats have not given any details of how far the Nordic countries would form part of a more comprehensive nuclear-free package intended to reduce arms and tension. But within the party's Riksdag group, the majority see such a zone as a goal in itself which could perhaps lay the foundations for more wide-ranging solutions in the next phase. Otherwise the Riksdag group contents itself with quoting the Norwegian Labor Party's draft manifesto, with all the possible interpretations this admits.

The Swedish Government has pointed out in the past that the Nordic countries are de facto and nuclear-free area, ignoring the Soviet nuclear arms in the Nordic countries' immediate vicinity. Thus the government has attached crucial importance to the fact that the Soviet Union a few years ago introduced nuclear-armed submarines to "Sweden's backyard," "the sea of peace"--the Baltic.

In the past, politicians of all colors in neutral Sweden, apart from the Communists, have also qualified their generally favorable approach to the idea by referring with regret to Nordic disagreements and to Norway's and Denmark's positions as NATO nations.

Thus there can be no doubt that the new tune from the governing Norwegian Labor Party is one--and perhaps the most important--of the explanations why the Swedish Social Democrats are reviving the issue in this way.

The party's alternative to the government's draft budget proposes a reduction of 750 million kroner in defense spending. The other proposals in the disarmament package include a proposal to appoint a commission to evaluate the aims of Swedish disarmament policy in Europe.

The Social Democrats opposition also wants to grant 1 million more to the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute than the government has proposed in its draft budget. It has also proposed that 4 million kroner be granted to organizations involved in promoting information on disarmament questions. This includes trade union organizations, the political parties, religious societies and the cooperative movement, and it is proposed that these be given gradually increasing support for their educational and opinion-shaping activities, until a final figure corresponding to one-thousandth of defense spending is reached.

LORD CARRINGTON SAYS U.S., EUROPE 'CLOSER TOGETHER'

LD022232 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2140 GMT 2 Feb 81

[Text] A by-product of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan is that consultation procedures between Europe and the United States have improved, Lord Carrington said tonight.

The foreign secretary, who was speaking at a banquet of overseas bankers in London, said that the invasion and subjugation of Afghanistan was a shock to everyone "which has, I hope, aroused us from the complacency and neglect of the previous few years."

"Outside Europe for the first time, the Russians have used their troops to overwhelm a neutral and non-aligned state. That is not something which the West can accept nor is it irreversible."

Afghanistan, however, had produced an important by-product, Lord Carrington added. "After a shaky start, and let us admit, it was a shaky start, the realism of what had happened brought the United States and Europe closer together. Our consultation procedures have improved. Our understanding of how necessary it is for us to work together has markedly changed. And we are all determined that should there be incidents of that kind in future, we shall be found neither unprepared nor unwilling to take vigorous action."

Lord Carrington said Soviet expansionism was a threat whether it was in Europe, in the Middle East or in the Far East.

"And if we do not apply our part in rejecting the use of force in the Third World by the Soviet Union or its proxies, then how can we look to our friends for help in protecting our interests, be it in oil or anything else?

AUSTRIA'S PAHR VISITS LONDON, SEES CARRINGTON

AU022055 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 31 Jan 81 p 3

[Text] London (APA)--Foreign Minister Pahr declared that there is "the highest degree of concurrence" between Austria's and Britain's Middle East policies. During an unofficial visit to London, Pahr met with his British counterpart, Lord Carrington, to whom he conveyed a message from Chancellor Kreisky. In his message, the chancellor expressed his appreciation for the British Middle East policy. Lord Carrington in turn informed Pahr about his visit to Egypt and his talks with Israeli Labor Party leader Peres in London.

The two ministers also devoted great attention to the North-South summit meeting to be held in June in Mexico. In this context, Pahr informed the British foreign secretary about preparations for the summit meeting. A preparatory meeting, to be attended by 11 foreign ministers, will be held in Vienna on 13 March, but Great Britain will not be represented at that event. However, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher will participate in the actual summit meeting.

In talks with Minister of State Peter Blaker, Minister Pahr discussed problems of the Madrid CSCE followup meeting, especially the envisaged European disarmament conference. Pahr declared that Austria is "very close" to the French proposal that basic principles should be stipulated for such a conference. Pahr stressed, however, that from Austria's viewpoint, it is necessary to find a way to implement such a conference despite the Soviet ideas of a conference without any preliminary conditions.

Within the framework of his 2-day unofficial visit to London, Pahr attended a large social function of the Girozentrale Bank, that was held under his sponsorship. This "Viennese evening," attended by London's most prominent international banking figures, was held on the occasion of the official opening of a London branch of the Girozentrale Bank.

PRIME MINISTER RALLIS ATTACKS MARXIST OPPOSITION

[Text] Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis Sunday went to Patrai where he addressed a dinner given in his honour by the New Democracy Party branch of Akhaia. In his speech, the prime minister said:

"This meeting gives me opportunity to answer some of the opposition slogans which have been launched. One of these slogans, used abusively by our political adversaries, is the accusation that we do not keep Greece non-aligned and that we have bound the country politically and economically with Europe and with NATO.

"This slogan is unrealistic and the accusation clearly hypocritical. In this world of ours, no country and, particularly no small country, can remain absolutely independent and non-aligned nations have been compelled to join this or that coalition. This is because they realised that the only countries which are not involved in adventures are those which have clearly placed themselves within the sphere of the Eastern or the Western alliances.

"These are facts which are well known to the opposition. If it uses the slogan of 'national' independence" this is not because it believes that our accession to the EEC and our return to the NATO military wing have subjugated us to foreign capitals or to "American imperialism." It is because a section of the opposition parties considers that isolation is the first step towards our entry to the Marxist camp, while another section realises that our links with the West constitute an obstacle to the change of the political and social structure it wants to implement in this country.

"Greece is situated at the southeast extremity of Europe. It is situated on the crossroads of international competition and is subjected to the influences of both East and West. Our national interest imposes on us to maintain good relations with our northern neighbours who belong to the Eastern sphere of influence. The governments of New Democracy, with a sense of realism, have developed these relations and raised them to the best level ever reached to this day.

"We are confronted, both as a government and as a party, by a major demagogic attack by the opposition of our accession to the EEC. Opposition parties avail themselves of difficulties which all EEC memberstates have had to cope with during their initial stage, to state that they are ruining our economy. They attribute the economic difficulties faced by our country today to our accession to the EEC. These slogans are intentional and unfounded. I admit that we shall have, and already have, difficulties during the first months of our accession. But I can also assure you that had we not sought accession to the EEC, we would have been confronted with an economic impasse that would have led us to economic and political subjugation.

"Some of the slogans used by the Marxist opposition disclose to us the policy of isolationism that Marxism wants to impose on the country, should it ever accede to power. The Marxist opposition often speaks about the "agricultural-industrial association" which can solve the country's problems. It speaks about the nationalisation of sectors which will direct the country's economy to a socialist reform. Yet the people can easily understand that such changes in the structure of the country will require great sacrifices of the standard of living, because the policy of self-sufficiency requires a decreased standard of living.

"Another slogan used by the Marxist opposition is out of the NATO alliance." [quotation marks as received] As I have just said, no small country can afford the luxury of remaining outside one of the two major military alliances without running the risk of being confronted with adventures that will weaken the country.

They speak to us about independence and neutrality. In fact, there are some neutral countries. But their neutrality will exist so long as it serves the interests of major powers. The least crisis can dissolve this neutrality, just as the neutrality of Belgium was abolished within a few hours during World War I and II, just as the neutrality of Finland and of Norway was abolished in World War II.

"We should not forget that we are the ones who decided to withdraw from the military wing of NATO for the sake of Cyprus, with the expectation that this political decision of major importance would have caused favourable reactions for our national problem. In fact, our withdrawal did have positive results, but not to the extent we had hoped for. And when, with the passing of time, it became quite clear that our withdrawal had ceased to be useful, we sought our return to the military wing. Not because anyone brought pressure to bear on us, but because we saw that our withdrawal was now turning against our interests. Because, as we have said, our participation in the military wing of the alliance strengthens our defense position.

"And now, to come to another point, the energy crisis has struck our country as well as the whole world. Despite this difficulty, with a superhuman effort we succeeded in keeping up our economy and maintaining our standard of living high. Of course, a large slice of our national income is being absorbed by the purchase of oil. Of course, we are obliged to spend huge sums of money for our national defense. It is quite true that the world economic crisis has had a negative effect on Greece's economy. A large part of the people's income is being absorbed by inflation through the increase of prices and of taxation. Yet we do all we can to keep prices down and to curb profiteering. I am certain that we have succeeded in decreasing the prices of meat and shall reduce the prices of dairy produce."

RIZOSPASTIS Editorial

[Editorial: "The Goal of the Oligarchy Is To 'Isolate' the KKE"]

[Excerpt] The political "isolation" of the KKE and, specifically, preventing its participation in the second distribution of seats has now been raised to a central pre-election goal by the right. New Democracy's main efforts--from its mad polemics against the opposition to conscription of the state apparatus to serve its preelection aspirations --have been concentrated in this direction. This can be seen from the prime minister's recent speech in Patrai.

Government personalities characteristically noted that the influence of the communists is continually rising and that this fact points to the possible "surprise" as they describe the participation of the KKE in the second distribution. The question was repeatedly studied during government meetings which underlined, with relevant concern, the results of polls and investigations on the matter by state services which raise the KKE's strength to approximately 15 percent. It was stressed that the KKE's election goals are not only realistic but also extremely "dangerous" since their possible attainment would tend to:

--Make the stay of New Democracy in the government absolutely impossible, even if it could concentrate the "maximum" number of possible votes which are estimated around 42 percent (at 1977 levels).

--Open the way for a "Marxist" parliamentary majority and government which would actively challenge the "established" political orientations of the country, both internationally and at home.

These trends already have a strong influence on the preelection situation by pushing:

--The leadership and personalities of New Democracy toward an intense and protracted effort to blunt the peoples' discontent and to stabilize their own wavering course. Speaking at Patrai the other day, Rallis defined the preelection demagogic account of the 6-year period of the government of the right and the expected promises for the future with an appeal for the "isolation" of the KKE so that democracy may be "saved."

--The other forces of the democratic opposition to a more careful evaluation of the people's true demands which are increased by the prospect of change. In this light, the "Marxist character" which the prime minister indirectly attributed to PASOK's political goals clearly expresses the government's deeper concern over certain declarations by Papandreou and, primarily, over the possibility of an alliance of progressive forces.

In answer to the danger-mongering which is being cultivated not only by the right but also "from the left," Comrade Andonis Abatielos, member of the Political Bureau of the KKE Central Committee, stressed during last night's speech at Piraeus that:

"Support of the KKE in votes and its passage to the second distribution of seats as well as its general strengthening mean not only a guarantee for democratic normality but also an obstacle to any planned deviation."

Comrade Abatielos spoke at a mass political gathering organized at a Piraus cinema by the KKE Piraeus local organization. In his speech he exhuastively dealt with the calamitous role played by the right in the country during the 150 years of its authority and to the vital necessity of removing the right from this authority.

Replying to the recent Rallis speech and particularly to the part where he accused the democratic opposition of trying to exploit the current "natural" economic problems by accusing the government, he characteristically stated: "In accordance with what is in its interest at each given moment, the right cannot talk to us of economic prosperity at one time and at other times of economic problems. No matter what the state of our economy is today, this is the right's own fault."

TERCUMAN CONDEMNS SOVIET SUPPORT OF TERRORISM

NC040906 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 1 Feb 81 p 4

[Excerpts] Sandro Pertini, president of Italy, is 80 years old and he is a Socialist. He is one of the few people who rose against Mussolini's fascist regime and suffered all sorts of hardships as a result. Frankness is one of Pertini's characteristics.

In a radio-television address last week, Pertini maintained that all the terrorist organizations as well as the Red Brigades are being supported by the Soviet Union. Among other things, Pertini said: "Is the escalation of terrorism in Turkey which has a common border with the Soviet Union over an area of 1,000 km a mere coincidence? Moscow wants to tear Italy and Turkey away from NATO of which both are important members."

Following this by President Pertini, U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig also disclosed that the Soviet Union is behind "international terrorism." Haig has stressed that Moscow is using all its moral and material means to support terrorist movements.

Following the Haig disclosure, the State Department fully uncovered the methods which the Soviet Union uses to support terrorism. According to this disclosure, the Soviet Union provides material help and training for the terrorists. Cuba is being used as a catspaw in these affairs. The so-called liberation movements which are, in fact, terrorist establishments, are secret organizations operating under the auspices of the Soviet Union.

Armenian terrorism is another aspect of this issue which closely concerns us. According to foreign sources, the Armenian terrorists who organized dastardly attacks on Turkish diplomats in all parts of the world and who, in their communiques, use the retarded language of the Marxists, are being directed by the Soviet secret military police known as GRU. Dossiers prepared in this respect are being examined by NATO experts.

Naturally, all these are just arguments. It is impossible at this moment to prove their veracity. However, the reaction of the Italian Communist Party, which is known to be an independent communist party, is very interesting. Berlinguer, leader of the Italian Communist Party, who keeps reiterating every day that he is not under Moscow's orders, has not dared to openly challenge President Pertini's remarks, and, instead, he accused the Socialists and the Social Democrats of "indulging in anti-Soviet propaganda for the purpose of returning to the cold war days."

Another point which exposes the close relations between Moscow and the terrorists is the fact that the Soviet Union has always shirked the antiterrorist campaign launched [by other nations]. Turkey's communist party, Italy's Red Brigades and Japan's Red Army have always enjoyed the auspices of Moscow.

Look at the terrorists caught in all corners of the world, including Turkey: They were all in possession of old-fashioned Communist Manifestos. They all possessed Kaloshnikovs and Russian-made revolvers. The camps of a number of establishments in Cuba and the Middle East, which are placed at the disposal of Moscow, keep their doors wide open to terrorists. At these camps, Marxist theories are being taught and the subtleties of the art of killing are displayed.

If the Soviet Union is not truly a supporter of international terrorism, it must push aside such cheap terms as "the CIA too has done this," "the imperialist West," and "NATOists", and it must proclaim that it is against all forms of terrorism, no matter in what color it may manifest itself.

It must lead efforts being exerted in the United Nations in this direction. It must silence the Our Radio broadcasts which pour malice and hatred against Turkey from East Germany.

It must also discover the leaders of the Turkish terrorists who are hiding in East Berlin, in Sofia and in Prague, and it must hand them over to Turkey.

Terrorism is a germ. Every terrorist act generates counterterrorism. If this epidemic is not prevented from spreading, Moscow too will remain under the debris when the roof collapses.

VOTCP CRITICIZES U.S. FOREIGN POLICY, AGREEMENTS

3 Feb Commentary

[Text] Dear listeners, an article in the FRG daily, FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU, has summarized the new tendencies in U.S. foreign policy as follows: The new U.S. administration is viewing world peace through the barrels of guns. The news conferences held by President Reagan and by Secretary of State and retired General Haig confirm the view expressed by the daily. Reagan has said that the United States will change the existing military balance and will try to achieve military supremacy over the Soviet Union. This statement means that the arms race, which is endangering world peace and security, will be stepped up and that the policy of conflict with the socialist countries will be continued. As for Haig, he does not differentiate between international terrorism instigated by imperialism and by the CIA and the national liberation movements. He is trying to spread the lie that the Soviet Union is supporting terrorism.

Dear listeners, what forces the Washington administration to spread such lies and slander? Above all, the human rights issue raised against the policy of peace and detente has not yielded the expected results. This campaign has gone bankrupt. Now these circles have resorted to a new provocation, namely international terrorism, in a bid to draw attention away from this bankrupt campaign and to slander the Soviet peace policy. Another aim is to brand national liberation struggles with international terrorism and to thus crush them. Therefore, U.S. administrators--behind the mask of international terrorism--are planning to interfere in the domestic affairs of these countries. As a matter of fact, the Washington administration has already taken its first steps in this direction. U.S. administrators are describing as Marxist terrorism the struggles waged by Latin American peoples against junta regimes. This pretext enables them to interfere in the domestic affairs of El Salvador.

Based on a similar demagogy, U.S. imperialism is extensively arming Israeli Zionists in the Middle East and is openly supporting the terrorist activities launched by them against the Palestinian and Lebanese people.

Dear listeners, the major goal of this slander campaign launched by the Reagan administration is to justify the U.S. policy of further armament, opposition to attempts to limit nuclear arms, refusal to ratify SALT II and threatening world peace and detente. As stated by the Soviet daily, PRAVDA, this is a dangerous game.

Bilateral slavery agreements in Turkey, at a time when the Reagan administration has stepped up tendencies to respond to international developments through a cold war and through resorting to force, are very dangerous. These agreements signed by the Demirel government and the arch enemy of our people, the United States, have now been forced upon our people by junta bayonets.

A statement issued by the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee on 1 March 1980 stressed that this agreement, which has been concealed from our people, tramples upon our national sovereignty and reflects the hegemonist interests of U.S. imperialism in our region and in Turkey. With the assumption to power of the Reagan administration, the bilateral slavery agreement poses a great danger for regional peace and security. Based on this agreement, the United States will openly utilize the U.S. bases in our country for intervention in the Middle East. The Pentagon generals have clearly expressed their aims. They view Turkey as the ideal country for their policy aimed at securing the rich oil reserves in the Middle East. Addressing the Senate, Secretary of State Haig said: We will extend aid and the bill will be high. You will have new duties in the Gulf region.

Dear listeners, these slavery agreements enable the U.S. imperialists to speak so clearly. These agreements do not only [words indistinct] the bases of aggression on our soil, but they also give the United States the opportunity to establish new bases on our soil and to engage in armed interference in our domestic affairs. The junta heads say that Turkey will not participate in any operation outside the NATO framework. Thus, they express the view that Turkey will remain outside the adventurist policy the United States is pursuing in the Middle East. However, is there any guarantee for these statements? Based on the bilateral slavery agreement, the United States may force Turkey to become the gendarme of the Middle East. The major military power that heads the NATO pact is again the United States. On the other hand, the clause in the agreement dealing with the modernization of the Turkish armed forces will further drag our country into an arms race, will exacerbate crises, unemployment, high cost of living and shorgages.

By implementing the bilateral slavery agreement, the junta has revealed that it is pursuing a pro-American and pro-NATO foreign policy that will endanger our national security and that is contrary to our national interests. As stressed by TCP Secretary General Bilen in a recent statement on the occasion of the 60th anniversary of the murder of the TCP founding members, putting an end to the current course of events, pursuing an independent nonaligned policy, a transition to democracy, creating a strong people's movement to achieve these ends and uniting in a single front all democratic and anti-imperialist forces are the duties facing all leftist forces.

4 Feb Program

[Station commentary: "The Bilateral Slavery Agreement and Neighborly Relations"]

[Excerpts] Dear listeners: The junta government ratified and put into effect the bilateral slavery agreement between the Demirel government and the United States. As is known, this agreement, which was prepared in line with the U.S. strategy of return to the cold war and confrontation with socialist countries, envisages the modernization of the army, the opening of the bases of aggression on our soil and the building of new ones. Every provision of this agreement, which went into effect at a time when the parliament has been eliminated and our people are silenced through the threat of the bayonet, places our country under very grave responsibilities. It envisages the exploitation of Turkey as a tool for the imperialists' continued adventurist policy in the Middle East.

The agreement stresses that bases such as Incirlik, Pirinclik, Sinop, Karamursel, Kargaburun, Belbasi, Elmadag, Mahmurdag, Kurecik and Yamanlar have been placed totally under U.S. control. Moreover, the section of the agreement on the bases notes that these bases will be further enlarged; new ones equipped with nuclear weapons will be built; and the bases like Sinop, Belbasi and Incirlik, which are included in the U.S. intelligence network, will be fitted with the most modern electronic equipment. There are also nuclear weapons on the U.S. bases on our soil.

In their statements, the junta heads keep on noting that they are following in the footsteps of Ataturk and that they are in favor of having neighborly relations with the Soviet Union. They are taking some steps in this direction. However, they also ratified and put into effect the bilateral slavery agreement. As emphasized in the Turkish Communist Party statement of 31 March 1980, this agreement enables the United States to use our country as a tool for threats and aggression against our neighbors, the Soviet Union and socialist countries. For example, the bases on our soil constitute centers of aggression and spying directed against the Soviet Union. The agreement that went into effect further consolidates and enlarges these bases. Does this not conflict with the junta's words on continuing the good relations with our great neighbor?

On the other hand, on his return from the Islamic summit meeting, Prime Minister Ulusu said that the security of the Persian Gulf concerns the peoples of this region. This CIA agreement, however, envisages dragging our country into the United States' military preparations and intervention attempts in the Middle East and transforming Turkey into a gendarme against peace and security in this region. The agreement could enable the Washington administration to use our soil directly in an attack against the Gulf area, which it considers an area of national interest. As a matter of fact, the U.S. imperialists used the Incirlik base extensively in their military adventure in Iran. On 24 April 1980, C-130 aircraft carrying fully armed troops landed at the Ertac military airport in Malatya, and these participated in the U.S. act of military aggression against Iran on 25 April.

Now, the United States has a much more powerful means, namely the bilateral slavery agreement. Relying on this agreement, Pentagon generals are intensifying their pressures on our country. They do not even feel the need to use the language of diplomacy. They say: The price will be high; you will have new duties in the Gulf area. As noted by Ugur Mumcu in the [date indistinct] April 1980 issue of CUMHURIYET, the defense cooperation agreement transforms our country into a trojan horse against neighboring Arab countries. Does this attitude not contradict the words of friendship with the Arab countries? Does this policy not further exacerbate the tension in our region?

Another motive of the United States is to remove its chesnuts from the fire with the hands of others, thus endangering our country through the bilateral slavery agreement. The fact that the Reagan administration did not withdraw its military forces from the Middle East even after the release of the hostages, that, on the contrary, it reinforced the area and that it attempted to form new military pacts clearly demonstrate these motives.

As stated by 51 former RPP deputies in the previous period [before the coup on 12 September 1980], the U.S. imperialists should not be allowed to exploit the warmth of a fire created in our country as a result of a war in our region, which will erupt in a bid to safeguard the interests of those who are 13,000 kms away from Turkey. This is why our people do not approve the bilateral slavery agreement, which threatens our national security and contradicts our national intersts, and will not do so in the future. Our people will not recognize the signature of the junta government on the slavery agreement. The slavery agreement should be torn up.

VAN DER KLAAUW COMMENTS ON MIDEAST CONSULTATIONS

[Sirr Sayyid Ahmad report: "The European Council of Ministers Chairman Tells ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT: 'The European Initiative Requires Much Preparation; We Will Not Draw Up a Peace Plan but Will Contribute to a Solution; I Will Meet With PLO Leaders Soon'"]

[Excerpt] Riyadh--In an exclusive statement to ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT, Netherlands Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw has stated that he does not expect much to be achieved in the way of a comprehensive settlement to the Middle East crisis during his tenure as EEC Council chairman in view of the fact that a new government will be assuming power in Israel. He said, however, that he, in his capacity as EEC Council chairman, will continue the EEC efforts and hopes to expand the efforts Gaston Thorn made to determine the actual stances of the various parties to the Middle East conflict with regard to security, Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories, the Palestinian right to self-determination, the Jerusalem issue and the relationship among all these issues.

Van der Klaauw summed up his stance by saying: "I will not draw up a plan for the establishment of peace but I will contribute to reaching solutions."

Asked about his future tour of a number of Arab countries in his capacity as EEC Council chairman, Van der Klaauw replied that no date has as yet been fixed for this tour because "it is an enormous task which requires much preparation." He emphasized, however, that the tour will not take place this month. He also asserted that his tour will include Iraq and talks with PLO leaders.

Asked about the possibility of his meeting with Yasir 'Arafat, Van der Klaauw said: "The PLO will decide which of its leaders I shall meet with, not I."

ERNEST GLINNE TO RUN FOR PS CHAIRMANSHIP

LD031049 Brussels LE SOIR in French 29 Jan 81 p 2

[Olivier Callot report: "Ernest Glinne Candidate for Socialist Party [PS] Chairmanship"]

[Excerpt] Ernest Glinne is an official candidate to replace Andre Cools as head of the PS. The former minister and European deputy announced his decision Wednesday morning following a meeting of the regional joint action group. The group embraces representatives of the party, the General Confederation of Labor of Belgium, the socialist insurance associations and the cooperatives. Contrary to the interpretation given by some people when rumors of this candidacy were rife, the fact is that the decision was the responsibility solely of the person concerned. Indeed, according to PS rules, candidacies to the chairmanship are on an individual basis and must not be backed even by regional federations, still less by other branches of the joint action group. Nevertheless, backing from both these sources cannot be disregarded in this case.

VAN DER KLAAUW CONDEMNS PRC EMBASSY STATEMENT

Mr van der Klaauw said the Chinese had "reached the limit of international custom" with the remark yesterday that the move by the Dutch parliament to seek cancellation of the deal reflected Dutch public opinion.

"The Netherlands' Embassy in Beijing could not have distributed such a statement," the Dutch minister said in response to a deputy's question on whether the comment by Chinese Embassy spokesman Shen Zhihuan was proper.

The Dutch parliament, which in December backed the government's decision to allow the $500 million submarine deal with Taipei, yesterday withdrew support and urged the sale be scrapped.

The action came after Beijing began rerouting its ships from Rotterdam port and threatened to scale down diplomatic relations to the charges d'affaires level if the sale went through.

OFFICIALS VIEW NEUTRON BOMB, WEINBERGER REMARKS

[Excerpt] Bonn, 4 Feb (DPA)--SPD Deputy Hermann Scheer, member of the lower house Defense Committee, called in the SPD press service today to urge political leaders in the consultations which have been announced to reject the American proposal to deploy neutron weapons in Europe. Scheer said that the arguments against the neutron bomb remained as valid as ever. "It remains an unbelievable confusion in human thinking to develop and introduce a weapon that destroys human life and preserves material things." He wrote that he believes the neutron bomb fosters the illusion of the possibility of limited nuclear wars. The neutron bomb increases the danger of an America-Soviet nuclear conflict being fought out on German soil.

On the American proposal to deploy the controversial neutron bomb in Europe, the security policy spokesman of the FDP parliamentary group, Juergen Moellemann, merely said that the topic had not yet been introduced into the alliance's consultations and that, therefore, his party sees no occasion to comment.

SPD Deputy Voigt

DW051005 Cologne Deutschlandunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1210 GMT 4 Feb 81

["Excerpts" from correspondent Lenz interview with SPD Bundestag Deputy Carsten Voigt in Bonn--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] Did Weinberger correctly describe the Federal Government's reaction to Carter's rejection of the neutron weapon?

[Answer] What happened was that the manner in which the decision was made in the United States at the time met partially with lack of understanding and partially with concern in the Federal Republic as well. But this does not apply so much to the content of the decision. This is a discussion which we now will have to resume in all earnest.

Defense policy experts have serious reservations as to the necessity or expediency of the neutron weapon.

[Question] Are the same objections being raised in the Federal Republic against the neutron weapon as those raised in the past, namely, Soviet counterarming?

[Answer] It is probably a fact that the balance has shifted. I could not say whether it has shifted dramatically because I am against dramatizing the situation.

[Question] It is now planned to balance the military deficit ascertained by the West, first of all with the help of missiles through the so-called NATO counterarming decision, secondly, with the help of the suggested deployment of the neutron weapon in Europe and thirdly, with new chemical weapons as well. The Americans want to get out of SALT II, and besides, it is not without good reason that the establishment of a new reserve is being contemplated in the Bundeswehr. Is all this so urgently necessary all at once? Can this result in a gain in the balance to the West's advantage?

[Answer] This really is the question that we have to discuss. I anticipated all these demands weeks ago. I think we must seriously debate with the Americans the question as to what is really necessary for establishing the balance and what would be tantamount to an excessive stockpiling. Beyond that, I believe, we must also discuss the question of where we could make a beginning with arms control and whether it is possible to make the priority of arms control prevail in the dialogue with Eastern Europe, specifically with the Soviet Union.

Then there is something which does not wield as much weight in the case of some of our alliance partners but which we must keep in mind in view of growing unemployment figures: What we are facing, after all, are not only problems of external security but also problems of social security and internal security. So if we spend too much on defense, we may well run the risk, of course, of destablizing ourselves socially and in domestic policy. What I mean to say is that you just cannot see what is perhaps necessary in defense policy only from the American point of view; you must also view this problem in a broader concept of security policy which will then include the aspects of social stablity as well. And I think that we, being Social Democrats, have a special reason to draw attention to this state of affairs.

[Question] One notes in Weinberger's formulation that it is not mentioned that this weapon first has to be produced. Is it possibly ready for action in a U.S. depot?

[Answer] I assume that individual components of the neutron weapon certainly have been or are being produced. The delivery systems have been stationed in Europe for some time, so that such a decision could possibly be made rather quickly. But that does not change anything about having a rational discussion on whether such a decision would be right. I say rational discussion because I assume that an outburst of indignation would hardly bring influence to bear on the process of making a decision.

[Question] Those SPD members who were against the neutron weapon in the quarrel about it used primarily moral arguments at the time. Is is possible that the adversaries of the neutron weapon could cite security policy arguments in support of their standpoint?

[Answer] Well, I certainly believe that that there need not necessarily be a discrepancy between reason and morality. At that time I had reservations against the neutron weapon because I believe that the introduction of the neutron weapon could possible lower the nuclear threshold and that a decision on the application of this weapon could actually be made less by the president than by our commanders who would have this delegated to them. Thus the political control over application and planning would be lost to a great extent.

In addition, I believe that in the meantime there are a number of modernized conventinal arms systems which are not less horrible, but which are not nuclear arms, and which still can fulfill the same defense policy tasks to a great extent that the nuclear arms can. I do not want to say that my arguments should not be discussed critically, but I still believe that the advocates of the neutron weapon ought to be a bit more careful with their arguments. It has not been proven at all whether the neutron weapon makes sense with regard to defense policy or whether it is even necessary.

[Question] Can it be predicted, if this discussion does take place, that there will be considerable resistance in the SPD and your Bundestag faction against this move by the Americans?

[Answer] First of all, the U.S. secretary of defense said himself that he wants to discuss it with the West European allies. If it really were such a rational discussion as I have just suggested, it would be surprising it if were limited to the parties only. I hope that my colleagues in the CDU will not be so ignorant as to welcome every new arms system just because it is new and because the Americans have introduced it into the discussion.

CDU/CSU Defense Spokesman

[Text] Bonn, 4 Feb (DPA)--The defense policy spokesman of the CDU/CSU parliamentary group, Peter-Kurt Wuerzbach, has urged that a new discussion be started from scratch about the neutron bomb and conducted with businesslike arguments free from emotion.

He said in Bonn today that there was no dispute between the government and the opposition about the fact that peace at the present time could only be maintained through adequate deterrent and calculated risk for the Soviet Union, whose superiority is growing.

He said that this strategy must be understood more clearly and put over in a more comprehensive manner by the members of the governing parties. This time the chancellor must not leave the discussion "to people like Hansen, Bahr and others."

Wuerzbach said that the fact the Americans are reconsidering the neutron bomb is not surprising. Carter merely postponed preparations for deployment of the bomb because of emotional resistance in Europe; the decision regarding its introduction at a later date has not been rescinded.

Government Spokesman Becker

[Excerpts] Bonn, 4 Feb (DPA)--During their trip to the United States in March, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel want to get a reliable picture of the aims of the American administration's foreign and security policy. According to Government Spokesman Kurt Becker, this also includes the question of whether the new U.S. administration intends to rescind the decision by former President Jimmy Carter to halt production and deployment of the neutron bomb. Becker said that there has been no recent direct exchange of views between Bonn and Washington about the deployment of this weapon in Europe.

Becker said that Weinberger's statement obviously was an impromptu response to a question at a press conference. It was not an announcement and merely expressed a consideration. Before the Federal Government adopts a stance on this matter, it wants to brief itself on the background to the statement. Furthermore, the deployment of the neutron bomb is not a German-American question but a problem that has to be discussed in the alliance.

SPD Disarmament Expert Bahr

[Excerpts] Bonn, 4 Feb (DPA)--The statements on the neutron bomb by U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger have met with differing opinions in the Federal Republic. The former general inspector of the Bundeswehr, Harald Wust, stated in Thursday's edition of the BILD newspaper that, especially in view of the growing military supremacy of the Eastern bloc, the neutron bomb is a more necessary step than ever. It helps to make NATO strategy of deterrence credible again and thus make wars more improbable. "The introduction of the neutron bomb is an important step for reestablishing the balance of forces between East and West," Wust said. "To dispense with it involves the danger of being increasingly susceptible to political blackmail by the East."

SPD disarmament expert in the lower house, Egon Bahr, described the "consistency" promised by U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger as a good thing if it exists on both sides of the Atlantic. It seems natural that consultations will be held on this issue since, in any case, there must be discussion about an overall concept. In this respect, the previous different views will certainly crop up again, Bahr said, since as far as he knows there are no new arguments. Bahr once described the neutron weapon as a "perversion of thinking" but did not repeat this view following criticism from, among others, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

CDU's Woerner

DW051151 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2000 GMT 4 Feb 81

[Text] [Question] How do you assess the statement by new U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger?

[Answer] I can only say that no decision has been made by the U.S. Government. It has only been announced that production and stationing of the neutron weapon are being considered. These considerations certainly have not yet come to an end. I was told that the European allies will naturally be consulted, that means asked, particularly the Federal Republic of Germany. We will have an opportunity to state our opinion in Germany and in Europe, thus bringing influence to bear on this American decision.

One thing is certainly correct, namely, that the timing of this statement was not very fortunate, particularly with regard to the effect it will have in Europe. The implementation of the so-called decision to close the arms gap must have priority for us, that is, the modernization of medium-range arms. Other things must be subordinated to that at the moment. This announcement certainly has a negative effect in this respect.

[Answer] I do not believe so. The Americans mean what they say. They are determined to intensify defense efforts. In other words, they want to do more to make it clear to the Soviet Union that they will not accept a further change in the balance of strength to the disadvantage of the West and to the advantage of the Soviets. It does not mean, however, that they want to enter an arms race. It only means that they are indicating that defense is being taken seriously and that they want to have a balance in this world.

CDU DEPUTY ADDRESSES BUNDESTAG BUDGET DEBATE

DW031434 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1500 GMT 28 Jan 81

[Speech by CDU Bundestag Deputy Peter Kurt Wuerzbach during the Bundestag budget debate--in Bonn--live]

[Excerpts] Madam President, ladies and gentlemen, the turbulences in connection with the Tornado aircraft do not apply solely to this plane but also characterize and determine at the moment the entire sphere of responsibility of the federal defense minister and his budget which is up for discussion here today.

They also increasingly extend to certain sectors of the field of alliance policy. As far as we are concerned it is important, highly important--and at this point I proceed from repeated utterances of the federal foreign minister--that we get away from these turbulences to a stable basis, this stable basis in our view is inevitably described in the following points: This means a Bundeswehr which can live up to the mission assigned it. And this includes the presence of the Americans in Germany, in Europe, and this includes the readiness of the people to understand and support this concern. And this requires our common work in that direction. [applause]

We regard these preconditions as the basis for peace in freedom in our country, and all of us want this peace in freedom. And the fact that 128 warlike conflicts occurred in the world since World War II while we here remained unaffected by them is connected with the circumstance that we in the West founded NATO in good time and we became a member of this alliance in the form of our Bundeswehr, a contribution which indeed is expensive--no question about it--but nevertheless necessary owing to the situation. [applause]

Nobody likes to spend these many billions for defense. Only peace in freedom is such a dear treasure to us that we must do that, unfortunately, commensurate with the treaty existing here--and examples of that have been cited indeed. [applause] The history of wars, including the 128 of the more recent past, teaches us that peace can be preserved only where balance exists, where stability prevails, and only where transgressions can be fended off by not only keeping the risk high but even making it incalculable to any potential aggressor. And anyone calling these preconditions in question makes it easier for the other side to create tensions, to jeopardize peace, and to cause trouble. [applause]

Let me, to begin with, cite several striking points from the conventional threat which we are facing, namely, in the case of the tanks: About 10,000 on our side; 40,000 on the other side; in the case of the artillery guns, conventional type: 6,000 on our side, 20,000 on the other side; armored personnel carriers: 2,000 on our side, 12,000 on the other side; put in brackets as a reminder: There are people who said that all this is solely for defensive purposes and based on defensive considerations.

It is for specific reasons that I desist here from discussing the ammunition situation. I am doing so out of common interest. I shall desist from going into detail, and you in particular ought to understand this. I mention the enormous military progress in the development of militarily usable satellites on the part of the Soviet Union, the world-wide operating navy--global world power was what a competent speaker called it just ahead of me. And for the benefit of those who keep saying that they have more, to be sure, but what we have is better, I must say that according to what is said, reported, and written at Hardthoehe, East and West meanwhile have caught up with each other in quality as well. And in the meantime it is no longer contested that all this is of an offensive character.

What needs to be added is the gigantic dynamics with which this armament has been constantly continued by the Soviet Union. And these dynamics did not show any sharp downward bend in the curve when the political department was specially formulated under the heading of detente. There is no sharp bend whatsoever.

Following the conventional examples I may be allowed to add some from the nuclear field. Unlike us, the Soviet Union did not talk about the conventional modernization, as we have been doing, but simply acted. During the past 5 or 6 years alone it introduced more than five new nuclear systems. What I will do here is just talk about the ground-based medium-range missiles in Europe. NATO does not have any in this field; none, zero. France has 18 while the Soviet Union, and I shall round off the figure, has 1,360. I meant to mention the 5 systems of the past few years: Well known to all of us is the SS-20, and often the subject of discussion, the Backfire bomber. And now, three systems which often go unmentioned: The SS-21, the SS-22, and the SS-23 likewise have been set up in the recent past.

At this point I mean to ask the SPD faction: Considering these weapons, what about your pleading appeals made clear across the federal republic with a great deal of resonance, using phrases such as perversion of human thinking and acting; what about these things in view of these Soviet systems that are threatening us? [applause] Why is it that no citizens' initiatives are invoked in that respect, against these weapons or for the information about these weapons? This is what you have to tolerate being asked by us, and I hope you will ask yourselves as well.

Believing that I should do so, I would like to describe one of these weapons--take any of them--not only by its designation but by its effect. And I am taking the SS-20 for that purpose, stating just a few facts which characterize this system. Each week, by the way, another one is being set up, not just designed on the drawing board.

This weapon is mobile, it moves back and forth and is hard to reconnoiter. It has a range of 4,500 kilometers. During its flight it divides itself up into three warheads independently continuing their flight. Each of these warheads is so accurate that, transposed to a soccerfield, you can pick the target as being either the one corner flag or the other diagonally opposite. And each of these warheads has the destructive force of the Hiroshima bomb 15 times over and more.

I am taking this example, calling on all of you and all of us to disseminate information not only nicely with respect to its designation but also with regard to its effect, so as to elicit understanding for what is necessary. I am also saying this because obviously there are some colleagues in your Bundestag faction who evidently are unaware of these interconnections and the ensuant political consequences for which we are answerable in public.

We support what the chancellor said to your faction in February 1979, pointing out that if things go on as they do on the Eastern side, the Soviet leaders would have the political instrument at their disposal to determine politically what is to happen here, without using the military instrument. This means in the vernacular: that they could blackmail the West. Viewed against this background it is necessary to support the decision of the foreign and defense ministers of 12 December last year in Brussels involving the modernization and arms-control offer that was adopted, that is, it needs to be supported not just academically, we must always advocate it and seek support for it.

And once again, Minister Dr Apel, I may take you to my side: On 8 December 1980, not so long ago, you chaired the meeting of all 11 defense ministers of the Eurogroup at which they reaffirmed that this dual decision on modernization and disarmament not only forms the basis for our deterrence under NATO strategy but also--and I may quote you--forms the basis for the pursuit of serious arms-control negotiations. And therefore we ask you and all your colleagues of your faction and all in the government to emphasize and advocate this wherever possible and beyond, and to make the interconnections quite evident.

At this point I must say that so far there has been a consensus of opinion in this question of the modernization and the basis to be created for real disarmament agreements clear across the factions in this parliament and in NATO. But now we cannot but find, not only on the basis of singular signals but through small but growing groups, that a question mark, not a small one but one that constantly grows, must be put behind this consensus.

Against this background and on this basis I may now proceed to our contribution, to the Bundeswehr, and in so doing I may be allowed to address myself first, to you, Mr Minister. The developments connected with the Tornado aircraft show--other topics, important topics, unfortunately have been pushed aside by this issue--that you are no longer running the Defense Ministry, that you do not even administer it anymore and that you just do not have it in your grip, to use your way of putting it. How else could the biggest arms project of the Bundeswehr--the chancellor said the greatest arms project since Jesus Christ--have slipped from your hands in the manner that it did? And for the benefit of those who cannot very well imagine such a great deal about this plane as regards dimensions, financial strength, significance, I may be allowed to transpose this into another picture: This aircraft procurement is 50 percent more expensive than all tanks and armored personnel carriers now in operation in the Bundeswehr and supplied to the Bundeswehr. And this escapes the minister in its development, as we have seen.

Important issues have been relegated to the end of the line, Mr Minister, and your utterances during the past few days and weeks, your statements, your reactions increasingly convey the impression of insecurity, incredibility--to use polite terminology--and both add up to unpredictability for a man in such an office. It is necessary for me to cite examples in substantiation of these declarations, and I shall do so.

Let us take, to begin with, your contention that you had not known anything about this gigantic finance gap in 1980 up to November. You claimed this even though your State Secretary Dr Schnell--and he is not just anybody--put a file on your desk which clearly revealed the deficit of DM650 million, I repeat, DM650 million for the years 1980 and 1981. I must admit that this was a written document, and I have to admit that this file is 48 pages thick. Admittedly, a voluminous file of which only 17 or 18 pages were written text while the rest was appendices in support of the text, including tables and tabulations into which a thorough reader intending to check up on things could have become engrossed.

We shall deal with this matter in the [Bundestag defense] committee and dig out further details. All I want to say is, irrespective of any further investigations and clear and clearer answers on your part, that as far as we are concerned, it is a fact that such a way of managing your office must be called careless if not, I wonder, even sloppy. [applause]

Mr Minister, the whole situation is being aggravated considerably by the fact that you only told us the whole truth after having been confronted with facts. The situation is also being aggravated by something else. Because of the financial bind your way of handling this office has gotten you into, it can no longer be ruled out that important systems contained in this plane will have to be cut out. These are systems which were a prerequisite for purchasing such an expensive plane for the Bundeswehr and NATO, a plane which in the meantime has come to cost about DM 70 million.

Mr Minister, I want to ask you the following: Did you ask yourself what impression the people, not only we here but the people outside, would have of such a way of dealing with the taxpayer's money? What would have happened if the chairman of some sports association, the cashier or some subordinate of yours had handled public means in a similarly careless way?

I must tell you that this way of running your office is not just limited to this plane. I just want to cite a few more examples illustrating that almost the same thing is happening in other fields as well. I will take budget examples because we are in a budget debate. As far as we know, bills from 1980 for repairs and spare parts, called maintenance in the language of experts, amounted to DM 160 million in the field of ships, 200 million with regard to vehicles, 110 million when it comes to aircraft. If one adds this up, it is a few millions less than half a billion--bills from 1980 which have to be taken care of in 1981. The legally correct but unusual attempts--with regard to public funds--to defer paying bills until the following year, to defer acting on dunning notices which then eventually involve larger value added tax sums will cause the amount that has been mentioned to increase even more.

This list would have been much, much longer, but I do not want to quote any more details. Mr Minister, in addition to these individual examples, it is characteristic of your way of running your office that explanations of the budget, the disclosing of individual facts, have not been made to the appropriate committees such as ours on the days when the budget is discussed. I am certain that again this year these explanations are available in your ministry. They are the basis, as it should be, for the 1982 budget discussions. I consider this as contempt, and I view it as I have said before.

The second point now. Mr Minister, in early March you will have a closed session on armament. You said that we shall see what will still be possible. Strange that you say: We shall see what we can pay for as regards the Bundeswehr. The reasonable approach ought to be the other way around. Why will the closed session take place in March? Why did it not take place before so that you could tell us what will be possible and what will not. You are playing for time.

I will tell you that on the basis of the existing facts it is quite clear that with this way of running your ministry, you will find in March that you are financially bankrupt. I just want to name you one witness for the prosecution--there would be more though. The deputy inspector general wrote to the minister early this year that in view of the funds that can be expected, sensible planning is no longer possible, as he put it.

It would be interesting to hear from our federal chancellor, who was once responsible for this ministry, how he assesses these developments and the resulting dangers.

Another topic now. The defense minister started his service on Hardthoehe under the slogan: Man is the main thing. We must say, Mr Minister, that there is a wide gap between that statement and the facts. We must complain about a dangerous lack of instructors; they have too much to do. The consequence is that the conscripts they have to train no longer feel challenged. More conscripts leave the Bundeswehr dissatisfied, with less understanding for the service than they had when they entered the Bundeswehr. A bad situation. [applause]

A short remark about the public taking of the oath in Bremen and in Bonn. Mr Minister, and I should ask not merely you. How devastating do you think the effect on the soldiers and the young people as well as the entire public was when the people saw that the federal chancellor and his defense minister stood here in Bonn on the market square with the soldiers, protected by thousands of policemen, while a not unimportant man here in the faction staged a counterdemonstration at the same place? A counterdemonstration against the meeting attended by the federal chancellor and the defense minister. This had a devastating effect not only on us in Germany, but also on foreigners, not just on our friends but also on our adversaries. [applause]

I want to thank the soldiers of our allies on duty here in Europe and in Germany, particularly the Americans, soldiers who are NATO guarantors of our freedom. As regards the Americans, we ask you to take more seriously what is being reported to you by several departments--the most recent thing was the Stoessel visit with his document. I just want to mention one point. If the Americans offer to be moved to garrisons closer to the border, I think we ought to support that gratefully.

SCHMIDT LEAVES FOR PARIS TALKS WITH GISCARD

[Text] Bonn, 5 Feb (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and several members of the Federal Government left for Paris this morning for 2 days of talks with President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and the French Government. The main topics of the talks will be the new U.S. foreign policy, East-West relations, developments in the Middle and Near East, Africa, and world economic problems.

Schmidt also will receive an honorary doctorate from the Sorbonne.

GENSCHER FAVORS EC INITIATIVES WITH AFRICA, GULF

[Text] Bonn, 4 Feb (DPA)--In addition to the European Community [EC] Middle East initiative, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher is also in favor of similar EC steps with regard to Africa and the Gulf region. In an interview in Thursday's LE FIGARO, Genscher said that the Middle East initiative was credible and effective because it was based on constant consultations between the Western states and rested on common interests of Europe and the Middle East region.

Moreover, the Europeans ought also to support joint initiatives with regard to Africa. "I am sure that the Africans want and welcome such European support," Genscher said, "because they know from their cooperation with us within the framework of the Lome agreements that we want to work in partnership with truly independent African states."

With regard to EC relations with the Gulf, Genscher recalled that last year the European Community had suggested the signing of cooperation agreements with individual states in this region. "With this initiative the Community wants to express its political interest in the development of relations with this region and make a contribution to stability and to the development of a partnership relationship with us."

LE MONDE CONTRASTS FRENCH, U.S. REMARKS TO MOSCOW

LD031715 Paris LE MONDE in French 31 Jan 81 p 1

[Editorial: "End of Restraint"]

[Text] The appeals for "restraint" recently issued so often to the major powers by Mr Giscard d'Estaing definitely have not been much heeded. Mr Reagan inaugurated his brandnew Presidency in Washington by issuing remarks on Soviet foreign policy of a virulence to which we have been unaccustomed for at least 25 years. Unless we are mistaken, no U.S. leader since John Foster Dulles, secretary of state during the cold war, has accused the Kremlin leaders, when speaking in an official capacity, "of committing any crime, of lying and cheating" for the sake of the only morality which they recognize, namely, the advancement of the communist cause. Earlier, when the State Department condemned Moscow's support for terrorism, Mr Ilichev, the Soviet representative to the Madrid conference, accused his Western partners of making "provocative" statements.

For all that, it should not be concluded that the same powers are going to radically alter their behavior and head for a confrontation. Mr Reagan announced in the same breath that he was not seeking "revenge" on Iran.

With regard to the USSR, the explicit desire to reestablish a position of strength does not rule out dialogue. It simply means that no more gifts will be granted. By depriving Soviet Ambassador to Washington Dobrynin of private access to the State Department, Mr Haig plans to put an end to the kind of collusive intimacy introduced into relations between the two major powers' representatives over 10 years ago by Mr Kissinger. This "signal" will not fail to be received in Moscow, though one cannot rule out in the longer term a return to relations of this kind, within a better guaranteed mutual respect.

This brusqueness has at least the advantage of rendering less likely miscalculations and compromises based on ambiguity. Unlike teachers and journalists, statesmen are under no obligation to even partially defend the interests of their adversaries and partners in their public statement . On the contrary, by forcefully asserting their own interests and concerns, they will improve their positions in the trial of strength which international relations often still constitute. Thus, to urge "restraint" from the Poles, Mr Giscard d'Estaing decided it would be useful in his televised interview Tuesday to heavily emphasize the USSR's political and strategic interests in Poland. But he failed to see that by so doing, he was providing Moscow with an argument directly applicable to the support of its own theses ("even France understands our position") and which could justify intensified Soviet pressure on Warsaw.

Doubtless, it would be impossible to extend the rapprochement between these different stances, but this hardening is now a fact, with the very harsh attack on the Solidarity trade union delivered by TASS, followed by PRAVDA. The bridges have now been burned between the Soviet "orthodoxy" and an organization with which the Warsaw leaders for the time being still want to negotiate. There could be very rapid developments if the Polish Governent, yielding to these pressures, takes strong-arm measures to end the strikes, as it indicated Thursday evening. International stability now depends much more on the specific situation in Poland than on Mr Reagan's tirades.

MARCHAIS DISCUSSES SOCIALISM, POLAND, ELECTIONS

LD051001 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 2 Feb 81 pp 4-5

[Speech delivered by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais at PCF "intellectuals' rally" in Paris on 30 January: "Toward a New Renaissance for France and Its Culture"]

[Excerpts] Ladies and gentlemen, dear friends and comrades, "I am confident." It was with that sentence that I concluded "L'Espoir Au Present" last summer.

In writing those words and choosing that title, I was conscious of contradicting fashionable talk. Every day the main sections of the media try to make people accept that the world's evolution is threatening and that, amid this anguish and misfortune, the only realism is despair or doubt and the only right choice is resignation.

As you will realize, those who advocate the system of exploitation and oppression have everything to fear from this changing world. You will understand that they are making every effort to maintain their positions and to curb the emancipation movement.

Just look, for example, at how their propaganda means, wrongly christened news media, are tirading against socialism. Mere common sense is enough to expose their maneuver. Indeed, we see these people, who exploit billions [as published] of people throughout the world, weeping over the fate of workers in other countries. We see the persecutors of Vietnam and Algeria, the colonialists who, for decades, enslaved and plundered whole continents, claiming to advocate national independence. Look at the El Salvador murderers, Pinochet's protectors and Bokassa's dear relations daring to talk about human rights. For them, the end justifies the means. They stop at no slander, caricature or misrepresentation at all costs, relentlessly to inculcate this idea: "Socialism is hell."

On this crucial question of our times, let us look reality in the eye without trying to defend, without any spirit of denigration, without fear or hatred.

At our 23d congress, we expressed the view that socialism's record in the world after 60 years is generally positive. This assessment was disputed. It still is disputed. We stand by it.

It goes without saying that this assessment is not some calculation of accounts. It is an overall historical assessment. We took account of the socialist countries as they are today and as they are evolving. In doing this, we took account of all aspects: the economy, social progress, culture, democracy and international action. For instance, according to an "Interfuturs" Institute study, the existing socialist countries will supply one-third of world production in the year 2,000, while the capitalist countries will only supply one-half. We consider that that is an important factor in making an assessment. According to the information we have, we even think that that forecast is lower than the real outlook. However, this revealing economic fact is, in our view, only one factor among many others in the whole complexity of social life.

Assessing a record also means taking the past into consideration. We took the socialist countries' past into consideration. We condemned Stalinism without leave to appeal. We did so irrevocably. In addition, we started a detailed study of its causes and consequences. That study led us to draw conclusions for ourselves, particularly regarding the universal requirement for democracy which is inherent in socialism.

Assessing a record also means taking present faults and mistakes into consideration. We take the socialist countries' present faults and errors into account.

Poland

The same applies to Poland. Allow me to dwell for a while on this serious problem which presently is being widely discussed. Of course, I do so with a sense of responsibility and refraining from any interference.

Back at the beginning of September, I indicated, on our party's behalf, that, owing to their very progress, the socialist countries are facing a series of new problems, some of which are acute and could become critical. The socialist countries can only tackle these problems by taking account of the new conditions and requirements created by their own development. That is what most of them are now doing and in several cases with obvious skill and promising initial successes.

Like any socialist country, Poland undoubtedly needs trade unions which effectively defend workers' demands and are not mere tools. This is not a new idea for the French Communists. We published a document on trade unionism 2 years ago which applies this idea to France's circumstances. For its part, and this is common knowledge, the CGT has for a long time rightly been fighting with determination in international bodies and meetings for trade unions everywhere to play their irreplaceable role fully and freely.

However, is the need for such trade unions present-day Poland's only need? We do not think so. The problems of socialism's development in Poland are at the same time those of economic efficiency, social progress and the exercise of democracy. It is only by solving these three categories of closely-linked problems together that socialist Poland will, in our view, overcome the present crisis and experience a new usurge.

Of course, it is up to the Polish people and them alone to raise and solve these problems. It is up to the Polish people, the Polish United Workers' Party and all the Polish social forces involved to show the wisdom, reason and imagination needed to give these problems the innovating solutions for which they call and which socialism is capable of giving.

Socialism's Growing Diversity

In considering socialism's record, we pay the greatest attention to the growing diversity socialism is demonstrating according to the different countries. This is not a handicap but a considerable source of enrichment. This diversity does not rule out but rather implies a number of common basic principles and fundamental traits. These principles include social ownership of the major means of production and trade and placing political power in the hands of the working people among whom the working class must exercise a leadership role. In our view, there is also socialism's universal democratic component, which I have just discussed.

In this respect, we noted as a great progress the fact that the joint communique signed by the CPSU and our party in January 1980 admitted, for the first time, the existence of differences of opinion between us. It is no secret to anybody that one of those differences of opinion relates precisely to socialist democracy. At the same time, that communique stressed that the existence of such differences of opinion should neither prevent nor weaken the deep solidarity and vital cooperation between our parties. In fact, it is deplorable that the major sections of the media in France passed over this very important aspect of the Moscow meeting in silence.

In the context of the present-day world and on the basis of the thoughts it inspires in us, we have once and for all rejected any idea of a model for socialist society, a kind of "all purpose" model valid in all places and at all times. We do not aspire to copy others any more than to impose on them our view of socialism for France.

We are well aware that nothing is easy. Nothing comes about automatically. Nothing is assured in advance and nothing will be won without effort and struggle. However, in our view, one thing is certain: in the world today, it is the social, national and human liberation forces which are progressing. It is the forces of imperialism, war and reaction which are retreating. That is a great encouragement for our struggle.

How could the existing policy be stepped up still further after the presidential election unless the balance of forces were modified in our country? That is the main political problem now facing the French bourgeoisie. As I have just shown, it is devoid of reserves on the right and is absolutely forced to expand its government's political base. There is only one way it can do that: achieve cooperation between the PS and the right in one form or another; somehow RPR and Francois Mitterrand's party in one coalition.

Giscard d'Estaing has made this collaboration between the right and the PS the central objective of his political action since 1974. Today he is forced to go full steam ahead to finish achieving this.

I do not need to go back over the events of recent years for you. We used you as witnesses. We submitted the truth for your judgment. It has to be admitted that the things which have happened in the PS over the past week enable everybody to see its hand even more clearly.

Francois Mitterrand's Real Objective

Indeed, the PS has just held a congress to make Francois Mitterrand's candidacy official. On that occasion, Francois Mitterrand revealed the main slogan of his campaign. It boils down to three words: "A different policy." But what policy? The candidate does have a "socialist plan," but he says that it is not his point of reference. He puts forward a number of rather vague proposals but asserts that he is not bound by them. He wants, he says, to retain full "freedom" and in a word, explicitly rejects any program or any pledges on objectives. He even has people say that any program would be a trap. In that case, what is this "different policy" which he mentions? No answer.

Who will implement this "different policy?" We Communists are also being asked that question. It is a legitimate one. No party in France can claim that it will govern outside a coalition. Our answer is quite clear: We are prepared to assume all our responsibilities, with Communist ministers, in a government formed to implement a really new policy on which we are making--I will come back to this--specific proposals. Francois Mitterrand and his friends, on the other hand, categorically refuse to answer the government question. Instead, they rule out any hypothesis a priori and, in interviews, even indulge in calculations on the conditions in which a Socialist president of the Republic could govern with the right. In fact, that is not new, since it went on for years under the Fourth Republic, the results of which everybody knows.

In any event, pledges and alliances will not be enough. It must be absolutely clear to everybody that the French bourgeoisie will not willingly give up its positions and privileges. Whatever parties and men are in government, it will be necessary to fight to impose every measure, every inch of progress and every change on it. You observe this in your daily battles, like all workers. However, on this crucial issue, Francois Mitterrand replies with an appeal for "calm."

Those are the facts which have emerged in the past few days. I am asking you all to carefully consider the consequences of Francois Mitterrand's stances. Is it not obvious that they are intended to leave him free to achieve what I have called the "tripartite consensus"? This "tripartite consensus" would lead the workers up a blind alley and would prevent change.

Change can be brought about through a great battle--which already has started and which must be given full scope--to create the right conditions for it.

What Is At Stake on 26 April

The first of these conditions is a policy including the major democratic and anticapitalist reforms which are vital to change. Second, this policy must be backed by a major people's movement which will be the foundation of a new leftwing union. This union will be expressed in the country and in the government responsible for directing the necessary transformation, and that implies that the Communists would have their place in it.

However, experience has shown that this cannot be achieved by giving priority to headquarters' negotiations, written agreements or even unprincipled election alliances.

That is why the prime condition for change is the struggle waged by the working men and women themselves.

It now is the struggle everywhere to uphold demands, rights, aspirations, and potential. It is the struggle today, tomorrow and the next day, because change cannot simply be granted. It can only be won. It is in all these struggles, in a combative union for objectives which will bring change, that the people's movement capable of imposing change can be built.

The election on 26 April is a great moment in the struggle. It is a means for the workers, for all those who want change to rally and say emphatically: This is what we want. For them, it is a means of throwing all their weight in the right direction. This is vital to combat maneuvers and to remove the obstacles to change.

The workers have only one way of achieving this movement for struggle: to support the PCF candidacy. In saying this, I am not asking you to rally round me. I believe deeply in this line of the Internationale: "There is no supreme savior!" The Communists have paid dearly enough to be protected forever against personality cults.

Our Party Is Not an End in Itself

I would like to add that the PCF is not an end in itself. It is not partisan in the sense of only aiming to serve its members' interests. No, our party only has meaning as a tool of the workers' struggle to achieve their highest aspirations, of the French people's struggle to change society. Moreover, that is why, although it is the workers' party, it is and must also be the party of all intellectual workers who intend to play an effective part in this battle for a new society.

MITTERRAND: SOCIALISTS OFFER 'ONLY SOLUTION'

[Unattributed report on speech delivered by PS presidential candidate Francois Mitterrand at PS meeting in Macon on 1 February: "I Am Waiting for the People to Rouse Themselves!"]

[Text] Francois Mitterrand denounced the "heavy fire" being directed at him "from all sides." Mentioning the question of Communist ministers, he criticized those who, "far from launching a great and fine debate, are trying to obscure the real problems by such a question." He spoke sarcastically about the statements made by several ministers at republican party "provincial meetings." "All these servants have one obsession: Communist ministers."

After restating his position (the government will be the reflection of the majority which emerges from parliamentary elections after the dissolution of the National Assembly) and citing "republican law" to those who "claim that the president of the Republic can replace the people," Mitterrand said: "Nothing will make me deviate from my line: defending employment, equality, liberty, justice, the Republic." He added: "Inflation and unemployment are the two means which big capital has to tackle the crisis. They are only opposed by the Socialists' policy."

Commenting on Giscard d'Estaing's recent television speech, Mitterrand said: "I think that a return to the Munich mentality can be detected in the head of state's remarks."

Proposing "decentralization, planning and economic revival" as the remedy for the economic and social problems, the PS candidate exhorted members to "convince the French people that the only solution is the Socialists' solution." He called for "political revolt by the oppressed French masses." He concluded: "Only the Socialists are in a position to protect (the country) against the accumulated anger and bitterness.... Seven years of Giscard is enough. Fourteen years would be even worse. I am waiting for the people to rouse themselves while keeping the law and respecting other people."

PS OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON REQUEST FOR PCF MINISTERS

[Text] Questioned on Sunday, 1 February, by Europe 1 Press Club journalists about the possible participation of Communist ministers in a leftwing government, [PS First Secretary] Lionel Jospin said that "There is no reason for this question to be asked at this stage" and spoke of a "political campaign which looks like manipulation." The PS first secretary explained the reasons for such a campaign as a desire to "frighten the French people" and to "lay a crude trap" for the Socialists. He also pointed out that this question has an advantage for the PS: "This question is being put to the Socialists and the Socialist candidate. Nobody has thought of putting it to Georges Marchais and asking him if he would take Socialist ministers into his government because nobody in France seriously thinks that Georges Marchais has a chance of taking part in the second round of the presidential election. Despite the obvious difficulties which people are trying to cause for us with this question, I am pleased that I can score this political point."

Mr Jospin then explained: "The composition of the government will depend on the result of the parliamentary election and not on the president's wishes, even if he may possibly express his view at some time.... Francois Mitterrand will govern with the majority which emerges from the parliamentary election once he has dissolved the National Assembly and those elections have been held."

Mr Jospin added that Giscard d'Estaing's defeat "will mean a far-reaching change" and said that he is convinced that after such a defeat "a rightwing majority will not be returned" to the National Assembly.

After reaffirming the principle of dissolving the National Assembly in the event of a victory by the Socialist candidate, and recalling that the latter "will respect the French people's will when expressed in the parliamentary election," the PS first secretary stressed that the Socialists' strategy is still the leftwing union and the "people's movement." He added: "I want the leftwing movement, but I cannot forget the recent past or ignore the present.... This request for Communist ministers as formulated by the Communists at present is, in my view--the French people must realize this--incompatible with the very policy now being pursued by the PCF leadership. This policy is one of rejecting union at the top, rejecting agreements between the apparatuses and rejecting the joint government program, which is denounced as an attempt to delude the masses and as a past mistake in PCF policy.... In place of this, they talk about 'leftwing union at grassroots level.' But when you look at things in practical terms--the people and the PS members know this--as soon as a meeting is suggested, not at national level of course, the idea is rejected at federation or department level. It is rejected at section level and at cell level. In other words, union at grassroots level does not exist. There is no union at the top or at grassroots level....

"Thus at the present time there is nothing in the PCF leadership's policy which justifies asking this question. Let's consider the matter. What do Communist ministers in the government mean if not an agreement between apparatuses [apparent line drop] The government is the highest level you can reach. Therefore, I think this is the height of illogicality... the PS is swinging to the right. It will be worse than with Barre. But they are asking for Communist ministers in this government to follow people who are swinging to the right. I find that too extraordinarily difficult to explain to the French people and even to Communist members who are highly confused. Thus, the attitude adopted by the PCF leadership for the past few years has created a new situation.

"The French people must realize, you must realize, that we will not pass from invective to smiles overnight. We have our own experiences. We are still a unitary party....

"My generation entered the battle for union. At present, as your own policy stands (PCF policy) it would not be responsible to contemplate governing together. There will be no negotiations on this question since the PCF is interested in the answer to it, either before the first round, after the first round or before the end of the second round. It is not a question which should be asked during the presidential election."

Mr Jospin went on to indicate that "what is in doubt" is "the basis" of the PCF leadership's policy on several issues such as Afghanistan, Poland, immigration and the deployment of (Soviet) SS-20 missiles and of (American) Pershing missiles in Europe. He explained that the question of government composition will be raised only after a victory by the Socialist candidate "in accordance with the alliances which are formed during the election." "We will then open discussions with our leftwing partners," he added. "We will put forward our proposals and, if possible, reach an agreement."

After recalling that the Socialists favor the restoration of proportional representation, Mr Jospin described the idea that the OGT and PCF could organize "waves of strikes" following Mr Mitterrand's victory as "fantasies."

Questioned about a remark by Gason Defferre that that eventuality will be no change in society, Mr Jospin replied: "If anybody tries to convince the French people that because they are able to elect a Socialist candidate--Francois Mitterrand--they will find a fundamentally different society, no longer familiar to them, in which they will no longer be comfortable, in which they will be threatened, we say quite clearly: Our type of society will not change. It will indeed be a society which bears no resemblance to any other social or political system. This point is clear and I agree with Gaston Defferre. However, like me, Gaston Defferre thinks that this in no way rules out fundamental changes...."

MARCHAIS ASSAILS GISCARD'S TELEVISION STATEMENT

LD031353 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 29 Jan 81 p 3

[Statement issued by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais following 27 January television interview granted by French President Giscard d'Estaing: "For an Independent and Sovereign France"]

[Text] In his speech Tuesday evening, the president of the republic justified a policy which closely serves capital's interests, sacrifices the French nation's interests and abases its role in the world.

Faced with a changing world, he revealed his nostalgia for the old world in which imperialism imposed its law.

Reagan and Schmidt must be pleased with him. V. Giscard d'Estaing is determined to play his part in the efforts being made by imperialism to oppose the peoples' drive for their liberation, independence and social progress.

Being unable to prevent this forward march by the peoples, and in view of the balance of forces, he advocates, like the good conservative he is, maintaining the status quo in the world.

His plea for a strong America and for a joint European foreign policy, under the FRG's hegemony, clearly illustrates the two constant characteristics of his policy: alignment with H. Schmidt and allegiance to the United States.

His justification of France's interventions in Africa and his encouragement to the most reactionary regimes on that continent to interfere in peoples' affairs, notably in Chad, confirm the adventurist nature of his policy in this part of the world. He aspires to give France the role of imperialism's gendarme in Africa.

Where is France's independence in all this? Openly abandoning any "principle," he is blatantly discarding it by integrating our country further into a West European and Atlantic bloc. France's voice will thus be subdued even more. This is true to such an extent that Giscard d'Estaing's performance confirmed the total absence of an independent initiative by our country to solve the great problems of our day.

Thus, while 800 million men and women are suffering from malnutrition, when 50 million children die of hunger every year, Giscard d'Estaing, the aristocrat, said nothing.

He did not say one word about underdevelopment nor did he make one proposal for establishing a new international order. His "order" means maintaining the vestiges of the old colonial order at any price.

He had a great deal to say when he assessed our people's attachment to peace, disarmament and France's security. However, what he said was aimed at more effectively concealing the fact that he justifies the boosting of the U.S. military potential, including its potential in Europe, and refuses any French contribution to the taking of specific decisions aimed at disarmament at the Madrid meeting.

The PCF resolutely is fighting this policy. In the proposals I am submitting to French men and women, I specify our great ambitions for France. I advocate an independent, sovereign France, guaranteeing its own security and speaking with its own voice. A France which, while respecting its alliances, follows an active nonalignment policy. A France which contributes, by practical initiatives, to disarmament, the simultaneous dissolution of the blocs, the strenghthening of peace, the establishment of a new international order and the defense of human rights and peoples' rights.

PCF'S GREMETZ RECEIVES NICARAGUAN FRONT OFFICIAL

[Text] Tension in Central America is accompanied by provocations and intimidation measures directed against the young Nicaraguan revolution.

Following the American decision to suspend economic aid to Nicaragua, a campaign is developing to make people believe that Managua is responsible for events in El Salvador.

Sandinist National Liberation Front Secretary Carlos Carrion was received by Maxime Gremetz at the PCF Central Committee office in Paris yesterday. During an extremely cordial meeting, the two leaders exchanged views on the situation in Central America. The Sandinist front and the French Communists assess the situation in that part of the world in a similar manner.

EANES ON DOMESTIC ISSUES, TIES WITH SPAIN, U.S.

LD041425 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 1 Feb 81 p 6

[Nicole Guardiola interview in Lisbon with Portuguese President Eanes: "Military Personnel's Only Legitimate Involvement in Political Life Is Exercising Their Right to Vote"--date of interview not specified]

[Excerpt] Question: What will relations between the president of the republic, the government and parliament be in the future following your reelection and Francisco Pinto Balsemao's appointment as prime minister?

Answer: Relations between institutions whose legitimacy emanates directly or indirectly from the people's will are determined by democratic solidarity. They should be based on a democratic state's common aims: to defend political democracy's stability and the continuity of institutions and to respect legality and the established rules. This solidarity is necessary over and above short-term issues.

For my part, I have always rejected all these, all forms of confrontation among state bodies, which I deem irresponsible. I believe that all the conditions exist for this to be the normal conduct of all leaders.

Question: Do you believe that the fact that you are president and Pinto Balsemao is prime minister facilitates the revision of the constitution by consensus?

Answer: Henceforth, the issue of the subordination of the process of revising the constitution to the rule of consensus is superseded. In order to have legitimacy the revision of the constitution must be effected not by consensus but on the basis of the existence of qualified majorities.

I do not believe that anybody can seriously maintain that the revision of the constitution could be effected outside this legal framework without bringing the country into a process of disruption whose consequences are unforeseeable but which would certainly be detrimental to democracy in Portugal.

Question: Do you personally deem a reduction of the present powers of the president of the republic advantageous and opportune?

Answer: It is particularly difficult to answer your question, even though you are seeking a personal opinion. The message which I believe I received on the occasion of the presidential election is a message of caution, balance and consensus, which should be the foundations of our democratic life. I trust in the deputies' maturity and political responsibility. I do not believe that the revision of the constitution can be used to create precarious and short-term arrangements. I am convinced that the members of parliment will base their decisions on a calm and balanced analysis of the political and institutional experience accumulated over the last 4 years.

Question: Widespread agreement about the need for a dialogue between the majority and the Socialist Party [PS] on the revision of the constitution appears to exist on both sides. The need for dialogue and consultation was one of the central themes of your election campaign. To what extent is the president of the republic prepared to become involved in opening this dialogue?

Answer: I will not personally undertake the slightest initiative. In a democratic system like ours, dialogue between the government and the opposition is something which is normal and natural, and this leads me to believe that dialogue between the government and the parties support it and the PS and its allies will present no difficulty. Of course, if my intervention is requested to help surmount some differences I will seek to respond as best I can. But I will not be the one who will take the initiative.

Question: With respect to the revision of the constitution and the definition of the economic model, the present government does not conceal the fact--and this is what Pinto Balsemao told EL PAIS--that it deems the public sector's role excessive. What is your opinion?

Answer: In this field, as in the others, the initiative and the decision rest exclusively with the deputies, with the sole proviso that the amendments which they seek to introduce should be approved by qualified majorities. My personal observation is that I deem it necessary to take into account the country's realities and the aims which we set ourselves, including Portugal's entry into the EEC.

Question: A highly topical issue is the military's role in Portuguese politics. You asserted during your election campaign that the military personnel's leading role in Portuguese politics does not constitute a factor of internal instability for the armed forces.

Answer: I believe that the words which you attribute to me concerned exclusively the role of the Council of the Revolution. In my opinion--and I have said this repeatedly--the military personnel's only legitimate involvement in political life is exercising their right to vote, like any citizen.

This concept has guided my activity as president of the republic and in performing my military duties. All the conditions have now been assembled at last for the rule of armed forces subordination to the democratic civil power to be established.

Question: You use the expression "subordination to the democratic civil power." In a recent interview with EL PAIS, the prime minister said that one of his priority aims would be "the armed forces' reintegration into the government sphere." Is there a difference of concept behind this language?

Answer: I cannot say whether these assertions correspond in fact to different concept, but I can spell out what I mean by the armed forces' subordination to the democratic civil power. On the one hand, the power to amend the constitution rests with parliament. The deputies, who possess constitutional powers, will amend the text of the constitution with respect to the armed forces on their own initiative and in the manner which they deem opportune. I believe that, whatever amendment is introduced, the armed forces will have to be rendered subordinate to the government, to parliament--which will have to approve a series of laws concerning the organization of national defense--and also to the president of the republic, since it would not be normal for the armed forces not to be linked in some way with the head of state, who is the nation's supreme representative. In my opinion, the three forms of subordination define the military power's subordination to the democratic civil power. In turn, this multiple subordination will have to be organized bearing in mind our own historical experience and the models existing in the other democratic European countries, and, more particularly, in the NATO countries.

Question: Spain and Portugal are two European countries which consider themselves to be linked by specific historical ties with other continents--Africa, Latin America and the Arab world. Do you have any plan in this field of foreign relations?

Answer: I believe that there are now better conditions for galvanizing Portugal's relations with the African, Latin American and Arab countries, in the first place, because we have emerged from the electoral period which, in the broadest sense, dominated the actions of some politicians in the recent past.

The second reason, and the most important, is that it has become clear to all leaders that Portugal does not have many alternatives for building a coherent and stable foreign policy which will serve the country's real political and economic interests.

This policy should enable the country to develop its role as a bridge between the democratic European countries to which it belongs and the developing countries which accept an extensive relationship of cooperation, based on mutual respect and interest. All the institutions should be involved in foreign policy. All that is necessary is an organization which will make it possible to formulate a concerted, convergent and effective action plan. I am going to make a series of visits, some of which are already planned but with no date set. The priorities will be discussed with the government in accordance with national interests, as will the actual organization of the visits.

Question: Do you believe that the new political circumstances in Portugal could be a positive factor for the development of Portuguese-Spanish relations?

Answer: In my opinion, the development of bilateral and multifaceted relations between Spain and Portugal is a constant aim which transcends all political contingencies. It is a responsibility dictated by historical and cultural reasons, strengthened by our two countries' rediscovery of each other under democracy and fully justified in the economic field. The responsibility--which they accept, of course--rests with the two countries' leaders for creating the most favorable conditions for the development of these relations. It is a matter of a stable and desired policy which will be pursued in the atmosphere of openness and cordiality which should characterize it.

Question: It has been said that Portugal views Spain's entry into NATO with apprehension.

Answer: Portugal's stance has been one of expectation and of absolute respect for the sovereign stance which Spain adopts on the issue.

Question: Do you believe that President Ronald Reagan's election will affect relations between the United States and Europe in any way?

Answer: There is and there will remain a relationship of solidarity, clearly expressed in the Atlantic alliance and in the joint defense of the values of democracy which unite us. We hope, of course, that the Western bloc's cohesion will be strengthened, within respect for the rules which ensure its stability and its solidarity, while safeguarding at the same time the necessary conditions for continuing to seek negotiated solutions to conflicts and ensuring the strategic balance.

KING ADDRESSES BASQUES ON AUTONOMY, SOLIDARITY

[Speech by Spanish King Juan Carlos at the Casa de Juntas in Guernica--live]

[Excerpts] [Shouts of protest from members of the leftwing Herri Batasuna coalition who are then expelled from the chamber] In the face of those who practice intolerance, spurn coexistence and fail to respect the institutions and the most elementary norms of an orderly freedom of expression, I wish to proclaim once again my faith in democracy and my confidence in the Basque people.

I have always wished that my first visit as head of state to these dear Basque lands should include a ceremony which would set the seal on the king's meeting once again with the representatives of those territories which for centuries were an example in their loyalty and fidelity to the crown. And it was also my firm wish, a wish amply based on tradition, that that ceremony should be held here in Guernica because of its significance as the historical and emotional capital of the Basque people.

The fueros, [devolved rights] conceived as they were as a balance between different historical entities--the crown and the foral territories--represented not only the pillar which upheld the unity of the state but something much more profound. They were an integral part of the scheme which made possible and provided the stimulus for the incorporation of the Basque lands into the definition of Spain proper.

Modern Spain, which we all yearn for, must be a stable reality, free for all to live together, and it must be erected on the recognition of that part of the substance of the Spanish nation which is represented by its historical territories, its ancient kingdoms, its regions and its diverse cultures. For many reasons in the Basque case, the crown, in accordance with the central role ascribed to it by history, has from the very first taken as a cornerstone of the new concept of the Spanish state the establishment of a framework for coexistence which, tied in with foral tradition, would restore to the Basque country the exercise of its historical freedoms now brought up to date and broadened into a system of modern democratic institutions. We are now seeing the hopeful cystallization of that very scheme for the Basque country. The constitution has abolished the rulings which did away with the foral system. The foral institutions in the provinces have been fully restored. The Basque people gave their approval at the referendum to the statute of autonomy which was subsequently endorsed by the Cortes Generales and then given the royal assent.

For the first time in history, a parliament has been democratically elected for the autonomous community of the Basque country, and an elected government is functioning. Those areas of jurisdiction and those powers laid down in the constitution and in the statute of autonomy have been transferred or are in the process of being transferred to the Basque country. The Basque country thereby achieves modern and representative institutions of unity which distinguish it as a political entity in its own right.

Autonomy, which has been a genuine desire of the Basque people in recent decades, has restored to the Basque territories that freedom, in the safeguarding of which they provided such a shining model of nobility and loyalty. From that is born the justified hope with which the crown regards this new road which the Basque people are now beginning to travel--hope and expectation which are not unmindful of the complexity involved in carrying out a plan like the building of a Spain based on autonomous regions and which do not disregard the sad manifestations of violence which frequently lead to the spilling of blood on this beloved Basque land.

It is the spirit of industry, which has been reaffirmed across the centuries, which provides one of the reasons for my confidence in the future of the Basque people, this confidence which I would like to convey to all who live in this community: precisely now when the shadows of crisis and despondency appear to be looming over them. And this confidence springs from the fact that everything in the Basque country is an expression of vitality, of a people of enterprise and dynamism. I hope moreover that the Basque people's own moral resources, strengthened by cohesive support from the whole of Spain, will in the end restore to these lands the coexistence, freedom and tolerance which have always distinguished them.

The Basque country, whose vocation for freedom is symbolized by the tree which brings us all together here, has an opportunity today to see the plan for Basque democracy carried through, that plan which in one form or another has always fired the hopes of Basque people before and after the abolition of the Foral system; a Basque country forming an irrenounceable part of our plan for a common life within the unity of Spain; a Basque country having self-governing provisions for its political, economic, juridical and cultural institutions, and always at the service of the idea of a Basque society which accepts the political and cultural pluralism which has characterized the Basque people's behavior throughout history; a Basque country at peace, where coexistence and civilian security are an integral part of the social structure, crowning and promoting the new processes of transformation demanded by the currentlevel of development of Basque society and making possible the attainment of new levels of social and civil well-being which that society requires; a Basque country in solidarity with the rest of Spain, for true freedom does not exist unless peace and solidarity are also guaranteed.

I said previously that the greatest danger we face at the present time stems from despair and despondency. Therefore, on this my first visit as king to a land suffering more than any other the bitterness of violence and sectarianism, I wish to make a responsible appeal to your hope and confidence in the future of our country. And I want to make it here precisely because I am convinced that the energy and tenacity of this people will once again contribute to the moral resurgence of the democratic Spain we are building.

The Basque country has now begun to lose the fear of fear, to affirm its will to survive as a community and to recover its faith in itself and in its future. That the Basque country and its people might succeed in responding to the challenge with which history is now facing them is the crown's most fervent desire--that the tree of Basque freedom might be reborn with increased vigor here in Guernica.

FOREIGN OFFICE COMMENTS ON NEUTRON BOMB ISSUE

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Britain looks forward to talks with the United States and other allies on President Reagan's policy for the controversial neutron bomb, the Foreign Office said today.

It was commenting on a statement by U.S. Defence Secretary Mr Caspar Weinberger, who said America was "leaning towards" building the neutron bomb, to be based in Europe.

But the Foreign Office avoided actually using the term "neutron bomb". Instead it referred to "enhanced radiation weapons."

Before former President Jimmy Carter decided not to build the neutron bomb, opponents describ l it as "a capitalist bomb" which would kill people without destroying property.

This was thought to have been the crucial factor in President Carter's decision.

The Foreign Office said today: "It is expected that the new United States administration will want to review U.S. military policy and programmes across the board.

"We understand that the new U.S. secretary of defence emphasises that there would be no final decision on enhanced radiation weapons until the allies had been fully consulted.

"We look forward to discussing this issue with the new administration and our other allies."

The American indication brought mixed reactions from the Labour Party today.

Leftwing Labour MP Mr Frank Allaun (Salford East) immediately sought to table a private notice question to Defence Secretary Mr John Nott, saying the policy was "taking us nearer and nearer to the brink."

But former Labour Defence Minister Mr James Wellbeloved (Bexley, Erith and Crayford) said the proposal might be an alternative to cruise missiles and could be worth exploring.

TA NEA: ISRAELI RELATIONS COULD HARM ECONOMY

NC040900 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 4 Feb 81 p 5

[From the "Positions" column: "Cyprus and the Arabs"]

[Text] The government briefed the House of Representatives on Cyprus' relations with Israel. We do not yet know the details of the briefing. However, we want to stress that we are seriously uneasy regarding our relations with Israel and our behavior toward the Arabs and the possible repercussions on Cypriot-Arab relations.

Unfortunately, Cyprus continues to maintain diplomatic relations with Israel, continues to tolerate the activity of Israeli agents on Cypriot soil, continues large imports from Israel--without corresponding exports--does nothing to stop re-exportation of Israeli products to Arab countries and continues to give Zionist unaccountability free range on Cyprus.

At the same time, there is inequality in treatment, and in many cases this cannot be described as friendly. Yet, crimes in Cyprus were not committed by Arabs but by Israelis and their victims were distinguished Arabs and Palestinian refugees. The government should understand that this behavior offends the Arabs, causes unpleasant feelings and shakes the reciprocity on which good international relations should be based.

The disturbance of this reciprocity may possibly cause repercussions and affect our exports unfavorably at a time of crisis and increasing competition, which our products encounter in all markets of the world. We draw the government's attention to its responsibilities and ask it to take all appropriate measures to benefit Cyprus' national cuase and economy.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS ON VAROSHA RESETTLEMENT RESUME

[Text] A new meeting is being held at the Ledra Palace Hotel in Nicosia within the intercommunal talks framework. Discussion of the resettlement of Varosha under UN auspices will continue during this meeting.

Speaking to the press prior to the meeting, Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special envoy in Cyprus, said no speedy results should be expected because these were very complicated and difficult negotiations. Naturally, he added, there are very great gaps, but there is also limited progress. The only positive fact, he said, is that the atmosphere--the mildness of the dialogue--is now the best in the entire history of the intercommunal talks. These, he concluded, are the facts and you can draw your own conclusions.

Ioannidhis, the Greek Cypriot representative, said there are proposals from both sides on the negotiations table on the question of Varosha. We expect, he said, understanding from the other side, and I believe that we have a right to have it in accordance with point 5 of the summit agreement.

Ioannidhis mentioned that the resettlement of Varosha would be exclusively discussed at today's meeting and that the discussion would cover both the administration and the extent of the resettlement area.

Onan, the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor, said he expected the Greek Cypriots' reaction to his proposals. As you know, he added, our proposals were the first and as we proceed they will be developed. Asked whether there was a way for raprochement between both views on the Varosha issue, Onan said: By persevering and by working hard we must try to discover the differences and close the gap.

EDEK LEADER DISCUSSES TALKS, OTHER ISSUES

[Text] The socialist EDEK Party leader Dr Lissaridhis said yesterday that he would insist on the right of party leaders to convey to the people the deliberations of the National Council. Dr Lissaridhis was speaking at a press conference yesterday at which he explained his party's approach to the forthcoming elections. He said elections should be held either as soon as technical preparations allow it, which is in April or May, or as provided by the constitution, which should be in July or August.

Dr Lissaridhis said the choice was between a "progressive legalisation of the occupation effect" on the one hand and "a wise struggle for a settlement ensuring the fundamental rights of the people to return to their homes".

The EDEK leader said that unless his party's view was accepted about the right of the party leaders to inform the people, he would only make a "token" appearance at Monday's National Council meeting and would walk out.

Dr Lissaridhis described the intercommunal talks as they are conducted as a "travesty of talks" and the Turkish proposals as worse than those of 1978 which the UN secretary general had described as unacceptable. He again attacked the link between the Varosha resettlement and Nicosia airport reopening and insisted that Foreign Minister Mr Rolandhis was the instigator.

Dr Lissaridhis said that his party in the House, where it has four members out of a total of 35, would vote against the budgets to express the demand for more radical measures.

The general secretary of the party, Mr Takis Hadjidimitriou, who was present at the conference, repeated the charge had had made in the House that the government is using its machinery to the advantage of the ruling party (the Democratic Party). Promises are given of appointments to semi-governmental organisations and the president of the republic promises projects which are not included in the budgets, he said.

More Lissaridhis Comments

[4 February interview with EDEK Chairman Dr Lissaridhis on the intercommunal talks, Cypriot issues]

[Excerpts] Question: What is the situation regarding Waldheim's recent proposals?

Answer: Waldheim's 1978 proposals coincide with Rolandhis' proposals in 1980. The National Council ignores them; the government does the same--or it deceives us because it knows them but does not say so; the political parties ignore them. These proposals were made known in Feburary 1981, although they were submitted in February 1980.

Regarding these proposals, I would not call them Waldheim proposals but Rolandhis proposals. They are disastrous for Cyprus because once we accept that people--Cypriots, foreigners--as well as goods will move through through the airport, which will be under the command of the United Nations, toward both sides, one needs little imagination to understand that on the one hand this constitutes the legalization of trade and tourism with the occupied territories and on the other hand the recognition of two equal governments, actually under the auspices of the United Nations, with Cyprus the first to be recognizing the Turkish Cypriot ministate.

Question: Is it the nonaligned group which has taken the Cyprus problem away from the United Nations?

Answer: These things are, to say the least, naive. When we, the interested party, have asked for the deletion of the issue [from the agenda], can we be demanding the nonaligned group to say that it was wrong to do so? Benin did this once and, since them, it has deserted us, saying that the way we present the Cyprus issue is against the Cyprus people. You are under occupation and you dare not demand your rights [Benin said], and at the time voted against our resolution.

Question: And Waldheim?

Answer: First of all, Waldheim stands guilty before the General Assembly. A resolution exists that should there be no substantive progress in the talks by the end of March--which should have begun--a committee from a number of countries should be appointed to examine in what way it can help the implementation of the resolutions.

Why was this resolution not implemented? Why was it frozen? Consequently, Waldheim did not want us to go to the United Nations because some country or some Benin would rise and say: "Gentlemen, why did you not implement the resolutions? Why do we make resolutions?"

After all, it has been unfortunately proven that Waldheim did not play the right role. There are UN resolutions which deal with the problem's foreign aspect. What has he done for their implementation? Why has he not said: "On the strength of the resolutions I have asked Turkey to withdraw its troops, but it has refused to comply." Turkey would thus be exposed.

Question: Some people say: What does it hurt to belong in the West's sphere of influence? Or whether the Americans are sovereign on Cyprus? It is better than the Turks, they say.

Answer: The answer is: Why does the United States currently need Cyprus? Because of Cyprus' proximity to the Arab oil and the Suez Canal? As long as [the United States] needs [Cyprus] it will keep it under its guardianship. Later, if in 15-20 years the energy dispute changes, and it will change, what will remain? The fact that Turkey will always have borders with the Soviet Union. Since America is always interested in countries bordering the Soviet Union, Turkey will always take priority in U.S. interests. Thus, someday, when America will not need Cyprus as a semicolony and will intend to solve the Cyprus problem differently than the banana republic solution it is now seeking, it will give us to Turkey and not to Greece. These gentlemen [who ask the questions] should understand that entrusting our fate to the hands of the West means entrusting our fate to the hands of Turkey.

TURKISH CYPRIOTS REJECT TERRITORIAL PROPOSALS

NC050935 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 5 Feb 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Turkish Cypriot side has rejected the Greek side's proposals on the Cyprus problem's territorial aspect, claiming that although in phraseology they envisage a federation, in actual fact they provide for the establishment of a unitary state with a strong central government.

According to our reports, in their observations on the Greek proposals, the Turks claim these fall short of a federal republic as envisaged in the four-point agreement of 19 May 1979.

They also mention that the proposals provide for the granting of local regional autonomy to the communities inside a strong central state.

In addition, the Turks insist on the recognition of their administration as a state with the observation that our proposals are based on the "erroneous" prerequisite that currently exists—just one constitutional central government that would exercise control over the republic's dominion. The Turks demand that sovereignty be shared equally between the two "national peoples" as "cofounders of the republic" through their corresponding federal states.

As regards the rights of free movement, settling and property, the Turks insist that they cannot be implemented straight away without caution or restrictions. Furthermore, they demand that these rights be conceded gradually and exercised on the basis of legislation to be approved by both federal states.

They also object to the proposal to have the House of Representatives consist of 48 Greeks and 12 Turks and the Federal Council of 32 Greeks and 8 Turks and they reject the suggestion for separate balloting on certain issues such as international treaties, electoral law and tax laws, claiming that they are not satisfactory.

Furthermore, they reject the suggestion that it be determined which issues are to be the responsibility of the two communities' legislative councils, and to assign the remainder of the issues to the federal parliament. They also reject the suggestion that the legislation of the corresponding legislative councils be subject to the legislation of the central parliament. In addition, they ask that measure to unify the economy be taken gradually.

Regarding executive authority, the Turks reject the proposal for a common electoral roster for the election of the president and vice president, regardless of their origin, observing that the numerically larger Greek community will elect both of them.

They also ask for equal representation in public service in the Supreme Court and that the judges be elected by the corresponding communal groups in the federal senate.

FOREIGN MINISTER TURKMEN LEAVES FOR HUNGARY, PARIS

TA041509 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 4 Feb 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen left Ankara for Istanbul this afternoon en route to Hungary and France where he will conduct talks on various issues. He is expected to leave Yesilkoy Airport for Hungary any moment now. In a statement before his departure from Ankara's Esenboga Airport, Turkmen made the following statement:

[Begin recording] [Turkmen] I am leaving for Budapest as the guest of Frigyes Puja, the minister of foreign affairs of the Hungarian People's Republic. My visit will be in return for the visit by the Hungarian minister of foreign affairs to Turkey in 1977. As you know, Turkey and Hungary have very friendly and good relations. There is also very lively economic and commercial cooperation between the two countries. We want to give a new impetus to these relations. I hope these talks will be beneficial.

After my visit to Hungary I will go to Paris as the guest of French Minister of Foreign Affairs Jean Francois-Poncet. As you already know, we have very long-standing relations with France. We are also copartners in many international organizations. We have various problems with France. There are also many possibilities for further cooperation. We will extend every possible effort to expand cooperation.

[Question] Is there any issue that will specially be discussed? Such as the visa issue?

[Answer] There is the visa issue. We will discuss it. The Turkish view on the issue will be explained in detail to the French Government. You know that we shall first discuss the issue with the Germans in March. High-ranking representatives of both countries will meet and assess the developments concerning the visa issue. The measures taken by the Turkish side to put an end to situations the Germans have complained about will also be reviewed. We hope these talks and positively. If the (?situation) in France is linked to the (?situation) in the FRG, then maybe we will conduct talks with the French following our talks with the Germans. However, at this stage one should not be excessively optimistic.

Since I will confer with the French minister of foreign affairs there is nothing more natural than discussing the security of our diplomats stationed in France and the attacks launched against our diplomats there. [end recording]

COMMERCE MINISTER CANTURK DISCUSSES INFLATION

TA041614 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 4 Feb 81

[Text] Izmir, 4 Feb (AA)--Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk told a regional meeting of Aegean Union of Trade and Industry Chambers in order to be successful in the fight against inflation Turkey had to speed up investments and increase production in the short run.

The present government's economic policy was based on two tenets, Canturk said, namely, "accepting the function of the private sector in Turkish economy and supporting it", and "reforming the state economy enterprises and increasing their contribution to the economy."

The new tax laws led to certain uncertainties and worries, the minister said, adding that officials were trying to dispel them by issuing additional clarifications. The (?tax) laws could be further modified and improved in case the necessity arose, he added.

Businessmen's Views

Chairman of the Union of Trade and Industry Chambers Mehmet Yazar said, in his turn, bank interest rates [word indistinct] allowed to rise freely and in case this was not coupled with other measures aimed at adopting fully the free market economy principles, this could cause further escalation of inflation and interests in the future. The rise in the interest rates on bank deposits should be paralleled with a similar rise in the interests on bank credits, he added.

Chairman of the Aegean Chamber of Industry Yilmaz Adiguzel said the industry sector entered "two new bottlenecks, namely, the shortage of liquidity and credits along with the expensiveness of liquidity and credits." He criticized the provisions of the new tax laws under which certain taxes will be collected in advance.

According to information obtained from the regional deputy director of the Izmir refinery, 21,800 tons of engine oil, 71,000 tons of [word indistinct], 27,000 tons of diesel oil, 14,000 tons of high octane gasoline, 2,000 tons of fuel cartridge and 1,500 tons of kerosene. The engine oil was exported to Iran, Spain and Syria, [word indistinct] to France, and the remaining products to the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. The crude oil refined at the Izmir refinery was obtained from Iraq, Libya, Iran, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and domestic production.

SECRETARY GENERAL LUNS DISCUSSES U.S., MIDEAST

LD060933 London AL-MAJALLAH in Arabic 7 Feb 81 pp 14-18

[Interview granted by NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns to Ilyas Harfush in Brussels--date not specified]

[Excerpts] [Question] It appears that the alliance's role will be revived under the new U.S. administration. President Ronald Reagan places much store in shows of force and the position of strength policy. Therefore there is apprehension among Western circles about the impact of his tenure on detente and on East-West relations. How would you evaluate the views of the new U.S. President?

[Answer] Let me tell you that the election of President Reagan was received with satisfaction by the alliance countries. Through his statements during his election campaign and his various speeches he has won the confidence of the Western governments and, therefore, I see no justification for the West perceiving his term of office with any kind of anxiety.

[Question] Don't you think that President Carter's administration was more flexible in its relations with the Eastern camp and, therefore, more capable of preserving world peace?

[Answer] President Reagan is more understanding than his predecessor of the role of strength in international politics. Carter was more idealistic. Idealism is good in theory but not when you try to apply it to interstate relations. Early on in his term Carter believed it possible to reach a better understanding with the Russians through negotiations. But the experience of our long relations with them shows that, by maintaining its strength, the West can convince them of the need to negotiate with us. For this reason I have said that NATO welcomes President Reagan's arrival without reservations.

[Question] How do you in the alliance evaluate the Soviet threat to the Middle East and the Gulf? Are there any preparations to confront this threat?

[Answer] The situation in the Gulf does not give us cause to fear any military moves whatsoever. We are only in a situation of expecting such a move from the Soviet Union, but I would hasten to say that the possibility of such move is a slight one at present. There are many calculations the Soviets will have to make before they take a step of this magnitude in the Gulf. But if such a direct intervention does take place then the situation will seriously deteriorate.

[Question] There is much talk about the U.S. desire to establish military bases in the Gulf. Dr Kissinger, who is one of those close to the new U.S. administration, stated after a recent tour of some Middle East countries that such bases are necessary for the protection of Gulf security. What is NATO's attitude toward this matter?

[Answer] I know that there have been frequent references to such bases, but in fact the Americans now have many facilities around the Gulf area. The British have placed the Diego Garica base at their disposal. This is in addition to the Berbera base in Somalia and other bases on the African coast. This facilitates the servicing and control of their fleet, units and aircraft, as well as all the facilities they have there. The United States is not in need of bases in the Gulf area. They may be desired by certain elements in the U.S. administration, but I do not believe that they are necessary to maintain security in the area.

[Question] With regard to the Middle East, there has also been much talk about the idea of Israel's joining NATO on the grounds that, as the Israelis allege, it protects Western interests in the Middle East. In fact, several Israeli officials have been reiterating such views because, in their opinion, this would strengthen Israel's defense capability. What is your comment on this?

[Answer] The people who talk about this are incapable of realizing what they say. I assure you that neither the NATO Council nor the meeting of NATO's member states mentioned the possibility of Israel's joining the alliance. Even if this idea is on the mind of some Israeli officials, they know it is impossible to achieve. Any decision by the alliance, particularly the decision to admit new members, is taken unanimously. You know that there is no such unanimity over accepting Israel's entry. There is one state that is likely to join the alliance in the future, and that is Spain.

PAPER COMMENTS ON REAGAN ECONOMIC POLICY SPEECH

DW060922 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany
0605 GMT 6 Feb 81

[From the press review]

[Text] Let us, to begin with, quote a newspaper commentary on the economic policy intentions of U.S. President Reagan which he expounded last night in a televised speech.

The editorial of the BIELEFELD WESTFALENBLATT states in part: Another increase in state indebtedness, less tax relief than anticipated by the taxpayers--there is no way for U.S. President Reagan to dodge unpleasant decisions at the very beginning of his term. Even a Republican president of Reagan's makeup who vows the greatest discipline in finance policy will be unable to cure overnight America's economy which has been ailing for years and will, therefore, have to finance the incomparably greater defense spending this year via increased state indebtedness. The only question is whether the money will always be properly invested. What is more decisive than the sobering contours of the new U.S. economic policy is whether the U.S. President will succeed in strengthening confidence in the American economy.

DIE WELT VIEWS U.S. POLICY CHANGES UNDER REAGAN

[Thomas Kielinger editorial: "Reagan's Strategy"]

[Text] Caspar Weinberger has said that the neutron weapon would be a good reinforcement for the nuclear armed forces in Europe. It would be deployed, however, only after intensive consultations with the allies. Reagan's new secretary of defense stressed that it was not the old plan on the deployment of the neutron weapons in Europe that was wrong, but the way in which the Carter administration suddenly changed its course. For the future, he said, it is necessary to "convey" to the allies "the impression of steadiness in our policy."

This example provides a picture of the new U.S. strategic concept as represented by the Reagan administration: first, strength; second, steadiness; third, conveying this impression of steadiness to the allies, but by far not to them alone.

Viewed superficially, this may look as though the beginning of the Reagan administration shows certain similarities with Jimmy Carter's beginnings 4 years ago. In both cases, Washington first tackled Moscow.

Ronald Reagan probably went further in the hardness of his sermon. Reagan's realization that "any crimes" suits the Soviets, as does any "lie" and any "deception" to attain their goal of a world revolution came only very late to his predecessor, presumably only after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in December 1979.

Originally, Jimmy Carter preferred to castigate the violations of the human rights in the Soviet area of domination. But politically, the old administration pursued the most ardent illusions. As a gesture of good will, it decelerated all strategic programs that had been initiated. The B-1 bomber and the same neutron weapon for the Europeans were given up altogether.

This is where any comparison between 1977 and 1981 ends. Reagan is bringing along a strategic outlook which the other came to comprehend only at great costs (if at all). The challenge to international terrorism and its political henchmen is worthy of support. The struggle for human rights could have been similar had Carter also mustered the intellectual authority for setting priorities. Instead, he allowed himself to be tempted to look for motes in South America rather than to draw attention to the beam which caused all this.

The folly came to light as early as in February 1977 when the then secretary of state, Cyrus Vance, told Congress that countries like Uruguay and Argentina, whose aid was about to be cut because of violations of human rights, are "not important to the United States strategically." When Washington in the summer of 1980 imploringly asked Argentina to join the grain embargo against Moscow, it was rebuffed. A belated revenge for the earlier folly. Reagan, who is some latitudes further north, has learned that even banana republics like El Salvador and Nicaragua may well have strategic rank.

Two world political priorities are involved. First, to make it clear to the Soviet Union that "we mean business." Second, to prepare the American nation for the biggest defense increase which has ever taken place in peace time.

Since Angola, South Yemen, Ethiopia, Afghanistan and the Caribbean race, Moscow's willingness to run risks--stressed so clearly by Alexander Haig in his first press conference--has grown in accordance with America's publicly announced fears of military involvement. The parallel decrease of the defense budget and the SALT II agreement concluded out of concern for Soviet super armament intensified the impression that America was prepared to withdraw.

Fortunately, Ronald Reagan finds a public climate aware of the dangers to the American position in the world. But as before, a consumer society in a fit of recession and inflation must be convinced of the necessity of such high defense burdens. That can be achieved in America only once in a generation at best. This time has now come--the "emergency" in peace time.

What that means for the allies will emerge in the coming months. There is one thing that it does not mean: the agitational prediction by the prophets of one-sided disarmament and an arms halt that further negotiations with Moscow will be out. Reagan stressed on Tuesday that he is prepared for talks with Moscow and that he does not think Moscow will seek the risk of confrontation. As if one wanted to prove him right, it was simultaneously heard from the Kremlin in a statesmanly way that one ought to stop using tough words and return to negotiations.

Moscow can stand tough words, particularly since its spokesmen never miss a chance to charge the Americans with imperialism and all possible rascalities; so that side would have little reason to hold the frank and correct words of the President against him. One tends instead to accept them the way they were meant: as an announcement that the Americans know with whom they are dealing, that the era of showing confidence in progress is over and that one will not be fooled any more. The allies should not exhibit more Moscow fears than Moscow does itself.

But their role as allies? "The whole world belongs to NATO's sphere of problems," Alexander Haig said calmly in the middle of the excited discussion about "German destroyers to the Persian Gulf." That is also a program. It includes demands on the allies, demands of a material and spiritual character. Every crime, every lie, every deception--is that correct? Or is the old appeasement complaint that talks about "primitive anti-communism" correct? Great efforts presuppose a great spiritual change, in America as well as in Europe.

NEWSPAPERS DISCUSS NEUTRON BOMB, WEINBERGER REMARKS

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU

[Commentary signed Mac.: "Weinberger's Charge"]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger surprisingly brought up for discussion the topic of the "neutron bomb" and advocated producing the controversial weapon as well as deploying it in West Europe. This is to be preceded, however, by intensive consultations with the European NATO allies.

Without examining the question concerning the military "expediency" of this weapon, on which quite a lot could be said indeed, it is necessary nevertheless to make some remarks about this quick shot by the secretary of defense in Washington.

To begin with, the procedure is unusual. The topic of the "neutron bomb" passionately and controversially was debated in Europe and in the United States so that an earlier coordination with the European NATO countries is more than just indicated. Tactics of surprise in dealing with allies is hardly an appropriate remedy.

Secondly, Weinberger should have been aware that in Europe at large and in the Federal Republic in particular a discussion is in progress just now on the dual decision of NATO (offer of negotiations to Moscow and preparation to deploy new medium-range weapons, "counterarming") which also is so embittered because the U.S. Senate has failed to ratify SALT II and will not ratify it in the future, either. Even though there is, officially, no linkage between the ratification and the dual decision, it is considered an important political and psycnological precondition. If the topic of the "neutron bomb" is put on the table in addition and unnecessarily, this will tend to aggravate the position of those who, for well thought out reasons, adhere to both parts of the dual decision. Thirdly and finally, if Moscow takes Weinberger's charge seriously, it might likewise produce this weapon and the arms spiral would spin all the faster. Therefore, all told, this is a harmful move which has little in common with predictable politics.

FRANKFURTHER ALLGEMEINE

[Editorial signed G-N: "Resubmission"]

[Text] New U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger has surprised the European allies with the proposal to produce the "neutron" weapon and to have it standing by along the central European front. Even before the Europeans made up their minds about what they should think of this, the Soviet warning of the dangers to world peace and detente has been put on the table. Many people in the severely ruffled government coalitions in the Federal Republic, Belgium and The Netherlands wonder whether another nuclear weapons quarrel is to be loaded on them now, of all times, in addition to the domestically unsettled problem of the deployment of U.S. medium-range weapons.

Washington has decided against preparing this issue tacitly and extensively in the NATO Council on the diplomatic level. It plans to consult the allies, but in this respect, the new government in Washington is not doing any pussyfooting. Since political clamor cannot be avoided anyway, they prefer to start it themselves. Possibly this is a fairly good but definitely not flattering judgment of the Europeans in the alliance. This project was finally discontinued by President Carter nearly 3 years ago, to be sure. That was done, however, only after some of the European allies, including the Federal Government, for months dodged stating publicly that they wanted the introduction of that weapon.

The problem of the weapon cannot be described as Bahr did at the time, namely, that this weapon, cynically speaking, annihilates human life while sparing real estate. The problem is an old one. It is inherent in all "tactical" nuclear weapons, most of all in the smallest new development: Being on the borderline between conventional and nuclear warfare, does it contribute toward supporting or weakening the fear of the horrors of war? The potential for divergent opinions has been present from the outset. But so far the view always has won out in the alliance that the close combination of both means of deterrence is desirable and that "small" nuclear weapons are needed for this purpose. The allies in the central sector of NATO could do without this weapon, provided they are prepared to improve considerably their conventional defense capability. Refusing both at the same time, in contrast, is logically not permissible.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG

[Christian Potyka editorial: "Bomb With Political Explosive Force"]

[Text] The neutron weapon has turned into a "bomb" again. For the time being, it will develop its political and journalistic explosive force in the domestic discussions of the European NATO allies and thence have its repercussions on the United States and transatlantic relations. The one who ignited the bomb and introduced it into the discussion was U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger who stated at a press conference that his government "probably" will make use of the opportunity to reinforce the so-called theater forces of NATO with the neutron weapon, but not without consultations with the allies. The circumstances and the contents of this announcement make it hard to objectify the discussion of this subject. Yet this is exactly what must be done.

The new weapon disappeared from the headlines after its spectacular public emergence in June 1977, after Egon Bahr's famous verdict ("perversion of thinking") in July of that year, after the agitated discussion of the subsequent months and Carter's retraction in April 1978. Yet, the president did not shelve the project, he merely postponed it. It was just put back into the hands of the experts, who continued to work on it. The weapon has been present in the background all the time. It has been perfected. There were rumors and reports on the systematic preparation for its deployment in the Federal Republic. That this would involve specifically would be warheads for missiles and shells for howitzers, or even mere special "components" which convert a specific warhead into a neutron weapon.

People in Bonn are now trying to defuse Weinberger's bomb with the speculation that the secretary gave an "impromptu answer." Consequently, his forward plunge should not be overrated. And yet, there are indications that Weinberger's statement was not at all so spontaneous. In that case, his forward plunge would be a small offerring of the new tone in security policy toward Europe. If this really describes Washington's intentions properly, then the opening performance could not have been any more clumsy.

The Americans must tolerate being told even by CDU politician Manfred Woerner that the secretary's announcement at this particular time was "not felicitous." Woerner's statement, uttered on U.S. soil, wields double weight because the union's defense expert is a long-time friend of the United States. Prior to his current visit to Washington, he raised a 3-point catalogue of demands protectively, as it were, which Bonn probably will have to expect coming from Washington. Additional demands will be made from Woerner's point of view to minimum requests involving the infrastructure of U.S. units, the setup of own reserves and a stronger navy contribution in the North Sea. These demands will be presented in the near future to the German defense minister and to the federal chancellor when they visit the United States. Then the entire package will have to be discussed--a package that is heavy enough anyway. But now Weinberger has added the neutron weapon to it.

His step is unfortunate for two more reasons. First, the bomb will intensify Reagan's hard approach to the Soviet Union. Second, Weinberger's indication hits the Europeans in the most unfortunate psychological moment, namely in the hardness test of a toilsome discussion on closing the arms gap, where one complains anyway about American pressure. Woerner indicated while assessing the timing of Weinberger that the U.S. secretary of defense showed a lack of feeling for the psychology of the allies, as well as of concrete knowledge of the current situation. Many Americans are wrong indeed if they believe that the discussion on closing the arms gap is over. The extensive debate on it has just begun in Europe.

An objective discussion of the pros and cons of the neutron weapon on such a background would mean asking too much of any pluralistic public, and particularly of Germany which will be most involved by both innovations. With some patience and carefulness of all involved, however, the neutron weapon and its physical effect could be stripped of its demonic character. This fusion weapon with reduced heat and increased nuclear radiation is not not more devilish or perverse than other modern combat means or nuclear arms. Regarding its collateral damages, its side effects, it is even less horrible than equally strong normal nuclear (fission) arms, without the need of calling it progress.

Due to the neutron weapon's particularly tempting miniature effect, which is militarily most interesting, there is the threat of a dangerous blurring of the critical limit between conventional and nuclear combat means. Even if the new projectiles will be small in size and great in number, they would remain nuclear arms, physically and politically. That cannot be eliminated in discussions by calling the new means "tactical", or combat field arms, as Weinberger does. Since this technology is known to the Soviets and the French, nobody will gain an advantage in the long run from building the neutron weapon. A new round of the arms would just create new risks.

SCHMIDT FACES PROBLEMS OVER NUCLEAR POWERPLANT

[Commentary Signed Fr.: "Schmidt and Brokdorf"]

[Text] The reproach that Schmidt did not face his Hamburg land party organization to fight for his policy of (limited) use of nuclear energy is hard. The chancellor knew why he did not go to Hamburg: Defeat was expected. More than 2 years ago he strongly criticized Klose, the mayor and a fellow party member, who was playfully downgrading the extremist problem while at the peak of his election triumph. Schmidt criticized him with the self-assurance of a chancellor who was indispensable to his party, thus driving party congress votes in the direction of this otherwise not highly esteemed young man.

Not much can be made of a bad situation. The agile mayor again managed to place himself in the best light for the party congress. His remarks that Hamburg's "getting out" of the Brokdorf affair must still be decided by the Senat seem to have prepared a second blow for Schmidt, which would consist of the Senat's making its decision along the same lines as the tested Hanseatic party democracy. What should Schmidt do, if he does not want his support of the Brokdorf nuclear powerplant to be retroactively interpreted as an excuse?

If Schmidt brings federal influence to bear on a company to take the place of Hamburg in the matter of the Brokdorf powerplant, hell will break loose in his northern German party; in Hamburg anyway, in Bremen more in theory, in Schleswig-Holstein particularly and in Lower Saxony probably also. In that case, it would hardly be possible for the chancellor to make campaign appearances in the next landtag elections in these two latter laender, laender where they wanted to "make it easier in Bonn," (which was the election slogan of the Schlweswig-Holstein SPD in the 1979 landtag elections).

Should Schmidt drop Brokdorf--placing the responsibility on the minister-presidents would not be quite correct and would be completely wrong according to the overlapping responsibility of the Federal Government--he would destroy the credibility of what he said or carefully hinted at as the deputy SPD chairman and as the government chief. Schmidt the chancellor would then become simply a party leader of the same name, a person who does not even follow--the tendency will increase together with the energy prices--the will of the majority of the people. He would then be somebody who yields along with factions of his party to a noisy minority which breaches the law.

LAMBSDORFF ON BROKDORF POWERPLANT, SPD DISPUTES

DW051043 Hamburg BILD in German 5 Feb 81 pp 1,3

[Reporter Friedemann Weckbach-Mara interview with Minister of Economics Otto Graf Lambsdorff]

[Text] BILD: The Hamburg SPD does not want to build the Brokdorf nuclear powerplant. What do you say to that?

Lambsdorff: I am surprised how rabidly the Hamburg SPD Land Association ignored the demands of the DGB and the metal workers union. We here in Bonn always are being told that the Social Democrats are closely linked with the trade unions. That does not seem to apply to Hamburg.

BILD: What do you expect the Hamburg Senat to do now?

Lambsdorff: I expect it to decide after all in favor of building the Brokdorf powerplant. It is committed to the entire populace and not to party congresses. The Senat must take the economic consequences into consideration, including restitution claims.

BILD: And if the Senat says no....?

Lambsdorff: Brokdorf will be built anyway. The Federal Government will adhere to its energy policy. If the Hamburg electricity company has to pull out, the Prussian electricity company will probably step in.

BILD: The SPD is in difficulties, not only in Hamburg but also in Bonn. Is it still able to rule?

Lambsdorff: Certainly, but many things would be simpler if the SPD ended its disputes and actively supported the policy of the chancellor.

BILD: Are you not irritated by the fact that 24 SPD deputies want to curtail the defense budget by 1 billion?

Lambsdorff: I expect these deputies to adopt the defense budget in the Bundestag.

BILD: But if they hold to their opinion....

Lambsdorff: That would have severe consequences. A government unable to adopt important parts of its budget will meet its end.

BILD: Is the Bonn coalition linked with the person of Helmut Schmidt?

Lambsdorff: We and the Social Democrats suggested him for federal chancellor and we elected him unanimously. We consider the SPD discussion about a possible successor embarrassing. But if something should happen to the chancellor tomorrow, God forbid, we would not give up the coalition because of it.

GERMAN CHANCELLOR ARRIVES FOR TALKS WITH GISCARD

Poland, Afghanistan Discussed

[Text] Paris, 5 Feb (AFP)--The Polish and Afghan situations were the principal subject of discussion at a summit meeting here today between West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

French presidential spokesman Jacques Blot said that the two leaders assessed international conditions in general, giving special attention to areas of tension.

Mr Blot said that security questions were considered in depth and that the framework of major strategic negotiations were explored in the light of the installation of the new U.S. administration of Ronald Reagan.

The first meeting which began with a lunch at 1330 local (1230 GMT) was held in an atmosphere of "great cordiality reflecting the close relations between the two countries," Mr Blot said.

Following that session, Mr Giscard d'Estaing told newsmen that he was working "with the chancellor to reinforce Europe's presence on the international scene in confronting the major problems of the day."

The French president added that Europe's scope of action had been widened, "now that certain uncertainties had been resolved, such as the Iranian hostages issue and the U.S. presidential elections" and also because of "extremely serious tensions, especially in East-West relations."

Mr Giscard d'Estaing said that he and Mr Schmidt would "define together the general attitude that we would like to adopt."

During an afternoon meeting between Mr Schmidt and French Premier Raymond Barre, Mr Blot said, European and monetary issues were to be discussed. Mr Schmidt was to be Mr Giscard d'Estaing's guest at a dinner tonight at the Elysee Palace.

The international situation would be further considered during the dinner, the spokesman said.

According to Mr Blot, French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet and his West German counterpart, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, also met today to discuss developments in the Middle East.

A joint declaration on cultural questions will be published following the summit meeting, Mr Blot added.

FRANCOIS-PONCET, PAKISTANI DISCUSS AFGHAN CRISIS

[Text] Paris, 5 Feb (AFP)--Pakistan Foreign Ministry Secretary General Riaz Piracha met with French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet today on ways to settle the Afghan crisis, a French communique said.

The French Foreign Ministry text said that the two officials, who were joined by Mr Francois-Poncet's deputy, Olivier Stirn, reviewed topical international subjects with special emphasis on "focal points of tension in Asia and Europe," devoting special attention to Afghanistan.

Informed sources said the Pakistani official asked to be briefed on recent French proposals about a conference on the Afghan issue and was told that French thinking revolved around a meeting on foreign interventions in Afghan affairs.

Mr Piracha, the same sources added, informed his French hosts about the results of the recent Islamic summit at At-Ta'if recalling its appointment of an ad hoc commission for liaison on the Afghan problem with United Nations Secretary General Kurt Waldheim.

The Pakistani aide, the sources indicated, stressed Islamabad's deep worry about the Afghan situation and explained that if it did not push for any outright condemnation of the Soviet Union, this was with a view to keeping the possibility open of a dialogue, a line Pakistan intended pursuing at the current non-aligned meeting in New Delhi.

BRAZILIAN PRESIDENT SPEAKS AT VERSAILLES BANQUET

PY050130 Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 30 Jan 81 p 4

[Speech by Brazilian President Joao Baptista Figueiredo at a 29 January banquet given for him at Versailles during his visit to France]

[Text] Mr President: Deeply touched, I thank you for Your Excellency's words of sympathy and friendship. The words spoken by Your Excellency reveal your knowledge of and interest in Brazil.

My visit to France at this time has a significance beyond its immediate results. It is a part of a process, which can be considered consolidated, through which the chiefs of state of our countries have been meeting.

The achievement of unity through justice, the creation of a community of free and responsible men and the building of a society through communication and participation are succinctly enunciated principles which transcend the internal affairs of states, because the ideal of "a society build upon the individual" should permeate the evolution of international relations.

In accepting the invitation of Your Excellency, I was mindful of the fact that shared values are the basis for dialogue between our two nations. These values imbue us on the one hand with an appreciation of our own national identity and on the other hand, with sentiments of respect for the individuality of our partners. Apart from other points of convergence, perhaps our rejection of uniformity will be a special common denominator of our peoples.

The process I mentioned before was initiated with President Charles de Gaulle's visit to Brazil. We welcomed him not only as a great French statesman but as one of the outstanding personalities of contemporary history, and the French people and Government gave a warm and friendly reception to President Ernesto Geisel when he visited France in 1976.

During your recent trip to Brazil, Your Excellency greatly strengthened our ties in every respect and your constructive vision was not lost on us.

My visit is just another step in the process of consolidating our relations. I am in France at a particularly significant moment in the evolution of our countries, fraught with risks and opportunities for mankind.

France traditionally has stood high in the international community as a beacon of cultural, intellectual and political achievements. French society blends respect for the past with courage in facing the future. The French nation has a well-founded and well-recognized culture which is enriched by a creativity in quest of new directions, new propositions and new ideas.

By precisely and smoothly expressing your thinking, Your Excellency has guided the French Government toward ideas and insitutions which, although conceived in the present, will serve future generations. Thus, your country has fulfilled its great ideas and has renewed its contributions to mankind and civilization.

As a thinker and a politician, Your Excellency has identified three ways of establishing relations between individuals and their community. [as heard]

France and Brazil have coexisted in the Western political world. We want to see the West prosper harmoniously, but respecting all of its varieties. We must truthfully live up to our own values and practice a flexible, open dialogue.

In the political space we share it is essential that each country has access to the practical means required to fulfill its destiny and that it may do so free from interference, restrictions or impositions, because this is what distinguishes us in the international scene: We reject hegemonic moves and unilateral decisions.

International society should be a field of coordination, not one of subordination. A search for consensus must be based on the respect for the characteristics of each nation.

Although retaining their own identities and acting in different environments, France and Brazil have taken important similar actions in the international field.

Brazil appreciates the understanding Your Excellency has shown for the significance the yearnings of the developing world has in today's world. Since the early stage of the North-South negotiations, France has understood the need to hold a dialogue because, like Brazil, it is clearly aware of the risks involved in maintaining the present economic imbalance.

The search for a more just economic order should be a specific one and should result in the improvement of the standard of living of all peoples. It should, therefore, disregard preestablished ideas and labels which are merely designed to disguise the lack of a sincere, profound desire for cooperation.

Understanding, cooperation and coexistence are factors which are becoming increasingly urgent among nations in the current international situation, which is particularly complex and critical.

We must avoid narrowing international relations to unrealistic guidelines, but we must understand the diversity of nations and seek a relationship that contributes to achieving peace and development.

The current situation is especially critical in the economic field in which injustices are becoming permanent to the great detriment of most developing countries. Despite its tremendous domestic efforts and despite the results achieved so far in the field of development, Brazil has been severely affected by the world economic crisis. We can only recognize that if the current situation adversely affects the developed countries, it will even more adversely affect the vulnerable economies of the developing countries.

The difficult times we are now living demand prompt solutions. A joint international effort is necessary to achieve a real understanding on these issues that are afflicting us all. If this effort does not yield the appropriate results, it is more than probable that it will create resentment and distrust with unpredictable effects which will be of use to no one.

The impasse in the international economic forums is not an academic problem because it unleashes far-reaching tensions and conflicts and may also infect the international political arena.

As I see it, two conditions are essential to stimulate this joint undertaking. On the one hand, a clear sense of priority, born from a really negotiated process, without impositions, but with justice and equilibrium, and on the other hand, a true disposition to negotiate.

I am aware of the objective difficulties which affect a person's negotiating spirit, but I am confident that the real consequences of the current economic crisis, especially those affecting the developing countries, will be appropriately met by the industrialized countries, and for mutual benefit, so that we can overcome the inertia which characterizes the North-South relationship.

I am hopeful that we will be able to meet this challenge which will certainly impose sacrifices on everyone, to a greater or lesser degree, according to their different stages of development. Anyhow, it is appropriate that these negotiations be carried out within a climate of absolute respect for the individual autonomy of the participating countries, and within a real sense of solidarity.

I am certain that the efforts which our countries have put forth to strengthen bilateral relations will gain new impetus. New opportunities will continue to emerge with a more embracing and improved institutional framework which reflects the roots of Brazilian-French relations.

The friendly relations which we have traditionally maintained with France are an enriching factor of Brazilian foreign policy. Making this relationship more dynamic opens better political opportunities for Brazil in its permanent dialogue with West European nations and with all the West. Because our bilateral relations have repercussions beyond their own limits, our relations with France also have an important influence in our overall diplomacy, strengthening our capacity to support the principles of self-determination of peoples, the sovereign equality among states and the respect for national diversities.

Our cultural relations, carried out within a framework of reciprocal understanding, far from tarnishing the essential characteristics of each nation, contribute to enriching their respective heritages.

This intermingling of culture, this profound link between the souls of our peoples, is the deepest reason of our belief in the possibility of finding a solution to the problems of our times through dialogue.

France has become the central point of European integration, revealing a clear position on underlining the advantages of being united to do away with the perpetuation of past rivalries and outdated forms of relationships. To play this noble role, it has developed a cultural tradition in an open and varied manner, based on the defense of humanitarian ideals.

Mr President, based on certain and realistic guidelines, France undoubtedly has gained the post of vanguard among the nations which hope to build a more just and balanced world for all.

Now I want to toast the friendship between our peoples. I ask all those who are present here to lift their glasses and to toast this friendship and the health of the president of France and his wife, Mrs Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

LE MONDE ON 'POSSIBLE' GISCARD VISIT TO POLAND

[Jacques Amalric report: "Maneuvering Over a Visit"]

[Excerpt] "No date has been determined regarding a possible visit by Mr Giscard d'Estaing to Poland." This is how on the night of Monday, 2 February, the Elysee denied--rather curtly--information originating in Warsaw to the effect that the president is to pay an official visit to Poland sometime "between mid-March and the first week of April." However, it has not been denied in circles close to the president's office that such a visit could take place, but it has been emphasized that this is a possibility, not a certainty.

L'HUMANITE SCORES JOSPIN ON PCF MINISTERS ISSUE

[Rene Andrieu editorial: "A Trap?"]

[Text] Communist participation in government is a precondition for genuine political change. This is what millions of workers in our country believe and demand.

In the form of an academic hypothesis, this question was discussed yesterday at a Press Club meeting to which L. Jospin, who has been appointed PS first secretary for the duration of F. Mitterrand's "party leave," was invited.

Would there be Communist government ministers if Mitterrand were elected president of the republic?

It appears that in the Socialist leaders' view this is an inopportune question. Last Sunday, F. Mitterrand stated that it does not fall within his province and Lionel Jospin said that it is not a matter of current interest. But, after thinking it over, Jospin admitted yesterday that it was "awkward" and even that "it was a rather crude trap."

Why a trap? Because--to use his own words--if put forward, it could well "frighten moderates," that is the right, and "dishearten Communists." In short, reduce Billancourt [industrial district of Paris] to despair.

This at least has cleared the fog surrounding the Socialist plan. Hitherto, F. Mitterrand and his friends had proclaimed their loyalty to the union of the left and even accused us of shirking responsibilities connected with power. They were bold enough to accuse us of connivance with Giscard. Prompted by a desire for moderation, I will not recall F. Mitterrand's remarks on the subject.

Yesterday, Jospin not only categorically refused to make any commitment whatever with respect to any possible Communist participation in government but also explained at great length the reasons which, he believes, render it more than problematic. J.P. Chevenement developed the same theme in Marseille--If the PCF wants to participate in government, it must change its political line, that is, cease to be itself.

It is interesting to hear Jospin complain that we suspect his party of moving to the right at the very moment when he unintentionally proved that our analysis is correct.

His refusal to consider the possibility of Communists becoming members of the government clearly confirms the fact that he has turned his back on the union of the left and on commitment, given in the joint program, since the joint program naturally implied our participation in a government entrusted with the task of implementing a policy jointly determined by the parties of the left.

In fact, this is a question of decisive importance. For history since 1947 shows that by keeping the Communists away from government, the socialist-rightist coalition has plunged France into the confusion of colonial wars and an economic crisis. At the end of this path is Giscard, and also Chirac who helped him into the saddle. However, it is not by repeatedly making eyes at Chirac that you can start initiating any necessary change in direction. Now Jospin was explicit on this point. "In my view," he stated, "the demand for participation in government by the Communists is incompatible with the policy now pursued by the PCF and the French people must realize this." And to ensure that no doubt about this could remain, he repeatedly returned to the subject, asserting that such a hypothesis is "absolutely not serious" and even adding that there "will be no negotiations on the matter either before or after the first ballot or before the conclusion of the second ballot."

In other words, as we already emphasized after its congress, the PS wants to preserve its freedom of maneuver. Its candidate does not believe that he is bound by the manifesto adopted by its congress, a manifesto which is vague enough about objectives but even more vague about methods and completely silent on the subject of alliances. What would a Socialist government do? How would it act and with whom? No answer to these three questions has been given. Better still--if these are the right words--according to Jospin, they represent a trap. We can see that the brilliant light of democracy has been cast on the situation.

It will be noted that even though Jospin has ruled out the possibility of a left union government, he has taken care, after clearing the site, not to rule out the idea of a government relying on rightist support. "The government's composition," he stated, "will depend on the results of parliamentary elections and not on the president's desire." Jospin has assured us that in any case a Socialist president will "abide by the French people's choice and the constitution. This means, as a journalist pointed out to him, that "it is quite possible to imagine a situation where Valery Giscard d'Estaing would be President Francois Mitterrand's premier." But even if this extreme hypothesis is disregarded, "respect for universal suffrage," shown once the Communists are excluded from government, could quite easily make him president over a majority composed of Socialists and "moderates." We are justified in assuming that it is such a grand objective that it is being considered at secret meetings with RPR, notwithstanding the war of words in which the two parties will remain engaged throughout the presidential campaign.

By saying "no" to the possibility of Communist participation in government, Jospin has chosen to reassure the right rather than give Billancourt cause for hope, even though Billancourt pins its hopes on something else, and even though the votes obtained by the Communist candidate in the first ballot could well make the most skillful political schemes fail.

L'HUMANITE CRITIQUES HAIG REMARKS ON TERRORISM

LD040951 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 30 Jan 81 p 1

[Jacques Coubard editorial: "Strategic Withdrawal"]

[Text] The first statement made by the new man in charge of U.S. foreign policy was marked, if not by anything new, at least by a significant strategic withdrawal.

In fact, even though General Haig did not venture from the beaten track to explain the great diplomatic options which will henceforth guide the State Department, he rather ingloriously gave ground on the battlefield of human rights. Abandoning the sermons under which Carter concealed some most glaring violations of freedom, the secretary of state announced that he would henceforth give priority to the struggle against "international terrorism."

This statement worried none of the dictators from Latin America to the Far East who receive political, economic and military aid enabling them to keep entire populations in chains.

There is good reason for this. General Haig was referring to the Soviet Union, which is allegedly among those "engaged in deliberate policies, or if you prefer, programs, aimed at stimulating, helping and extending international terrorism."

It all sounded like American propaganda at a time when more than 500,000 GI's were trying to crush Vietnam using napalm and defoliants, while the USSR was doing its duty by showing solidarity with people fighting for their freedom. Has the colonel in the Saigon expeditionary corps learned nothing during his rise to the White House in that he continues to equate national liberation movements with "terrorism?"

Coming from a government which supplies arms and military advisers to the El Salvador junta, such remarks sound like a tribute to all those who are in solidarity with guerrillas, members of resistance movements and patriots fighting against oppression everywhere.

Furthermore, General Haig does not realize that times have changed. And, if he believes that he will be able to bring Iran to its knees by refusing to deliver arms paid for by the shah--whereas he has agreed to deliver tanks ordered by the king of Morocco--he should remember that imperialist countries lost their arms monopoly a long time ago.

This first statement by the American secretary of state makes it clear how dangerous it is for a government to align its attitude on that of Washington, as Mr Giscard d'Estaing showed this week.

By adopting a "favorable initial attitude" to Reagan and Haig (that is, toward a policy openly based on the principle that any means are good to preserve the strategic interests of American imperialism, irrespective of human rights) Mr Giscard d'Estaing on Channel two on Tuesday renewed his oath of allegiance to king dollar. This has been the aim of a 7-year term during which France's freedom of decision was abandoned for the servitude imposed by an alliance of mutlinational companies.

The French Communists firmly oppose this. Any real change which can ensure that France extricates itself from the present crisis demands a nonalignment policy and initiatives in favor of disarmament, a simultaneous dissolution of blocs and a democratization of international relations, which would return to our humanitarian and revolutionary traditions, at the same time abiding by concluded alliances. This is what Georges Marchais had in mind when he put forward some concrete proposals. He is the only anti-Giscard candidate, the only candidate of national independence.

President Joao Figueiredo expressed his gratitude for the warm hospitality shown to him, his wife and his entourage during their stay in Portugal. He invited Portuguese President Ramalho Eanes and Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao for an official visit to Brazil, and the latter accepted the invitation. The date of the visit will be established by the proper diplomatic channels.

PCP REGRETS PCE POSTPONEMENT OF MEETINGS

LD052322 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 2000 GMT 5 Feb 81

[Text] The PCP regrets that its Spanish counterpart has postponed until after July the meeting between the two parties to discuss the issues presently dividing European communists. Ramon Font reports from Lisbon:

The Portuguese Communists regret that the Spanish Communists have postponed the meetings between their respective leaders until the second half of this year. An authorized spokesman for the PCP Central Committee has confirmed the opposition of the party, led by Alvaro Cunhal, to the suggestion from the PCE to postpone the top-level dialogue when everything was planned for it to take place in the spring.

Yesterday it was announced in Lisbon that delegations from the two parties, headed by their respective secretary generals, Santiago Carrillo and Alvaro Cunhal, will meet in the second half of this year, taking part in four meetings of friendship in Madrid, Barcelona, Lisbon and Oporto. Today the PCP spokesman said that the postponement requested by the Spanish side does not help the Portuguese party's aim of opening a frank and open debate on the well-known existing differences, above all on matters of common interest. In the opinion of the Portuguese Communists' spokesman in Lisbon, the delay enforced by the PCE cannot be disassociated from the latter's internal difficulties which have become more serious following the Congress of the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC]. The Portuguese proposal to hold top-level meetings was made before the [PSUC] congress and the Spanish reply to hold them seems to be related to the necessity to freeze international contacts such as this until after the PCE congress.

AVANTE! CRITICIZES REAGAN'S 'WARLIKE' STANCE

LD051719 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 29 Jan 81 p 11

[Unattributed commentary: "Reagan Promotes Unrealistic Foreign Policy"]

[Text] "There are things more important than peace," Haig (now U.S. secretary of state) said in the Senate shortly before President Reagan's inauguration. This remark basically presupposes that for the Reagan administration there are things more important than a nuclear war.

Some of Washington's first decisions, following the advent of the new administration, confirm that latent threat in the warlike statements made by the current President during the election campaign. The congressional budget office recently announced that U.S. military expenditure could increase by as much as $79.3 billion over the next 5 years. The largest increase would be in expenditure within the NATO framework ($59.8 billion).

Meanwhile 6,000 U.S. Marines, selected to join a possible strike force in the Indian Ocean area south of Iran, are staging major military exercises in the California desert.

Equally revealing are the assertions of the present Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger who, on the very day of his swearing-in, sent a message to the various branches of the armed forces, stating that he anticipated "enthusiastically and keenly the start of America's rearmament with the total support of our new commander in chief" (Reagan).

Washington's foreign policy thus emerges at the outset as extremely aggressive and unrealistic. And this is in fact the first major obstacle to its implementation. In promoting a cold-war style policy the Reagan administration is coming up against an entirely different reality.

On the domestic plane there is a very serious economic crisis. Therefore Reagan's promises immediately conflict with the real situation. Nobody has yet discovered a formula that will permit both a 30 percent tax cut (one of Reagan's principal election promises) and at the same time an increase in military expenditure. The same applies to inflation, since the increases in the military budget are the main reasons for its growth. The same applies to unemployment, since it is abundantly proven that the same investment creates more jobs in the civilian sector than it does in the military.

Even among his NATO allies Reagan is meeting with disagreement with an openly warlike foreign policy. One FRG newspaper, for instance, described Haig's remarks as an attempt by the general to force his allies to "look at the world only through the rearview mirror of a tank."

At the fifth Europe-Latin America interparliamentary conference held a few days ago in Bogota, Colombia, the chairman of the European Parliament said: "There are many question marks about Reagan's foreign policy, but the United States must remember the existence of Europe, Latin America and other continents, and the new U.S. administration must take us into account."

The reality of socialism is the most decisive obstacle to the foreign policy being promoted by the White House. First, every and any attempt to gain military superiority over the USSR is senseless, sterile and dangerous. Second, only respect for the principles of equality and security for mutual interests can ensure interaction between the countries in the quest for solutions acceptable to both sides and to the rest of the world's countries. Third, the fundamental aspects of USSR-U.S. relations are the ones aimed at guaranteeing the strategic arms limitation process, and every new step in that direction not only opens up prospects of real disarmament but also shields the world from nuclear disaster.

These are facts which, like it or not, the Reagan administration will have to take into account. But they are facts which will not automatically prevail. They require everyone's concerted action against the threats which imperialism poses to the whole of mankind.

AFTENPOSTEN EDITORIAL ON NEW PRIME MINISTER

[Editorial: "A Vitalizing Change"]

[Text] Today Norway acquires its first woman prime minister. If this historic event can help to bring tens of thousands of frustrated voters back to the Labor Party, only time will tell. But there is nothing to indicate that the last few dramatic days herald a new political age. The deep-reaching movements which we have been able to note among the voters for a long time now, which have their origin in political and sociological conditions, will not be changed overnight--even by a pioneering woman with unusual political ambitions. Whether the prime minister is called Odvar Nordli or Gro Harlem Brundtland the government's policies will in the main be the same, bound as they are by a party program with clear socialist objectives. Even though the policies may be marketed somewhat differently with Gro Harlem Brundtland as prime minister, their contents will remain the same.

In the situation which arose when Odvar Nordli was unable to determine the procedure for choosing his successor, the way was open for Gro Harlem Brundtland to become prime minister. In the government's central circles and amongst the party's top leadership there was very probably a majority which would have preferred Rolf Hansen, and there can be no doubt that in such a case our political leadership would have been in safe hands. But after a period in which the party and the government had been losing popular confidence from month to month and in which disagreements and conflicts came more and more to dominate the ruling party's total situation, the time was quite simply not right for a "Hansen solution."

When the news of the prime minister's imminent resignation was leaked, contrary to the leadership's calculations, the party's "grassroots" took the matter into their own hands and simply demanded that Gro Harlem Brundtland should take over the post of prime minister. This demand, which was heard quite clearly from local parties throughout the country, was the result of a slowly growing admission that the ruling party is now in need of political renewal, a new leader who can have a rallying effect and inspire members to new efforts. In this situation, just a few months before a critical Storting election, it must have seemed like a political impossibility to pass over Gro Harlem Brundtland. If the Labor Party had done so, this would have led to an open party and personality struggle, more damaging and irreconcilable than at anytime in the Labor Party's more recent history.

The appointment of Gro Harlem Brundtland as prime minister will have a vitalizing and rallying effect on a party which is deep in the doldrums. From the point of view of election tactics it was a clever move to back a female prime minister, who would immediately give the impression of representing something new in everyday politics. In a time of transition this in itself will be able to appeal to a large number of floating voters, perhaps primarily to younger people who will be able to find in her a political leader with whom they can identify. But we fully realize that the change of prime minister will for a short time divert attention from the harmful effects of the ruling party's policies. This could give it quite a few Gallup points in the coming months.

But there is much to indicate that the success will be relatively short term. The times are not in tune with the Labor Party's political solutions, and this is a circumstance which even Gro Harlem Brundtland will not be able to do anything about.

PRIME MINISTER EXAMINES DETENTE WITH USSR

LD051307 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 5 Feb 81 p 32

[James Wightman report: "Detente Must Be Two-Way Matter, Says Thatcher"]

[Text] The prime minister said last night that she "really longed" for detente with Russia but she emphasized that it had to be "a two-way, reciprocal business."

The detente she wanted was "so that all of those agreements which we signed at Helsinki would be brought into practice, that we would have free movement of peoples and ideas, that the peoples in the Soviet Union would come to enjoy those freedoms we know."

But she added: "The fact is that in the last year the oppression in the Soviet Union, the oppression of people who wanted to say what they thought, has been even greater than previously. We cannot ignore what is happening."

Mrs Thatcher was speaking in an interview on Dutch television in advance of her one-day visit to Holland tomorrow. The interviewer asked her: "Don't you think with the Germans, that the Russians are there on their borders. They have invested so much that for them detente might mean something different from what it might mean to Washington?"

She replied: "No, no. If you have someone just beyond your borders who is a threat to you, you must never weaken. Otherwise your future will not be sure. Never weaken. Never."

Mrs Thatcher was also reminded about growing resistance to the stationing of cruise missiles in Europe. She replied: "I sometimes wish that those who do resist them would really turn all their effort to saying to the Soviet Union: 'Look, you have the most modern up-to-date theatre nuclear weapons in the SS20, known the world over. You have them targetted on every country in Europe. You increase their numbers at the rate of rather more than one a week. Do you really expect us just to sit back and do nothing? If you want us not to have cruise missiles in Europe as a deterrent to your using yours, then dismantle yours. Take them down. Agree to be inspected so that we know what you are doing. Take up the offer which the whole of NATO made. Yes, so long as you have your SS20s, we will have cruise missiles, but please negotiate immediately'."

Mrs Thatcher said that if Russia were to take up NATO's offer quickly, "we could perhaps negotiate the numbers down or even perhaps not have them at all. But the true reality is that the Soviet Union has not taken up that offer: that the Soviet Union continues to add to the numbers week by week.

"Never, never, never negotiate from weakness. There is only one way to deter and that is to have equal strength, so that he knows that if ever he used his, then he would in fact have to suffer such terrible consequences that he could not think of using his."

THATCHER SAYS NEUTRON BOMB UNLIKELY TO BE UK-BASED

[Text] It is very unlikely that the neutron bomb will need to be based in Britain, the prime minister told the Commons today.

Mrs Thatcher came under strong pressure during question time to give an assurance that the government would not agree to the bomb being based in Europe. She said the purpose of a neutron bomb was to attack the massive concentrations of armoury in the Warsaw Pact countries. "Therefore, it would be very unlikely that such weapons would need to be based here," she said.

Opposition leader Mr Foot challenged Mrs Thatcher over suggestions that the new Reagan administration in the United States was considering producing the bomb for siting in Europe. It was an "extremely serious and dangerous suggestion," he said.

And Mr Foot told Mrs Thatcher: "Do you not agree that the one aspect of this matter that would be extremely dangerous for everyone in Europe would be that it could reduce the level of the nuclear threshold." Mr Foot urged: "What steps will your government now take to try and ensure that this and kindred weapons are never stationed in Europe at all?"

Mrs Thatcher told him that so far, her government had not been asked to look at any new proposal. But she added the U.S. defence secretary had said the allies would be fully consulted before any decision was reached.

Mrs Thatcher told Mr Frank Allaun (Lab Salfore E), who urged her to tell President Reagan that if he wanted to relax East-West tensions developing the neutron bomb was not the way, that she was quite certain Russia had as many nuclear weapons as it wanted. "It has put an enormous concentration of resources into the research and technology of weapons of destruction in preference to the consumer standard of living of her own society," she said.

DAILY TELEGRAPH VOICES SUPPORT FOR NEUTRON BOMB

LD051313 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 5 Feb 81 p 16

[Editorial: "The Neutron Nettle"]

[Text] By reviving the neutron weapon project the Reagan administration has given further impressive proof of its determination to act quickly in every possible way to reduce Russia's dangerous military lead, and not to shirk controversy in the process. There is still no doubt that the weapon would be ideal for reducing Russia's ability, based on a four-fold tank superiority, to achieve massive armoured break-throughs. President Carter postponed production of the warheads two years ago because he was not sufficiently convinced that European governments and public opinions, subjected to a massive left-wing anti-neutron propaganda campaign, would accept their deployment when ready. In the meantime the balance has shifted further against NATO, while by general consent Russia's mounting difficulties at home and abroad have increased the danger of diversionary action by her. Thus the case for the "neutron" is stronger than ever.

At the same time there are ominous signs that the effectiveness of the left's anti-nuclear campaign is growing and that, especially in the smaller NATO countries its influence is spreading towards the centre. It is still unclear whether two years ago Chancellor Schmidt, who prevailed over his left wingers in the neutron question without changing their implacable opposition, gave Mr Carter explicit assurances. Certainly doubt was legitimate as to whether he would have been able to implement them. Since then Herr Schmidt did much to restore confidence by forcing through acceptance of medium-range nuclear weapons when they are ready in a few years' time, although he was obliged to accept a whole range of vitiating conditions. Latterly however there has been proof of serious disarray in the German Social Democrat Party on a whole series of fronts, and an upsurge of the left's influence accompanied by violent demonstrations.

The difficulty that Bonn is having in overcoming protest, much of it with official provincial socialist backing, against the implementation of a nuclear power programme that is now dangerously in arrears, does not create a favourable situation for another bite at the neutron. The situation in the smaller NATO countries, which are still dragging their feet on the medium-range weapons issue, is to say the least no more promising. The campaign against the neutron weapon two years ago, in which Russia deployed the whole range of her propaganda arsenal as never before, was an unprecedented triumph for her. The howls of simulated outrage already coming from Moscow over the neutron issue give clear warning of what is to be expected this time. Recent trends in the Labour Party make it certain that the propaganda battle, from which Britain was relatively immune two years ago, will rage here too against Mrs Thatcher's expected approval of the latest American move. It would be an intolerable situation if a weapon that is now more than ever necessary to the West's defence should not be produced for fear of a Russian-orchestrated left-wing propaganda campaign, however violent.

RIZOSPASTIS: BASES WILL SUPPORT U.S.-NATO GOALS

[From the "Political Issues" column: "Bases Undermine Greek Relations With Neighboring Countries"]

[Excerpts] To date, very few comparative facts have emerged on the specific role played by U.S.-NATO installations in Greece within the more general system of the imperialist presence in the area. Nobody, however, doubts their vital importance, which is underlined by periodic revealing admissions of NATO and Pentagon leading personalities; by documents from state services; and primarily by certain developments affecting peace and stability in the eastern Mediterranean and the Balkans.

There is no doubt that the bases were used in the past and that U.S. installations in Greece are among the main supports for U.S. plans in the Middle East. Their importance increased with the fall of the shah and the changes in Iran, a fact that was never concealed by the NATO allies. Open admissions and revelations even reached the press on plans to turn the Greece-Cyprus-Turkey triangle into a Western beachhead directed against the Persian Gulf oil wells--plans that the coup in Turkey, Greece's reintegration within NATO and the imminent signing of the Greek-U.S. agreement are apparently aimed at assisting.

The government naturally argues that today's Greece, particularly after the settlement of its relations with NATO and the EEC, plays a more general, beneficial and stabilizing role in the area. By using such arguments, the government tries to camouflage such acts of national treason as the reintegration within NATO while simultaneously addressing itself to the "allies" and stating that it understands and accepts the division of responsibility they dictate. Greece is earmarked to play the part of an EEC bridge toward the Arab states--a bridge that will facilitate the EEC's penetration into the Arab labor and commodity markets as well as stabilize and strengthen its positions in the oil-producing areas of the Persian Gulf and Middle East.

Within the framework of NATO, on the other hand, Greece was used as an attack base against developments in the Arab states. This could again be repeated tomorrow through some adventurist maneuver by the imperialists, who themselves do not conceal that Greece has been entrusted with the responsibility of supporting their actions in the Middle East and Persian Gulf. How can the Arab states remain indifferent to all this?

The government's declarations about friendship with the Arab states are not enough, particularly when they are used to camouflage a policy that in fact is not at all friendly and that ignores the interests of peace as well as our own country's interests in developing sincere cooperation with the Arab states.

The bases, therefore, act as a brake and in fact set fire to Greece's relations with its neighbors. We only have to stress the emphatic assurance of the Soviet Union that it will not turn against any country that does not possess and that does not host nuclear weapons on its territory in order to underline the importance of a different trend in Greek foreign policy that will be established without the influence, pressure or interests of Washington, NATO and the EEC of the monopolies.

KODISO, KKE CRITICIZE RALLIS, PAPANDREOU SPEECHES

NC051604 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 5 Feb 81 p 8

[Text] "Polarization downgrades our political life to a show between two duelists, a show all Greeks are asked to watch as indifferent spectators. However, there will be no winner this way, with the big loser being the country itself."

This statement was made by KODISO [Party of Democratic Socialism] Chairman I. Pezmazoglou during his conversation yesterday with newspaper political editors. Pezmazoglou was referring to recent speeches by ND [New Democracy] leader Y. Rallis and PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou.

I. Pezmazoglou described as "crazy" allegation by Y. Rallis that New Democracy had brought about change. He also noted that "PASOK's allegation that it is the only party that brings change is contradictory to the concept of change and moreover offers a prop for the one-party mentality and tactics of the ruling party."

The KODISO chairman further criticized the government for rejecting the simple proportional representation [electoral system] and other measures for the irreproachable expression of the people's will. He also criticized PASOK for "refusing to raise these issues in the Chamber of Deputies together with the other democratic parties."

Pezmazoglou went on: "Thus, the forthcoming elections cannot be genuine, and without genuine elections, there cannot be genuine change."

Finally, Pezmazoglou called on "all those who realize the consequences of such a procedure to rally their forces together and demand not only honest elections but also the confidence of the democratic and progressive world."

The KKE Central Committee press bureau has made the following comment on the prime minister's speech:

"Mr Rallis' remarks about PASOK, communism and so forth prove that the cooperation of all the forces favoring a change is exactly what the rightwing is afraid of and could secure its definite defeat. Therefore, it is the duty of these forces to determinedly promote their cooperation by neutralizing the tricks and pressures of the rightwing."

NEWS REPORTS ROUSSOS MEETING WITH TURKISH ENVOY

[Text] Tuesday's meeting between the Foreign Ministry's secretary general, Mr Roussos, and Turkey's ambassador to Athens, Mr Alacam, was part of a series of demarches by Ankara to NATO capitals on the issue that has arisen in connection with the 7:10 ratio of military aid to Greece and Turkey, a ratio Athens insists must be preserved, while Ankara finds it unacceptable, press sources reported yesterday.

Maintenance of the 7:10 ratio is one of Greece's preconditions for signing a new Greek-U.S. defense treaty regulating the future status of U.S. military bases in Greece. Negotiations on the new treaty are currently under way in Athens, but have reportedly made no real progress because of differences of opinion on this issue.

Another point threatening to lead the talks to an impasse is Ankara's refusal to permit disclosure of some secret protocols accompanying the U.S.-Turkey defense treaty signed last year. Greece insists on being informed on all provisions of that treaty that might be related to Greek security or affect the balance of power in the region.

According to press sources, Messrs Roussos and Alacam discussed those differences, and clarifications from the Turkish side may be forthcoming in the next few days following Mr Alacam's briefing of his superiors in Ankara.

The Roussos-Alacam meeting, combined with the fact that no date has been set for the next meeting between the secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries, create to many observers the impression that negotiations on the future of the bases have met with serious obstacles, and that a long period of consultations will be required before a breakthrough can be achieved.

THATCHER MEETS WITH VAN AGT, DISCUSSES ISSUES

LD062311 London BBC Television Network in English 2100 GMT 6 Feb 81

[Excerpt] The prime minister has been visiting The Netherlands, the first time a British prime minister has been to Holland for 14 years. The talks between Mrs Thatcher and Mr Andreas van Agt were mainly about the EEC. The problem over a fishing agreement was discussed, along with nuclear weapons and the Dutch attitude to cruise missiles. But Mrs Thatcher and Mr van Agt were not the only European leaders who are meeting this week, as John Humphrys reports:

[Begin recording] It has been quite a week for Europe's leaders getting together. While Mrs Thatcher was leaving for Holland, President Giscard of France was greeting Chancellor Schmidt of Germany. They are the most powerful pair in Europe, but they both have big problems at home, especially Giscard, who is facing an election the opinion polls say he could lose. They denied recent reports that their partnership is under some strain these days, to the disappointment of those who resent their domination of Europe. The smaller countries like Holland rather hoped that when Britain joined the EEC the balance might be tilted a little more in their favor, that the British sense of fair play might see them championing the European underdog. In fact, even before Mrs Thatcher arrived here for her first visit to Holland as prime minister, she was being asked by the Dutch why Britain was not succeeding in ending the Franco-German axis. Mrs Thatcher says it's ended already, and much of today's discussion centered on the problems Britain will face when we take over the presidency of the EEC from Holland in July.

It was all very relaxed when Mrs Thatcher met Queen Beatrix but there are some differences between Britain and Holland over fish catches in Europe, with Holland dumping unwanted fish on the British market. But it is the French being blamed for blocking a new fisheries agreement, one which Mrs Thatcher told me was almost reached last year.

[Thatcher] We ought to have got it and just something's come up at the last moment which prevented it. But the vast majority of the European countries want it.

[Question] Is it the French being dog in the manger?

[Answer] The French cannot yet bring themselves wholly to agree.

[Question] That seemed a very diplomatic answer. Are they being very difficult?

[Answer] I have to be very diplomatic if I am to secure an agreement which our people want, and that's the thing that I have to keep in mind. We want the agreement. We want a reasonable agreement for our industry and we want it soon. [end recording]

ALGERIANS SEEK AGRICULTURE, ECONOMIC TIES

[An Salononson dispatch: "Algeria Sees Netherlands as Good Trade Partner"]

[Text] Algiers, 3 Feb--Algeria thinks that The Netherlands has become an acceptable partner, and would like to balance the improved political understanding with closer economic cooperation. Algeria will welcome a visit from Economic Affairs Minister van Aardenne.

Minister van der Klaauw, at present visiting Algiers, discussed Dutch participation in agricultural projects with Algerian Agriculture Minister Selim Saadi this morning.

The message which Van der Klaauw was given by his opposite number Ben Yahia and by President Chadli Bendjedid and Prime Minister Mohamed Ben Ahmed Abdelghani was that they are aiming at intensive economic cooperation with The Netherlands. The Algerians are therefore hoping that Minister van Aardenne will visit them shortly. They want to discuss the exploitation of natural gas resources, the building of pipelines and so on with The Netherlands as well as agricultural projects. A framework agreement will be signed and a mixed commission set up.

Algerian agriculture offers great chances for Dutch industry. In the 1980-1984 5-year plan, 9 million guilders are available for this sector. The Netherlands would be first to be considered for projects connected with water supply and irrigation, poultry and dairy management and the development of potato and garden produce cultivation. Now that the Algerian political leaders have given their approval, it is hoped that The Netherlands will soon be able to start on concrete projects.

For the time being Van Aardenne will wait for more specific Algerian initiatives on gas contracts. Economic Affairs Ministry sources said that it is up to Algeria to get talks going again. The ministry is waiting for concrete proposals.

Last year the Algerians had put off the question of gas supplies after they had decided not to build a new factory for liquefied natural gas before 1985. As a result of this, the Algerians were unable to comply with the contract signed with The Netherlands gas union, which provided for the supply of 5.6 billion cubic meters of gas per year from 1983.

PAPERS COMMENT ON GERMAN-FRENCH TALKS IN PARIS

[Text] SCHWARZWALDER BOTE advocates the view that the German-French consultations in Paris are overshadowed by uncertainty about the course which President Reagan actually will take in international affairs, about the way in which future East-West relations will develop and about future developments in Poland. The editorial says: Besides, the presidential elections in France are overshadowed by uncertainty because Giscard d'Estaing has to struggle against tangible losses of French public confidence. And finally, Chancellor Schmidt is burdened heavily by coalition problems and quarrels in his own party. Thus, no great exuberance is to be expected. Everything instead indicates a climate of sobriety and objective discussion of difficult problems. In view of the change in the international scenery, that plan for attaining greater world prestige for Europe, fostered by President Giscard d'Estaing and Chancellor Schmidt last year, might as well be shelved and put in the archives of the state chancelleries.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG stresses: The 37th German-French summit was supposed to stand under the sign of better cultural relations, but again priority was given to the political situation. Schmidt and Giscard d'Estaing want to outline a joint attitude toward the most important political issues. A glance over the ocean to Washington, where Reagan sets the political guidelines, forces one to do that. The future course with regard to the East also calls for careful analysis. The French president recently has made remarkable statements on the subject of East-West relations. He clearly realizes that the earlier detente efforts have fully worked to the advantage of Moscow and that a policy of stabilization must now be initiated. Schmidt's thoughts are probably rather similar, although he has to handle the German-German aspect as a special problem in all East-West contacts.

LUEBECKER NACHRICHTEN maintains: Helmut Schmidt and Valery Giscard d'Estaing want to use the 2 days of German-French consultations to dispel the rumors about discord between France and the Federal Republic and about cooler relations between the chancellor and the president. But if the extreme leftists of the SPD succeed in sabotaging Helmut Schmidt's defense and security policy, fatal effects on accord with Paris would be inevitable. The fact thatthe SPD deputies in the European Parliament, headed by Willy Brandt, on the first day of the chancellor's visit to Paris staged a sympathy demonstration for Francois Mitterrand, the Socialist candidate for president, is a signal Schmidt can hardly ignore--not to mention the poor style expressed in the timing of such action.

YOUTH GROUPS' CHAIRMEN OPPOSE ARMS ACTIVITY

[Excerpts] Hamburg, 7 Feb (DPA)--The federal chairmen of the Young Socialists and the Young Democrats today spoke out against increasing German arms exports.

In an interview with Radio Free Berlin today, however, the FDP parliamentary group foreign policy spokesman, Juergen Moellemann, said that the Federal Republic ought to supply Saudi Arabia with the desired Leopard II tanks because its position on the Persian Gulf means that this country is of special strategic importance. Saudi Arabia plays an outstanding role as a stabilizing factor in the Gulf region and supports in the Arab camp those forces which want to "steer a moderate course."

Christoph Staesser, federal chairman of the Young Democrats, and Karsten Voigt, SPD lower house deputy, also spoke out against the manufacture of the neutron bomb and its deployment in West Europe. In a Radio Bremen interview, Voigt said that apart from weighty moral objections against the introduction of this weapons system, there also are defense policy arguments. In the meantime, a number of conventional weapons have been developed which fulfill the same purpose as the neutron bomb. Straesser said that to make this weapon available is to lower the nuclear threshold and to make nuclear war more probable. He said that SPD federal manager Egon Bahr's argument that the neutron bomb is "a perversion of human thinking" is still valid.

The chairman of the FDP parliamentary group, Wolfgang Mischnick, clarifies Moellemann's statement: "This is the personal opinion of Deputy Moellemann and does not represent a resolution by the FDP parliamentary group."

DIE WELT COMMENTS ON 'SHOCK' OVER NEUTRON TALK

[Commentary signed Kem.: "Bomb Shock"]

[Text] Washington is seeking to reduce the spreading effect of the neutron shock. The surprise present by Caspar Weinberger came down on Europe without any preparation and all out in public. The allies' reaction alarmed the Reagan Cabinet where the secretary of state probably had been left as uninformed about the incident solo by the Pentagon chief as the colleagues in Bonn, the Hague and Brussels had been.

Even if Haig had been surprised by the excited flight of the Europeans from the shock wave of this hot issue, all he would have needed to do was go back to the early period of this project to calculate the initially counterproductive effect of its brusque publication. On arms issues, some alliance partners always calculate the deterrence of their own left-wings first.

A quickly erupting quarrel in the alliance abets emotions which the opponents of counter-arming skillfully introduce into the debate on the Brussels decisions. However, the incident in the dialogue should not be overrated. The matter at issue will not disappear from the agenda because what Weinberger announced is in keeping with Reagan's program. But the new administration could more easily ensure the good will of the Europeans, or at least most of their governments, for itself if diplomatic consultations were to replace public talk as soon as possible.

WILLY BRANDT INTERVIEWED ON STATE OF PARTY

DW091220 Mainz Domestic Television Service in German 1800 GMT 7 Feb 81

[Text] [Question] Deputy Wischnewski has said that the SPD is facing its hardest test.

[Answer] No, I do not believe this is the proper way of putting it. What we are facing at the moment is not an SPD crisis, but rather excitement on the part of people who bear mandates and some others. Naturally, these are difficult problems regarding content. This will have to be discussed. I have remained silent for 2 months; I would like to voice my opinion on Wednesday to the party executive board.

[Question] On whom do the negative headlines inflict more harm, the coalition or the party?

[Answer] They cannot be separated so simply. But the SPD will make it clear at the session of its exectuive board on Wednesday that it is determined, and in which way it is determined, to implement its responsibility in Bonn. I am very certain that almost everybody speaking on behalf of the SPD will agree to that. I have a 5-point program in mind, but I would like to wait on that until the executive board meeting on Wednesday.

REPORTAGE ON CLOSING OF FRENCH-GERMAN SUMMIT

Giscard Comments

[Text] The 37th French-German summit has ended. Chancellor Helmut Schmidt started his 2d day in Paris with a working breakfast with Raymond Barre at the Hotel Matignon. He then had more tete-a-tete talks with President Giscard d'Estaing. The summit ended with a joint French-German statement. Less than half an hour ago, Dominique Souchier recorded a statement made by the head of state at the Elysee. Mr Giscard d'Estaing summed up the main points and insisted on two fundamental demands [exigences]:

[Begin recording] A demand first of all for balance in security, where we insist on a global balance of forces while at the same time excluding the acceptance of a situation of weakness as well as the search for military superiority. Then, a demand for moderation in political behavior. In this respect, we stress that it is essential that Poland be able to solve its serious problems alone, in a peaceful manner and without foreign interference. We have reviewed a number of situations in the world and I note in particular that the FRG and France support the Lagos and Lome agreements regarding the independence of Chad. [end recording]

France-FRG Statement

[Text] Paris, 6 Feb (DPA)--The following is the text of the German-French statement published on Friday:

"The president of the French Republic and the federal chancellor of the FRG have made a detailed examination of the international situation, its deterioration and the necessary endeavors to restore it.

They intend to oppose that which has led toward destabilization and the ensuing threats to the future of peace with joint and determined actions by their two countries. In order to attain this aim, they express their determination to cooperate with the new American administration in a trustful manner.

They intend to establish the importance of the three demands on which the stabilization of the East-West relationship and the maintenance of peace depend.

The first demand deals with the security-political equilibrium. It precludes the acceptance of a position of weakness as much as the striving for military supremacy. It presupposes that the efforts for arms limitation and arms redution take account of the principle of the global balance of strength. It requires both watchfulness and dialogue.

The FRG and France contribute toward the safeguarding of the security-political equilibrium by emphasizing anew their loyalty to the obligations of the Atlantic alliance, note their determination to maintain the defense effort entailed for them by membership of the alliance and advocate a conference on disarmament in Europe which initially has as its aim the adoption of confidence-building measures which are to be applied from the Atlantic to the Urals.

The next demand deals with moderation during political actions. Moderation primarily is made the obligation in relations between the signatory states of the Helsinki final act, who have laid down the rules for it. It also means basically that Poland must be in a position to resolve its serious problems on its own, peacefully and without outside interference.

Moderation is incompatible everywhere--inside and outside Europe--with resorting to force, with the policy of accomplished facts and with attempts to obtain unilateral advantages. The FRG and France point to their declaration of 5 Febuary 1980, confirm that they maintain their condemnation of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and recall that detente will not be able to withstand a similar blow.

In the face of a crisis or a conflicting situation, the demand for moderation must also result in political solutions being sought which means solutions which are negotiated with the participation of all interested parties. This is the purpose of the efforts made by the Europeans in the Middle East, of the Namibian initiative by the five and the proposal made by France concerning Afghanistan. This is to the same degree the purpose of the support given by the FRG and France to the Lagos and Lome agreements on the independence of Chad.

The final demand deals with the equality of responsibility concerning the great world problems. The struggle against hunger, poverty and underdevelopment, the restoration of monetary and economic stability through a more moderate development of oil prices, as well as the utilization of nuclear energy serving solely peaceful means--these are universal tasks. These aims can only then be attained if due regard is paid to the independence and self-governemnt of the states and peoples of the Third World and is their striving for true nonalignement is recognized. It is necessary that in the sphere of economic aid all countries of the world, regardless of their state order, make an appropriate contribution to the establishment of an international system in which all peoples see their security, prospects for their progress, regard for their dignity and their freedom safeguarded.

In the definition of these orientations, the FRG and France are aware of Europe's obligations in solidarity with their eight partners.

The overcoming of the present difficulties in the European Community, the strengthening of Europe's political cohesion, the safeguarding of economic progress are tasks of prime importance which must be resolved so that Europe may regain the role which corresponds to its historical traditions.

'Cultural Statement'

[Text] Paris, 6 Feb (DPA)--French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at the 37th German-French summit in Paris have given strong support to the expansion and deepening of cultural exchange between Germany and France. A joint statement released on Friday advocates primarily the promotion of language knowledge.

This "cultural statement" also contains, as expected, the establishment by France in Paris of a "center for information and research on contemporary Germany." According to observers, it could become the French counterpart to the German-French Institute in Ludwigsburg.

The statement stresses that the Paris center should "promote, coordinate and further develop studies on Germany." It is to give to all users, including ethnic societies and enterprises, "information about present-day scientific, technological, cultural, economic and political affairs in Germany."

The German-French statement attributes great importance to the cooperation of radio and television for the development of German-French friendship. However, it does not contain the proposal made by Federal Chancellor Schmidt yesterday when he was awarded an honorary doctorate by the Sorbonne. Schmidt proposed a jointly produced program to be transmitted over a common television channel in both countries.

Giscard and Schmidt welcomed an action program for increasing and improving the teaching of both languages formulated by a relevant commission of experts. The program envisages that "the regional availability of the teaching of the other language as a voluntary and obligatory subject be made as favorable as possible."

Students and parents are to be better motivated toward the learning of the language and further training of teachers promoted through increased exchanges. Knowledge about the two countries is to be increasingly conveyed in other subjects, such as history and geography. The availability of further education is to be promoted outside the school and pilot projects set up to increase interest in each other's country and its language, the statement notes.

Universities and research centers also are asked to increase exchanges. For this, they should reach special agreements making possible better studies, research and teaching in the partner country. Qualified researchers are to be given the opportunity of continuing their research in the partner country through the granting of annual stipends and prizes.

The statement limits itself to a considerable degree to welcoming existing establishments of cultural exchange. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt stressed already last night that because of the cultural sovereignty of the federal laender, there is only a little scope in the cultural sphere. The joint statement thus must be seen as one of the signals which in the chancellor's view must be made by politicians. It then depends on organizations and individuals doing something themselves so that the cultural exchange, as the French press notes, "does not become the poor relation of the German-French family." This applies primarily to language teaching, which was stressed so much at this summit and which depends on the interests of parents and students.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON COOPERATION WITH FRG

[Text] [Question] The 37th German-French consultation round is taking place in a particular world-political context, in a situation characterized by tensions and a deterioration of the international climate. My first question: How do you see, in view of this world situation, the political prospects for German-French cooperation?

[Answer] German-French cooperation is based on a well-considered decision corresponding to the will of our government and our people. This cooperation is exemplary. It is more necessary today than ever before. It is necessary for the development of our bilateral relations. But it is also necessary for the organization of Europe so that it can take the place it is entitled to with regard to current world affairs. It is also necessary for the security of Europe and the balance of East-West relations. It is designed to lead us to common coordination with regard to the events taking place in the world. All this should make us, together with our partners in the community, raise the voice of Europe.

[Question] Moscow and Washington stand in the limelight at present. What role can be played by France and the Federal Republic in the current world-political situation vis-a-vis the two superpowers?

[Answer] It is clear that mutual political coordination between France and the Federal Republic is particularly important if relations between the United States and the Soviet Union are involved. Regarding the United States, you may recall that on 10 November, when Chancellor Schmidt was visiting Paris, he and Mr Giscard d'Estaing said they were both happy to see a strong America, ready to take over its international responsibility. They found that it is even more necessary to end Europe's withdrawal from world affairs so that a natural and friendly dialogue can take place between Europe and the United States.

Regarding the Soviet Union, it is sufficient to point out the text of the German-Franch statement signed on 5 February 1980 to prove the accordance between our two countries and their opinion on relations with the Soviet Union.

[Question] You are responsible for the foreign policy of a country which always attributed special significance to a dialogue with Moscow. How do you assess today the current state and further development of East-West relations?

[Answer] It is clear that East-West relations have deteriorated since the Soviet action in Afghanistan. They must be stabilized. This means that the process of deterioration must be stopped. East-West relations, however, cannot be stable if one side tries to make this or that region unstable. I have America in mind, for example. This pertains also to other regions of the world.

East-West relations cannot be stable if the balance of forces is changed or if this or that party tries to gain superiority. East-West relations cannot be stable if the golden rule of relations is violated. This rule is quite simple: No use of force in relations between states. We have strongly recalled this lately on the occasion of the events in Poland.

GISCARD DISCUSSES FRENCH ROLE AS INTERLOCUTOR

[Excerpts] In an interview published in the weekly JOURS DE FRANCE Wednesday, 4 February, Valery Giscard d'Estaing indicated that his "concern" is that "all undertakings should effectively be carried out."

Mentioning the criticism leveled at his foreign policy, the president of the Republic stated: "One of the criticisms leveled at me which I regard as most fundamentally inaccurate is the criticism of my visit to Warsaw for talks with Mr Brezhnev. I would understand fully if I had been criticized for agreeing with Mr Brezhnev on some decision which might have been bad for France. That criticism would have been justified. However, for the French head of state to be an interlocutor in cases of world tension, for him to say things which, in my view, subsequently proved useful, is what maintaining France's place in history means.

"Those who criticized me for going to Warsaw think deep down inside that France is no longer capable of debating directly with the great leaders and that it should leave that to others who will jump at the chance."

Giscard d'Estaing also stressed "that there is a very strong European identity which should be followed through" and that it is ncessary to "pay very great attention to the confederal concept." He advocated "complete and definitive" agreement between France and the FRG.

MISSILE-LAUNCHING BOATS TO BE DELIVERED TO IRAN

[Text] France will deliver to Iran three missile-launching boats which have been blocked in Cherbourg. According to correspondent Ralph Pinto, it was announced last night that the contract will be honored.

[Begin Pinto recording] First, the embargo against Iran has been lifted now that the hostages affair is over. Second, there are these boats, an issue which France considers within the purview of its economic relations with Iran. Iran backed out of dozens and dozens of contracts 2 years ago after the revolution.

Incomplete arrangements amount to some FR10 billion without counting these missile-launching boats which are ready but which should be inspected before delivery. They are to be handed over to Iranian crews but as yet have not been fully paid for; some FR30 million are still missing. Let us also point out that France delivered three boats to Iran after the overthrow of the monarchy. This shows that the first deliveries of Mirage F-1 planes to Iraq last week did not represent an advantage given to Iraq in the Gulf war. One would think that on the arrival of an Iranian delegation next week in Paris things will be settled to the satisfaction of Tehran. [end recording]

LE MONDE BACKGROUNDS VANUATU DEVELOPMENTS

[P. de B. report: "Paris To Recall Aid Workers"]

[Text] Following the Port-Vila government's decision to expel the French ambassador, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Olivier Stirn said on France-Inter Tuesday, 3 February, "We will recall our aid workers from Vanuatu in the next few days." "This will end a period which we had fully accepted and desired. We regret what has happened but, of course, we have to draw the obvious conclusions."

At this stage, it seems that an initial contingent of aid workers--there are a total of around 200--already has been recalled. It is not yet known whether all voluntary workers will be recalled or whether those who are going to leave are teachers running the French-speaking schools, presently on vacation.

For its part, the Port-Vila government has issued a statement justifying Mr Rodrigues' expulsion. This text states that Barak Sope, Prime Minister Walter Lini's principal private secretary, was not informed that he could not attend the Kanaka secessionist front meeting when he was given his visa for New Caledonia; he was informed only as he was about to board the plane. The rest of the communique gives a confused explanation of Port-Vila's stance on the diplomatic imbroglio which led to the de facto break between the two countries on the eve of the signing of cooperation agreements.

Mr Lini, for his part, Tuesday issued a statement blaming Mr Rodrigues rather than the French Government for the incident. "This decision," he said, "was taken more in sadness than in anger. The Vanuatu Government will continue to seek the best possible relations with France and asks the Paris government to play its part in achieving that."

It might, however, be thought that the expulsion of an ambassador within 24 hours is not the best way of "seeking the best possible relations." Even if the young government is not very well trained in diplomatic usage, it could have shown more competence. Its tougher line seems to date from last week, although it generally was thought that the cooperation process was going to be set up. It was at that point that there was a technical cabinet reshuffle and also, according to some sources in Port-Vila, that France proposed last-minute changes in the agreements, prompting irritation in the Vanuatu Government.

The latter is influenced by some Anglo-Saxon advisers who seem to be acting irresponsibly. For instance, the government spokesman, in a telephone conversation with the TIMES correspondent in Australia, stated that he expected Paris to break off diplomatic relations and was contemplating setting up a New Caledonian government in exile in Vanuatu. Some people are suggesting that French aid will be replaced by Australian aid, but Canberra does not seem to have any such intention at present. Nonetheless, it should be noted that two New Caledonian separatist leaders Yanne Uregei and Francois Otanari are due to arrive in Sydney soon to take part as observers in an Asia-Pacific socialist organization conference.

Windows along the avenue were broken, but police said that the explosive devices were relatively low powered.

ALGERIAN ENERGY MINISTER MEETS FORLANI, COLOMBO

AU071613 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 7 Feb 81

[Text] Rome, 7 Feb (ANSA)--An assessment of relations between Italy and Algeria for the purpose of upgrading cooperation across the boards, and especially in the energy sector, was conducted today by the Algerian energy and petrochemical industries minister, Belkacem Nabi, in consultation with Italian Prime Minister Arnaldo Forlani, Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and State Industries Minister Gianni De Michelis.

Earlier in the day, the Algerian cabinet official, who arrived in Italy Thursday to begin a working visit, met with head of state Sandro Pertini.

During his meeting with the prime minister and the foreign and state industries ministers, Nabi was flanked by the Algerian ambassador to Rome, Omar Oussedik.

The communique released at the end of the encounter identified the main topic of the talks as "an assessment of bilateral relations for the purpose of strengthening economic cooperation in various sectors and especially in the energy field."

The communique also mentioned that Algerian oil and natural gas supplies may be "accompanied by the enlarged participation of Italian industry in Algeria's development plan for 1980-84."

Also touched on during the consultation, according to the communique, were "policy issues in relation to which it is possible and useful to develop relations between the two countries (which are) equally interested in balance in the Mediterranean region, North-South cooperation, security and peace."

On the second day of his visit here, the Algerian energy minister met with Industry Minister Filippo Maria Pandolfi and the chairman of the National Hydrocarbons Agency (ENI) Alberto Grandi.

The major topic under discussion between Nabi and Italian Government officials and public and private industry figures in energy in general and Algerian oil and natural gas supplies for the nation in particular.

Further talks at the technical level will be conducted between "ENI" and Algeria's state-owned oil company, "Sonatrach."

PCI'S DI GIULIO DISPUTES FORLANI ON TERRORISM

LD061509 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 4 Feb 81 pp 1, 16

[Text] Rome--The Communists' profound disappointment with the prime minister's statements was expressed and explained to the Lower House yesterday by PCI floor leader Fernando Di Guilio. Forlani, he said, should have given a clear answer to a basic question, namely, whether the government is aware of any politically substantial factors which interfere with our country's national sovereignty. Instead, he has tried to disguise his reply by acknowledging, admittedly--albeit in a tortuous manner--that no such factors exist, while at the same time ambiguously rattling off such a long string of minor facts, suspicions, doubts and uncertainties that they justify the authors of the uproar in continuing along the same path.

In short, the prime minister declined to state clearly how things stand; and he could not do so because he took into account the requirements of the majority and therefore did not want to thoroughly quash a certain kind of initiative in which even prominent members of the majority itself and of the government have played a leading role. This recurring campaign, this system of saying and yet not saying something, this alternation of statements (not backed up, moreover, by parliamentary initiatives) is harmful to national interests.

Indeed, it is not with campaigns of this kind, Di Giulio warned, that the antiterrorist struggle can be helped. In fact, this hullaballoo helps the terrorists, because there is a tendency to cast a halo around criminal undertakings at the very time when the state's action is dealing its heaviest blows. Perhaps this was not anybody's aim, but it is certainly an objective consequence.

The Communists have based their ideas on the need for a rigorous defense of national sovereignty from threats of danger from all sides, from every point of the compass. And it is a serious matter when others, like [Italian Social Democratic Party (PSDI) secretary], Deputy Pietro Longo, for instance, do not even dare to mention the need to defend Italy from any kind of interference, irrespective of its source. Their calculations and objectives are different. But with what political purpose? Fernando Di Giulio asked. Rationally we would have to reach the following conclusion, namely, that Deputy Longo and whoever else (including in the PSI) has joined him in this operation are convinced that in this instance the government is not doing its duty and that the security services are insufficiently committed to the quest for forms of foreign interference in Italian terrorism. This is a terrible suspicion concerning the government and could obviously challenge the very existence of the Forlani Cabinet. On the other hand, it would be entirely unacceptable for the government, faced with proven forms of foreign interference, not to react in the most decisive manner; it would imply acceptance of a limited view of our national sovereignty.

Is this the explanation? Are there doubts regarding the democratic sincerity of the government and of Defense Minister Lagorio, who bears prime responsibility for the security services? Or is this campaign aimed at furthering partisan interests, that is, at creating a disturbance whose polemics are aimed at the twofold targets of the Communists and the DC? If so, we would be faced with a very dangerous crisis. Indeed, when in a matter as important and delicate as this, partisan or party interests prevail over the nation's general interests, then the sides involved becomes factions, and neither states nor democracy can survive factions. Our country's long history is full of cases in which sides have become factions, and these processes have been accompanied by major historic disasters. Hence, Di Giulio's request for those speaking on behalf of the PSI and PSDI to make it clear that these suspicions do not reflect the truth, and to do so, he added, with arguments that will explain the real reason for the manifold initiatives that have been taken in this connection.

But the Communists' profound dissatisfaction with Forlani's statement is prompted by another reason too: The international context in which the prime minister decided to place this haphazard analysis of the hinterland of Italian terrorism. What should Italy's policy be in view of the increasing tensions in the world? Both as foreign minister [in the 1978 Andreotti government] and in the policy statements of his own government, Forlani expressed a very clear idea, with which the Communists agreed; in a world full of such dangerous tensions it is essential for us to work for detente and for a rapprochement between the two superpowers. Indeed, Di Giulio pointed out how in this connection Forlani spoke to the Lower House in extremely dramatic terms about the fact that, failing this, the world would become uncontrollable and the threats not only of local conflicts but even of a world conflict, a nuclear holocaust, would become a reality.

Deputy Forlani, Di Giulio asked next: What has happened to these thoughts of yours? Of course, new factors have emerged in the interim; the statements by the new U. S. President and his secretary of state; and it is also true that some Italian politicians, clearly very excitable and accustomed to dealing with foreign policy issues in a highly empirical manner, have rushed to jump on the dangerous bandwagon of Reagan's and Haig's remarks.

Despite these factors, today Forlani did not confirm our political course or the nature of Italy's voice in the system of its alliances; is it for the time being the same as the U.S. secretary of state's; or is it a policy of debating with the U.S. secretary of state so as to assert not only our own arguments but also our view of international relations? This is the problem and it is on this that our view of our alliances depends too. We do not believe, Di Giulio explained, in the survival of alliances in which some of the contracting sides conduct their dialogue in a servile manner. An alliance can only survive if each of its members asserts its own stances, arguments and beliefs and holds them up for comparison with those of the other members.

This does not mean that we are saying that the prime minister has just announced a policy different from the one that he has repeatedly announced to us before; but we do say that in his remarks there was an extraordinary and disturbing omission, which in the present situation justifies and opens the way to all kinds of interpretations and distortions of our foreign policy. And since nobody, least of all Deputy Forlani, can be unaware that some people are at present trying to alter the slant of our foreign policy, the failure to speak out now implies a failure to oppose such a tendency. And this is a substantial issue which prompts not only dissatisfaction with the reply to the Communists' interpellations and questions, Comrade Di Giulio concluded, but also concern regarding Italy's very role on the world scene.

SUAREZ ADDRESSES UCD CONGRESS 6 FEBRUARY

[Opening address by the former Spanish prime minister, Adolfo Suarez, at second National Congress of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD], in the Palma de Mallorca auditorium--live]

[Excerpts] Ladies and gentlemen delegates, my very dear [UCD] colleagues, ladies and gentlemen:

I understand that for some of you and for me this is a moment of great emotion, but we have to be able to completely overcome our feelings. We have to overcome emotionalism. We have to act calmly and unexcitedly. We must all make an effort to carry out this opening ceremony of our second congress with the utmost normality. I want my address--my last address as the UCD president--to be clarifying and sincere; I want it to serve as an element of reflection and calmness so that we might restate the moral rearmament of the party from positions of firmness and exemplariness. Let no one, therefore, expect of me other motives which would lend greater tension to the atmosphere. It is not my style, nor is it what, as a party and as the representation of a harmonious and hopeful Spain, we should be doing at the present time.

We have to get to work to provide an enlightening response, to seriously and responsibly approach the internal problems of our country and the general problems of our party. In my opinion, this is the only imperative demand of the present situation. And we must be prepared to meet this demand because it is the mandate which we have received from the grassroots of our party.

Besides welcoming our foreign guests and thanking them for their presence and solidarity at such a crucial time in our political life, I want my first words to be a touching remembrance of all those people murdered by terrorism whom we have very much in mind at this ceremony; some of them died just because they were UCD members. Our remembrance... [Suarez' voice drowned out by applause]

I think that we now have to go forward without fear for the benefit of the internal renovation and redefinition of our planned objectives. I sincerely ask you not to tie our actions down to any other task, any other aspiration, any other purpose than that of achieving a UCD which is even more integrated and sure of itself. [applause]

We have to do our best to be deeply sincere, lucidly self-critical and resolutely rigorous. We have to contrast and debate our opinions courageously, but in no event should we let ourselves be manipulated from without. [applause]

The future of our party depends on our not making mistakes in the diagnosis of priorities and the treatment of each problem. Politics is, above all, an act of faith in the capacity of reason to direct reality, but it is also a chronology of opportunity. To have the right answer to the right problem and at the right time is the model for the difficult task of politics.

We have to carry out a great debate which will set for itself the fundamental aim of doing away with confusion and ambiguity. We have to define and thrash out the questions which (?face us). Our congress has to be a congress of the UCD and for the UCD, not a congress under the pretext of or at the cost of the UCD. [applause]

I believe that the eyes of Spain are on this debate today. The UCD is a key party in the configuration of Spanish political life. It is a necessary guarantee of stability, of reformism, of moderation and of progress. To a very basic degree, what Spanish democracy is going to be depends upon what the UCD is, says and does. We therefore have to demonstrate that the party maintains its social and political leadership and that it continues being competent to act as the protagonist in the construction of a modern system of coexistence, to promote solid democracy and advance and carry out profound changes in society.

I am not in any way trying to prejudice any conclusion, but I believe that it is clear that I am in favor of maintaining the genuinely centrist nature of our party and its philosophy of progressive change via the dialectics of reform.

I, like you at some point I suppose, have often asked myself why I continued to shoulder and will continue to shoulder the burden of incomprehensible, personal and gratuitous attacks, not to mention that of insults and all-out rejection. I have come to the conclusion that none of us, myself included, naturally, deserved the effort which has been put into predicting our failure and dishing up all kinds of insults. The motive for the attacks and the reason why we maintain our firm will is, however paradoxical it may seem, one and the same thing: it remains firm for that which the UCD contributes as an element of balance to Spanish society. And in response we remain faithful to the UCD, in spite of the fact that it sometimes costs us dearly, precisely because the position of our party continues to be the element of conciliation of old historical divisions and the necessary bridge for dialogue between the two sides. [applause]

We have to learn that unity and solidarity are not a gift of providence, but a permanent effort and a heritage which has to be maintained.

I feel sure that we now have unity, and since we have that unity we must preserve it. And since we have an important political capital, we ought to try to administer it and increase it and not abuse or squander it.

It continues to be necessary, therefore, that there exists a great party which represents the Spain of moderation and toil; which represents those who always remain silent, those who do not demonstrate in the streets, those who do not try to achieve power by means of all-out rejection.

The need continues for a centrist party which is consistent with the renewed mandate which was received from the Spanish people in two general elections.

And it is precisely because these needs exist and are felt, (?needless to say) in every corner of the country, that the party should, in my view, reply energetically to any temptation to change its nature.

The criticism which is made of us reveals in the background a recognition that we are important.

There would be a dnager of distortion to believe that what is at stake here are our opinions, personal or group solutions, and not the interests and the needs of all the Spaniards who vote for us--and even those who do not vote for us but who know that we are everyone's government and the best guarantee for continuity which democracy has. [applause]

There would be a danger of distortion if, when we have demanded the trust of the electorate and promised them that we were going to form a centrist party, we were now to modify our political position simply because some people think that a rightwing change is going on in the world. [applause] In my opinion, this would be dishonest and opportunist.

We are the party which has opted for secure change without risks. We are not a conservative party because we do not try to prevent the necessary changes in society.

Now I am going to finish. You all know that I have submitted an absolutely irrevocable resignation from my political responsibilities because I understood and understand that that was, and is, my obligation; was and is my duty and, to the same extent--you must excuse me for this--it is also my right.

My decision could be judged from one or another point of view but, as I said on television, I understood it as an action consistent with my political line.

I have been loyal to myself by being loyal to you.

It first was and will be a permanent act of loyalty to Spain, to his majesty the king and loyalty to the centrist political option. [applause]

And on resigning I have reaffirmed all these loyalties which I reiterate today and assume before all of you. Nobody is above the party. The party is the fundamental unit of thousands of men and women sharing the same principles.

I believe that today I may ask you to continue supporting the party and the men who represent all of us who are members of the UCD. I also believe that I can ask you, and I ask you with all my heart, to support with all your strength the candidate of our party for the post of prime minister. [applause]

Everything that I have been saying depends, I think, on us. I therefore think that we must set to work with the clear will to accept the results of this congress because this is also demanded by the norms of democratic behavior.

We have to be strong in the face of demands, but inflexible in the face of temptations to change the nature of the party and enter upon personalisms. Therefore, between the UCD and Adolfo Suarez, I have chosen the UCD. Many thanks. The second congress is now open. [applause]

NORWAY

ARBEIDERBLADET ON NEW PRIME MINISTER BRUNDTLAND

LD061549 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 4 Feb 81 p 4

[Editorial: "The Change of Government"]

[Text] We can scarcely believe that there can ever have been broader enthusiasm for the appointment of a new prime minister than Norway saw yesterday. Gro Harlem Brundtland does not represent any basically new policies. Nevertheless she is something new and exciting in the way of a government leader. She is the first woman in Norway and in the Nordic countries, and one of the very few women in the world, to fill the post of prime minister. She is also the youngest prime minister we have had since the parties were formed and parlimantary government was introduced to Norway. At the same time she posseses broad political experience which makes her well suited to lead the government.

The Labor Party has recently suffered many defeats. There is no reason to hide the fact that the mood has been subdued within the organization too. This is a natural result of protracted difficulties. We believe that the appointment of Gro Harlem Brundtland as our new prime minister will trigger off an involvement in the party which has lain dormant.

A change of prime minister also means a change of government. Since there are only 7.5 months left before the fall Storting election it was natural that the new government leader did not wish any large changes in the team. Before the change of prime minister the government was a good working team and was a young, strong and at the same time experienced political crew.

Three of the ministers in the Nordli government wished to withdraw from the government on the present occasion. As far as the Labor Party's chairman is concerned, it is natural for him to want to go back to strengthen the Storting group now that the deputy chairman has become government head. This is in principle what happened when Gro Harlem Brundtland left the government and returned to the Storting when Reiulf Steen became trade minister.

Odvar Berrefjord and Lars Skytoen wanted to step down from their respective posts as justice minister and industry minister. They have both announced acceptable personal reasons for wishing to be replaced. Odvar Berrefjord returns to his post as district governor in Telemark, while Lars Skytoen returns to his important tasks in the trade union federation and in the Norwegian Iron and Metal Workers' Union.

The new trade minister will be Kari Gjesteby. She has long experience in government work from her years as personal secretary and ministry undersecretary. She also fulfills a natural desire on the part of the new government chief to strengthen female representation in the government. The new industry minister, Finn Kristensen, is not new to the field. As chairman of the Storting industrial committee he has the necessary background for working with the problems in the capacity of minister. Hospital Chief Bjorn Skau, who is now to become justice minister, has broad political experience, in part from work in the government machine. He will be the first minister of justice who is not a lawyer. This breaks down one of the last bastions with roots going back to the last century.

The appointment of the new government has removed all the doubts there may have been about the Labor Party's government team before the fall election. The party must now go on the offensive and present the manifesto proposals which the voters must decide on in the fall. It is first and foremost these proposals which tell the voters how the Labor Party intends to solve the problems of the 1980's.

It is only the Labor Party which can present such a united program to the electorate. On the nonsocialist side of politics we are daily shown that the only thing that the nonsocialists can do together is to join in the wish to inflict an election defeat on the Labor Party.

Gro Harlem Brundtland declared at her first press conference that the government's most important task is now to help the Labor Party to win the election in the fall. It would not be overstating the case to say that in this connection much is expected of the new prime minister. She has a demanding job ahead of her. It may be an inspiration to know that there are now tens of thousands of active supporters ready to go out into the election campaign. Their goal is a joint one, namely, a Labor Party majority and continued government led by Gro Harlem Brundtland.

BRUNDTLAND IS NEW HOPE FOR NORWAY'S LABOR PARTY

[Axel Waldemarson article in "Nordic Horizon" column: "The Labor Party's New Look"]

[Text] Gro Harlem Brundtland will be Norway's next prime minister. In a month's time the party chairman's gavel will probably be put in her hand. It makes no difference that Reulf Steen has fought to the bitter end to retain his chairmanship. Like Prime Minister Odvar Nordli, he is falling victim to the conservative wave flooding Norway--even before this fall's Storting election.

Only someone who knows the Labor Party well will realize how revolutionary (or desperate) the choice of Gro Harlem Brudtland is. There is no distrust of academics in the party, but its pride has been that the party has been led by workers--such as local authority worker Einar Gerhardsen once upon a time.

Odvar Nordli was a small deviation. He had studies at Commercial high school behind him. But in Gro--as Harlem Brundtland is popularly called--not only does an academic enter the party. She now enters the leadership of the fairly puritanical Labor Party more or less as if a lady from Djursholm [elegant suburb of Stockholm] were to travel to the Social Democratic Party's headquarters on Sveavagen and take the chairman's gavel from Olof Palme.

Although Gro became at the age of five a member of the Norwegian equivalent of the "Young Eagles" (Unga Ornar), she was still something of an outsider for her party when Trygve Bratteli brought her from life outside politics directly into the government to freshen it up and to give it a much-needed new look. Those most loyal to the party were disapproving until they remembered that Gro's father had once been one of the party's ministers.

Of the new prime minister it can be said that she has had to face the usual things that confront a woman when she enters politics. Gro is, it is said, married "conservative." It is often pointed out that her husband is active within his party and a prominent foreign policy researcher--as if a married woman could not be a competent politician and independently choose a different political color from her husband!

With her stylish appearance Gro, to begin with, had to fight against the humiliating role of the Labor Party's pinud--just as though there could not be a thinking brain behind such an appealing facade. But it is clear that Gro's aura was foreign to many within the Labor Party--whose voters do not come from the milieu of the Brundtland's neighbors.

Gro has not been especially popular with the trade union federation leaders. Even the party leadership has met her with skepticism. As environment minister, she was the eternal loser, forever flattened by the party and the trade union's energy phalanx--principally represented by the former minister, Bjartmar Gjerde. (Even Lenin in his time preached that electrification was socialism.)

And so Harlem Brundtland was sent to the Storting for training and had to leave the government. However, she showed her worth in another area--she traveled around tirelessly and spoke to, and with, the people in the local party organizations. This created the popularity which has now paid off.

The split in command in the Labor Party--different people as prime minister and party leader--has not worked well. But this is not the full explanation for the party's deep crisis. (In the Conservative Party the political leader Kare Willoch and the organization chairman Erling Norvik formed a formidable pair which lifted the party's support from 18 to 30 percent of the electorate.)

The conflicts which are shaking the Labor Party are in actual fact inherited and so strong that they cannot be solved in the center toward which Gro Harlem Brundtland has attempted to lean. The defense and security policy differences are too great for this.

Splits are an old concept in the Labor Party. Once the party was split when the majority had applied to join the Communist International, and not even the politically adept Einar Gerhardssen could prevent a breakout in his day.

The Labor Party has practically lived in a permanent crisis since it lost its Storting majority in 1961. What is serious is that former party Secretary Hasan Lie's analysis from the fall of 1951 is still correct.

"The reason for the change of government of course lay in the circumstances which were so strongly denied, namely, in political disagreements and personal differences."

But the disagreements are interesting in the current context. Great Britain's Labor Party is in the process of splitting into two parties; the other day the right and leftwings fought for the chairmanship of the Social Democratic Folketing group in Denmark (the right won; and in West Germany the flag of rebellion is being raised against Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

But Gro Harlem Brundtland radiates unshakable hope and great willingness to work--and those in the party who are downhearted must feel that a new broom has entered the party's highest levels.

If it will be enough to reverse the kind of electoral change remains to be seen. The most recent opinion polls point to a loss of 10-15 seats for the Labor Party and a similar gain for the Conservative Party--plus the governing power in the fall's Storting election. But it has often shown itself to be the case, as in the last Storting election, that the election is not decided until the last vote has been counted.

HOPES RISE FOR RELEASE OF BRITONS HELD IN IRAN

[Text] Freedom hopes for the four British detainees in Iran were given a new boost today when the country's president said he had been told they would be released soon. It was also disclosed that the archbishop of Canterbury's special envoy to Iran Mr Terry Waite has returned to Tehran at the invitation of the Iranian Government. President Bani-Sadr was asked by REUTERS if the four would be released soon and he replied: "I have been told that." The archbishop's press secretary Mr John Miles said: "This has considerably raised our hopes that they will be released." Mr Bani-Sadr said in Tehran: "I was shown a document today signed by the revolutionary prosecutor which shows they are not spies. So if they are not spies, I don't know why they should be in prison, certainly they will free them."

The Foreign Office confirmed last night that British and Swedish diplomats were yesterday allowed to visit the four--missionaries Doctor John and Audry Coleman and Jean Waddell, and businessman Mr Andrew Pyke.

Speculation was mounting today that the Iranians may be preparing to release them within the next few days--possibly as part of an amnesty to coincide with Wednesday's second anniversary of the Islamic revolution.

Mr Miles said Mr Bani-Sadr's statement was "an extremely helpful sign". He added, however: "We still don't have a definite date for their release." Mr Waite has been meeting senior Iranian Government officials in Tehran today. Mr Waite contacted Archbishop Dr Runcie today to tell him of his progress. "He is playing things very gently and very cautiously," said Mr Miles. He added that Mr Waite was trying to keep the visit "low key." Mr Waite flew out from Gatwick on Thursday, but his visit was not made public until early today. Mr Miles said: "It was going to be a quiet mission, because they often achieve more than missions which have a lot of publicity." Mr Waite's visa runs out on Friday. Meanwhile, the Foreign Office declined to comment on President Bani-Sadr's statement. "Our position remains the same," said a spokesman. "We continue to hope for the work for the early release of the four detainees."

PAPER URGES NO 'OUTSIDE INTERFERENCE' IN POLAND

[Editorial: "The Situation in Poland"]

[Text] The situation in Poland has once again been in the headlines over the p st few days. MORNING STAR readers will undoubtedly have been concerned that the country appeared to be heading for a general strike at the weekend, and will have welcomed the fact that it was possible to reach an agreement which avoided such an outcome.

It is to be hoped that the difficulties in the southern industrial province of Bielsko-Biala over the demand for the removal of the local governor and other officials can be resolved in the same spirit. It is only via the process of negotiation, compromise, and agreement, that the difficult political and economic problems facing Poland can be overcome--a process which requires co-operation, mutual respect, and understanding between the Polish Government, the Communist Party, the unions, and the people as a whole.

Poland is clearly passing through a period of fundamental political change within the framework of socialism. Its essential characteristics is the continuing involvement of millions of workers and citizens. Obviously, there are many facets to this process. There is an understandable mood of impatience with the pace of change, and a considerable lack of experience about how to negotiate and use the right to strike.

As Mr Kania has said, there are also sections in the Communist Party who do not understand the need for change and resist it. And of course there will still be those in Poland who have never accepted the socialist system and are openly hostile to it. Changes of the scope of those taking place today in Poland are inevitably highly complex, and bring into play differing, and often sharply opposed, points of view. And this is all the more so when such changes are occurring in the context of severe economic difficulties.

It would be wrong to blame those difficulties on the strikes which have taken place, though clearly the continual stoppages of work can only make the situation worse.

Both to prevent this from happening, and to create the best possible conditions for the renewal of Polish political life to take place, it is obviously very important that all concerned in the government, the party and the unions seek to avoid confrontations which make reasonable, workable agreements difficult to achieve. Truly independent trade unions, combined with mass political and social involvement, are basic essentials for the full flowering of democracy which socialism makes possible.

The MORNING STAR expresses its confidence that, given time, the Polish people will overcome their problems, and in the process enrich the whole development of socialism in Poland and the world at large. What is happening in Poland is naturally of concern to the other socialist states and all progressive people. But the situation can only be resolved by the Polish people, who must be allowed to do so without outside interference from wherever that may come.

As far as Britain is concerned, our most effective contribution toward aiding the people of Poland would be to campaign might and main to create the climate of peace and disarmament in Europe which would enable all the peoples of the continent to overcome, in cooperation, the many problems which so many face today.

ULSTER SECRETARY WARNS AGAINST MAZE HUNGER STRIKE

LD061229 London THE DAILY TLEEGRAPH in English 6 Feb 81 pp 1, 28

[Nicholas Comfort report: "Atkins 'Will Not Yield' to New Hunger Strike"]

[Excerpt] Mr Atkins, Ulster secretary, yesterday warned convicted IRA men in the Maze prison that the government would stand firm if they carried out their threat of a new hunger strike from March 1 in an effort to secure political status.

The government "will not concede that it should now establish within the normal Northern Ireland prison regime a special set of conditions for particular groups of prisoners," he said. "It will not surrender control of what goes on in the prisons to a particular group of prisoners. It will not concede the demand for political status or recognise that murder and violence are less culpable because they are claimed to be committed for political motives."

Mr Atkins spelt out the steps the government had taken to lower tension at the prison since the last hunger strike was called off in December, with one of the seven protestors close to death. His statement, in a Commons written answer, amounted to the government's rejection of claims by republican groups that it had given undertakings to the prisoners at the time of the ending of the hunger strike and had subsequently broken them. "It has been my hope that the ending of the hunger strike before Christmas would lead speedily to the ending of all the other protests," he said. "I regret that the successive steps taken in January have not led, as I hoped, to the ending of the dirty protest."

ROLANDHIS COMMENTS ON RELATIONS WITH IRAN

[Text] Asked by I SIMERINI yesterday about the Turkish Cypriot press reports that Iran has broken diplomatic relations with Cyprus because French "Mirage" planes destined for Iraq passed through Larnaca airport, Foreign Minister Rolandhis stated that:

The Cypriot Government has no official indication whatsoever that the Iranian Government made such a decision. Moreover, Rolandhis stated that after a pertinent inquiry into the issue, it was ascertained that Tehran radio has not broadcast anything pertaining to this issue. The foreign minister described the Turkish press reports as fictious.

Asked whether the Cypriot Government is studying the possibility of concluding diplomatic relations with Iran on a consular of ambassadorial level, Rolandhis replied negatively. Also asked by I SIMERINI whether the movement of French "Mirage" planes through airport has, in any way, influenced our relations with Arab countries that have a hostile disposition toward Iraq, Rolandhis replied: Syria, which heads the countries that support Iran, as well as Lebanon, Yemen, [as published], Libya and Algeria have shown understanding concerning the Cypriot Government's stance.

Finally, Rolandhis added that during the New Delhi foreign ministers conference, he will have the opportunity to brief and explain to both sides the reasons that prompted the Cypriot government to allow the landing of the French "Mirage" planes for Iraq at Larnaca airport.

COMMERCE MINISTER RESPONDS TO ARAB ENVOYS' CLAIMS

[Text] Replying to a question yesterday, the government spokesman said that the diplomatic representatives of Syria, Lebanon, Libya and PLO paid a visit to Commerce and Industry Minister Kittis and reported to him that Israeli goods are being reexported to Arab countries with Cypriot origin markings.

Kittis replied that the exports to Arab countries are always being made on the basis of a certificate of origin authenticated by the Chamber of Commerce and Industry. Kittis stated to the Arab representatives that if there are certain cases where the exports from Cyprus are being made in violation of the pertinent provisions of Cypriot legislation--as it is referred above--the representatives are asked to provide further specific data to examine the matter. With this opportunity, Kittis assured the Arab representatives of the Cypriot Government's intention and decision to even further strengthen Cypriot commercial and, in general, economic relations with Arab countries. Toward this aim he has planned commercial missions to visit various Arab countries.

ROLANDHIS DEFENDS ACTS ON VAROSHA, AIRPORT ISSUES

[Text] Referring to criticism on the way the Varosha and Nicosia airport issues were being handled, Foreign Minister Rolandhis has stated that the insinuation that he has acted or acts without the authorization of the president and the government is completely false. Rolandhis added that the government acted in all issues as a collective organ. He said: I would like to stress that when the government handles matters with responsibility and explores various ideas, it does not mean that it is prepared to forfeit the political future, status of the state, Cyprus' independence and sovereign rights or to proceed with actions by which it would recognize the faits accomplis created by the occupation.

The foreign minister also said that he could not at this stage disclose the contents of what had been discussed in New York and later in connection with the Varosha and Nicosia airport issues. He stressed, however, that the government has not reneged on the forementioned principles.

Papandreou Remarks

[Text] In a message to the Cypriot people, PASOK Chairman Papandreou says his party is determined to intensify its support for the Cypriot people until the moment Cyprus is able to really live free, without foreign troops and bases, and until all refugees have returned to their houses.

Mr Papandreou's message was conveyed by a PASOK delegation now in Cyprus at the invitation of EDEK. The message voices opposition to Greece's return to NATO without the occupation troops' withdrawal from Cyprus. In his message, Papandreou says the Turks' demands clearly show their goal is not a solution within the framework of the UN resolutions and the agreements which have been concluded so far, but recognition of the faits accomplis.

Mr Papandreou also says the Cyprus problem must be the No 1 issue for the Greek Government, because this is the only way to brief and accurately shape world opinion. Greece's territorial integrity, its national independence, the message concludes, are inseparably connected with the fate and the course of the Cyprus problem.

ATAKOL DENIES LINKAGE OF AIRPORT, VAROSHA ISSUES

[Text] Turkish Cypriot Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Minister Kenan Atakol has denied allegations that the solution of the Maras [Varosha] issue would be linked to the solution of the reopening of the Lefkosa [Nicosia] International Airport. Turkish Radio and Television's Cyprus office reports Atakol as saying that the reopening of the Lefkosa International Airport would be discussed as a separate item on the agenda of the intercommunal talks.

In a statement to a Greek newspaper, Greek Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis alleged that the two sides to the intercommunal talks agreed in principle to the linkage of the reopening of the Lefkosa International Airport to the resettlement of Maras.

CAGATAY WARNS OF POSSIBLE 'VERY SERIOUS DECISIONS'

TA081104 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 8 Feb 81

[Text] The National Unity Party [NUP] second minicongress convened in Lefkosa [Nicosia] today. After 2 minutes of silence observed for Ataturk and the martyrs, NUP leader and Prime Minister Cagatay addressed the congress. He said that the Turkish Cypriot community was going through very serious times in Cyprus. He pointed out that the proposals the Greek Cypriots posited at the intercommunal talks showed that they still wanted to be the sole government of Cyprus, to reduce the Turkish Cypriot community to the status of a minority and to become a unitary state. Stating that the Greek Cypriot side was not interested in a bicommunal and bizonal federation, Cagatay stressed: We will have to take certain very serious decisions if the Greek Cypriot side suspends the intercommunal talks and tries to make the world believe that it is the fault of the Turkish Cypriot community.

The NUP leader and prime minister stressed that the Turkish Cypriot community considered itself authorized to take all the necessary steps. He added that the Greek Cypriots always tried to ensure that pro-Greek Cypriot decisions were adopted at international forums and always tried to have the Cyprus problem resolved in this way. He stated that this was an unacceptable attitude.

Commenting on the difficulties faced by the government while carrying out its duties, Cagatay said that it was doing all it could to solve the economic, political, social and administrative problems. He added that the world economic crisis had inevitably affected the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus as well.

On extraparty and intraparty opposition, Cagatay said that the NUP respected constitutional opposition but that any opposition that was incompatible with the cause of the community was bound to remain ineffective. He pointed out that it was natural to have intraparty opposition but that such opposition should remain loyal to the principles of protecting the unity of the party and not damaging the party.

Taking the rostrum after Cagatay, NUP Secretary General Irsen Kucuk pointed out that the second minicongress was more significant and exciting because it was being held in Ataturk's year. In his speech, Kucuk explained the party policies and principles and that the minicongress was a good means for showing the party policies and activities to the other parties and public opinion as well as for self-criticism.

After Kucuk's speech, the minicongress was held in camera. The party's future policies will be discussed at the minicongress.

PEACE COUNCIL OBJECTS TO U.S. NEUTRON BOMB

NC080707 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 8 Feb 81 p 12

[Statement released by the Cyprus Peace Council--no date given]

[Text] The gross, provocative statement by U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger in connection with the intention of the new U.S. Government to make and deploy the neutron bomb in Western Europe has roused internationally a wave of anger and strong concern about the future.

The fact that the Reagan government has deemed it advisable to revive the nightmare of a bomb-monster, which the Carter government was forced by international pressure to withdraw 3 years ago, shows the terrible dangers to which mankind is being pushed.

A number of NATO-member countries--such as The Netherlands, Belgium, Norway and Denmark--have already expressed their opposition to the storing of the neutron bomb on their territories. There has been strong reservation by the other member states of the North Atlantic alliance, while messages are being received from everywhere speaking about mass mobilizations with the slogan "No to the neutron bomb!"

Our people who are right in the center of a region where imperialism insists on keeping armies and bases, are viewing with increased concern the fresh escalation of international tension caused by the warlike circles in the United States.

For this reason, our people, as one man, join all the other people who demand that the warmongers and merchants of death be placed under control while it is still time.

No to the neutron bomb.

The arms race must stop!

AKEL STRIVING TO REDUCE VOTING AGE TO 18

NC081926 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 8 Feb 81

[Text] Speaking at a pan-Cypriot gathering of United Democratic Youth Organization [EDON] cadres today, AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou stressed that the Cypriot youth, Greeks and Turks, had the utmost interest in understanding and uniting with each other in a joint struggle against the common enemy of foreign occupation and imperialism. Papaioannou said that the forthcoming parliamentary elections had particular importance for youth, and added that AKEL would struggle to reduce to 18 the age for those who had the right to vote. Papaioannou called on EDON members to struggle for a qualitative change, as he said, in the Cypriot issue and for AKEL to be elected as the first party in the House, with substantial difference from that of the second party.

GOVERNMENT PERMITS FORMER QUEEN'S ATHENS BURIAL

[Excerpts] Former Queen Frederika of Greece died in Madrid last night from a heart attack. She was the guest of her daughter, Queen Sophia of Spain. The Spanish news agency reported that Queen Frederika's death occurred at 0030 and that a few hours earlier the former queen had a minor surgical operation on her eyes.

A government spokesman, asked about the death and burial of the former queen of Greece, stated: The government accepted a request from the family of former Queen Frederika to hold the funeral service and burial in the church and family tomb at Tatoi [Athens suburb]. The government granted the request. The prime minister of the government informed the president of the Republic.

The Secretariat of the Presidency of the Republic in the meantime issued the following statement:

The president of the republic, on being informed, issued instructions to the Greek ambassador to Spain to convey his condolences to the family of the late former queen.

Opposition Parties Protest

[Excerpts] 7 Feb (AFP)--A government decision to allow exiled ex-Queen Frederika of Greece to be buried at the traditional royal cemetery of Tatoi has caused an uproar among the socialist and communist opposition parties. Upon learning of the government's decision to allow the return to Greece of the body of the ex-queen, who fled the country with her son King Constantine in 1967, socialist leader Andreas Papandreou labelled the move a "grave political error" which could spark a rebirth of the "confrontations of the past."

The pro-Soviet Greek Communist Party, meanwhile, issued a harsh communique accusing the government of rallying to the extreme right and the fallen monarchy for electoral reasons, and expressing "surprise" at the decision to allow royal family members to return to Greece for the funeral.

More on Protests

[Text] Andreas Papandreou, leader of the majority opposition party and PASOK chairman, in a statement on the death of Queen Mother Frederika said that death, generally, causes sorrow, and this is human. The government's decision, however, to permit burial of former Queen Frederika in Greece finds us in opposition. Papandreou, who expressed fears of a revival of passions, said the country and democracy need calm.

Similar statements were made by KODISO [Party of Democratic Socialism] Chairman I. Pesmazoglu, leader of the Center Front Mavros, and the KKE and the parliamentary representative of the KKE-Interior, Kirkos.

NC062039 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 6 Feb 81

[Text] Questions related to the supply of oil as well as to industrial, trade and technical cooperation between Greece and Libya will be discussed by acting Coordination Minister Paleokrasas during his visit to Libya from Sunday to Thursday.

In reference to the supply of Libyan oil, the Greek side will try to pay for this oil by exporting Greek products or by undertaking development projects in Libya by Greek companies.

There is also a Greek interest in constructing fully equipped plants in Libya as well as in launching and repairing Libyan ships in Greece. The question of signing an agreement on bilateral maritime cooperation will also be examined during the talks Paleokrasas will have in Libya.

Delegation Leaves for Libya

CHAMBER COMMITTEE RATIFIES ANTITERRORISM PACT

[Excerpts] The international agreement on suppressing terrorism--which, among other things, does not include air piracy, abduction, detention of hostages and the use of bombs in the category of political crimes--was debated yesterday by the Greek Chamber of Deputies Committee on Foreign Affairs and ratified by a majority vote.

PASOK did not vote for it, expressing fears it would only open avenues to undermine "individual freedom." The argument was rejected by Deputy Interior Minister Rendis, who stressed that under article 1 of the draft bill, Greece emphatically "reserves the right to deny the extradition of an alien who is under prosecution for his activities in support of liberty" in accordance with the provisions of the Greek Constitution.

Deputies of the KKE were not present during the committee's debate.

MITSOTAKIS DISCUSSES ISSUES AT PRESS CONFERENCE

[Text] Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis discussed several subjects at a press conference with foreign journalists yesterday. The European Community's peace plan for the Middle East is always in effect, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis said.

He denied the plan had been shelved because of the presidential election in the United States.

Mitsotakis refused to give any details on subjects discussed during his meeting with the PLO's political bureau chief, Faruq Qaddumi, last January. After that meeting, the PLO official had told reporters Greece would play the role of "advocate" for the Palestinian cause in the European Community.

Greek-U.S. negotiations on a new defense treaty regulating the future status of U.S. military bases in Greece may be concluded by the end of March, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis said. He described as "satisfactory" the climate in which negotiations are being conducted, but refused to provide any details on the talks' current contents.

Mitsotakis added that the upcoming visit to Athens by NATO's supreme commander for Europe, Gen Rogers, is purely a routine visit and has nothing to do with talks on the U.S. bases' future.

He also announced the following schedule of official visits to foreign countries for the first part of 1981:

--Feb 16-17, he will go to Brussels, to take part in the meeting of EEC foreign ministers.

--At the end of March, Mitsotakis will accompany Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis on his official trip to India, at the invitation of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi.

--There are also plans for visits, in the first half of 1981, to Poland, Czechoslovakia, and East Germany, on dates that have not yet been set.

The foreign minister described the climate in Greek-Turkish relations, at present, as "generally good," and predicted it will improve even further in the near future.

He referred to preparations for celebration of the 100th anniversary from the birth of the founder of modern Turkey, Mustafa Kemal Ataturk, which will take place May 19 in Ataturk's native city, Thessaloniki. Greece will probably be represented at the celebration by Minister of Culture and Sciences Andrianopoulos, and Turkey is expected to be represented by an official of similar rank.

Asked about the place and date of the next meeting between the secretaries-general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries, Mitsotakis said the meeting would take place this coming spring, adding that the place and exact date would be announced later.

OFFICIAL DENIES PROVISION ON GREECE IN U.S. PACT

[Text] It has been announced that the defense cooperation agreement signed between Turkey and the United States does not include any secret provision directed at Greece. It was alleged during the defense cooperation agreement talks between Greece and the United States, which are currently being held in Athens, that the Turkish-U.S. defense cooperation agreement includes certain secret provisions directed at Greece.

In a statement issued in Ankara, Foreign Ministry Spokesman Ambassador Oktay Iscen announced that the Turkish-U.S. defense cooperation agreement does not carry any provision directed at Greece. Pointing out that during these talks, Greece asked for certain guarantees concerning its border with Turkey, Iscen noted that the demand for mutual guarantees by two neighboring NATO countries regarding their borders contradicts the concept of alliance and cooperation.

OZAL ECONOMICS REMARKS ON DEPARTURE FOR JAPAN

[Excerpts] State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal left for Japan with a delegation. While speaking to our correspondent at Esenboga Airport, Ozal expressed his views on the economic situation in the country. He stressed that the economic program being implemented in Turkey for a year now could be considered a revolutionary one. He added that the administration was trying to adapt some other economic factors to this program too. He pointed out that the rise in the interest rates of deposits was in line with these efforts. He stated that the basic aim of the rise was to ensure that the interest rate on deposits prevented any losses that might be incurred as a result of inflation. Ozal explained that by raising the interest rate to a level closer to the inflation rate, the administration was encouraging savings and that savings accounts would increase by 77 percent.

Ozal pointed out that the increase in deposits was 7 percent after the interest rate was raised. He added: If savings grow, then Turkey can increase its production, investments and exports. If there are no savings then there are no investments.

Replying to a question, Ozal rejected the view that the rise in the interest rate would negatively affect production and investments.

The delegation accompanying Ozal is composed of Foreign Ministry and Finance Ministry representatives as well as Turkish industrialists and businessmen.

Commenting on press reports that his visit to the United States planned for next week serves the purpose, among other things, of probing the readiness of the new U.S. Government to assume that role, Ozal said: "There is no call for that. I continue to assume that Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer will coordinate the aid to Turkey again this year, as planned."

KREISKY URGES EUROPEAN-AMERICAN DIALOGUE

AU091445 Vienna ARBEITER-ZIETUNG in German 7 Feb 81 p 6

[Report on Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's lecture delivered on 6 February in Davos, Switzerland, at a symposium of the European Management Forum]

[Excerpts] At the moment, we know only very little about the future policy of the new U.S. President and the new U.S. administration. It is generally assumed that the new President's foreign policy will substantially differ from that of Carter. Primarily, a "policy of strength" is expected. In my opinion, rather far-reaching notes [wechsel] have been drawn on the future in this respect, and I have my doubts whether they can be honored within the foreseeable future.

Let us assume for a moment that the Iranian tragedy with the taking of hostages, which was the consequence of a tremendous eruption in Iran, were to repeat itself and the formula of the "policy of strength" were put to the test.

May I point out, for better understanding, that the involvement of the United States in the Vietnam war and the connected wars, quote apart from the local forces and allies, was tremendous. There were 56,000 military and civilian casualties and 300,000 wounded. That is actually one-fifth of the U.S. losses in World War II.

The estimated overall costs of the Vietnam war were $383 billion. The total of U.S. forces engaged at the height of the war in 1969 was 545,000 men. The amount of materials used in this war was gigantic. The outcome is known. It has, moreover, led to psychological consequences that were hard to digest for America's people: For the first time in its history, the United States lost a war.

The Korean war ended at least as a successful act of the "policy of containment." The Vietnam war was a defeat: militarily, psychologically and politically.

I believe that such a gigantic military effort as made in the past cannot be simply repeated. What could the policy of strength have brought in the case of Iran? As the policy of strength, considering the overkill capacity of the two superpowers, cannot be aimed at a big war, a realistic assessment of the situation will primarily lead to a multiplication of the armament efforts of the United States, and thus of its allies.

Since the allies of the United States are democracies, this policy must be justified before the parliaments and peoples of these countries, and here I envisage considerable difficulties, of which there have already been some first indications.

However, I believe that, if the latent danger of an American isolationism is to be avoided, there must be a minimum of military solidarity with the United States. And the yardstick for judging this measure of solidarity will be the contribution Europe is willing to make.

The "policy of strength," incidentally, also includes a correct assessment of the opponent. If one envisages a "policy of strength," we must soberly assess the other side's strength, and not indulge in any illusions as to what military efforts the people of the Soviet Union in spite of everything, are willing to make. You need only remember World War II.

When Hitler stood before Leningrad, Moscow and on the Crimea, he was not able to force the Soviet Union to capitulate, even though it was poorly equipped. This would not succeed today, either. A new war will plunge both superpowers into the abyss, and the world with them.

A problem which, with its alarming effects, is assessed by us as far more serious than in the United States, is the development in Poland.

Undoubtedly the USSR has so far pursued a very cautious policy vis-a-vis Poland. Should the Polish Government succeed in regaining control over developments in the country, there could be a chance for a Polish road. However, we believe that the liberalization process that has started with the founding of the free workers movement cannot be so easily channelled and controlled. It is very difficult to discuss with the masses once they have began to move.

Should the worst come true, namely a military intervention in Poland against resistance, then, and this must be clearly seen, the process of detente has come to an end, and the cold war will be revived.

I repeat: A military invasion of Poland would unavoidably lead to the revival of the cold war, with all its consequences.

It is also clear that in European capitals, in Vienna and Bern, in Berlin and Bonn, in Copenhagen, in Stockholm, Oslo and Helsinki, in Brussels and The Hague, such a development would be judged differently from the way it is assessed in Texas or other parts of the United States. This is quite understandable in view of the proximity of events and the degree in which people are affected by them.

And thus it seems to me that the task of European policy is to enter into a creative dialogue with the well-informed personages of the new American administration in order to create the, let us say, "comprehensive solidarity [in English] that is needed between democratic Europe and democratic America.

TRADE MINISTER STARIBACHER ON ENERGY SITUATION

AU061431 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 6 Feb 81 p 10

[Alexander Fieber interview with Trade Minister Josef Staribacher on Austria's energy situation--date and place not given]

[Excerpts] DIE PRESSE: Are we prepared to cope, in view of the critical worldwide situation in the energy sector?

Staribacher: We are prepared inasmuch as we have concluded contracts and under the terms of these contracts should get the necessary quantities of energy. We are not prepared inasmuch as we have to import more than two-thirds of our energy requirements, as you know.

DIE PRESSE: How long will our own energy reserves last?

Staribacher: It varies quite a bit. As far as oil is concerned, we are bound by the International Energy Agency obligation to keep a 90-day supply in stock. We are doing that. If you take into consideration that, moreover, we are trying to avoid excessive exploitation of our own oil resources, in other words, to keep production so low that we can extract the maximum quantity in the long run--then our supply situation is even a little better. The highest exploitation was when the oil fields were occupied by the Soviet oil administration. At that time, up to 3.5 million tons of oil were produced in Austria. Now we have cut back production to about half that quantity.

DIE PRESSE: Are the coal and power supplies from Poland still ensured?

Staribacher: The Poles naturally have not been able to completely fulfill their contractual delivery quotas, owing to the decline in their coal production in the past few years. This also applies to their export quotas for Austria. However, we have succeeded in getting the necessary quantities from the Polish side. We can but hope that this will continue to be so in the future as well.

DIE PRESSE: So, "necessary" means the minimum....

STARIBACHER: "Necessary" means that it was not possible to get the full quota. However, owing to the decline in business activity we were able to do without part of the quota and to make up for another part of it through supplies from other sources.

DIE PRESSE: As far as natural gas is concerned, we are strongly dependent on the Soviet Union. What alternative supply sources would be available to us?

STARIBACHER: We have had concrete negotiations with the Algerian State Company Sonatrach. Nevertheless no agreement has been concluded. The Algerians ask such high prices for their gas deliveries that the other European groups have also refused to accept Algerian gas on those terms. But I believe that it will be possible within the foreseeable future to conclude agreements on such deliveries after all.

DIE PRESSE: Being in a situation where we have to get some gas, we will probably have to accept the Algerians' conditions....

Staribacher: These conditions cannot be accepted by anyone in Europe, because such exorbitant gas price increases are completely out of the question. In addition, we are currently negotiating with the USSR on a fourth big gas delivery agreement for all of West Europe. Under this agreement we hope to obtain additional gas quanitties.

DIE PRESSE: In what magnitude?

Staribacher: The USSR now exports 2.5 billion cubic meters. Within the framework of the big West Eruopean gas system, to be supplied with about 40 billion cubic meters of Soviet natural gas, we hope to be able to get an additional annual quota of between 3 and 5 billion cubic meters from the Soviet Union.

SWEDEN'S PALME URGES RESUMPTION OF SALT TALKS

[Report on Vienna press conference of former Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme on 8 February marking the end of the 2-day "Palme Commission" session]

[Text] Vienna (AZ)--A world war today could lead to the complete extermination of mankind. It is necessary to protect mankind from such dreadfulness. Hence it would be disastrous for the peace endeavors in the world, if the efforts to conclude a U.S.-Soviet agreement on SALT were to cease. The SALT process must be resumed, and a climate of detente must be maintained.

This was stated by former Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme on Sunday in Vienna. The leading Social Democrat spoke at a press conference marking the conclusion of the 2-day session of the Independent Commission for Disarmament and Security ("Palme Commission"). At this session, the commission worked out a report: "The SALT Process: What Is at Stake for the World," discussed the Vienna forces reduction talks, and heard a report by U.S. physician Dr Howard Hiatt on the medical consequences of a nuclear war. Hiatt reported on the movement of U.S. physicians against the illusion that civil defense could protect the population against the terrible effects of a nuclear war.

The future of the SALT negotiations is a matter concerning the entire world and not just a question of Soviet-U.S. relations. Hence it is the duty of all peoples to express their views on the vital importance of an early and serious resumption of the SALT process, the Palme Commission's report states.

The commission members are aware of the fact that the SALT agreements and the SALT process alone will not lead to solving all political differences between East and West. But they state their view that a collapse of the SALT process, although its successes so far have been moderate, would be a disaster. SALT's main purpose is to help prevent a nuclear war.

The third meeting of the Palme Commission was attended by leading politicians from East and West, as well as Asia and Latin America, including CPSU Central Committee member Georgiy Arbatov, former Polish Premier Cyrankiewicz, former UK Labor Foreign Secretary Owen and SPD Managing Director [Geschaeftsfuehrer] Bahr.

BRIEFS

INCREASED TOURIST TRADE VOLUME--In 1980 the number of overnight stays of tourists in Austrian tourist trade enterprises was 118.7 million, 5.5 percent more than in 1979. The number of overnight stays of foreign tourists went up 6.3 percent to 90.2 million, and that of Austrian tourists 2.8 percent to 28.5 million. The number of British tourists visiting Austria in 1980 went up 43 percent and that of U.S. visitors 22.1 percent. Foreign currency proceeds from tourist trade in the period January-November 1980 were 69 billion schillings, 11.2 percent more than during the corresponding 1979 period. [Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 3 Feb 81 p 6 AU]

ENERGY CONSUMPTION--Declines--At a Vienna press conference on 2 February, Trade Minister Staribacher drew attention to the fact that in the first 11 months of 1980, Austria's overall energy consumption declined about 2 percent while the gross national product at the same time grew 3.5 percent. According to the foreign trade statistics, in the first 11 months of 1980 Austria spent 43.8 billion schillings on energy imports, which is 50 percent more than a year ago. [VIENNA ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 3 Feb 81 p 6 AU]

RECORD FOREIGN TRADE DEFICIT--In 1980 Austria incurred a foreign trade deficit of 89.68 billion schillings, 26.07 billion more than in 1979. Higher energy prices as well as higher imports of consumer goods, machinery and automobiles account for the higher deficit. In trade with the EC, Austria incurred a deficit of 73.57 billion schillings, 9.26 billion more than a year ago, and in trade with East European countries a deficit of 3.41 billion schillings as against a surplus of 2.92 billion in 1979, mainly as a result of a higher deficit in trade with the USSR. In trade with EFTA countries Austria obtained a surplus of 3.12 billion schillings as against 2.61 billion in 1979. [Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 5 Feb 81 p 7 AU]

OIL IMPORT PLANS--In 1981, Austria plans to import 9.4 million tons of oil, including 2.4 million tons from the USSR, 3.6 million tons from Saudi Arabia, 1.2 million tons from Iraq, 1 million tons from Libya, and 700,000 tons from Algeria. [Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 4 Feb 81 p 1 AU]

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON EEC, EAST-WEST RELATIONS

LD091505 Paris LE MATIN in French 6 Feb 81 pp 8-9

[Unattributed interview with FRG Foreign Minister Hans Dietrich Genscher in Paris: "Genscher Tells LE MATIN: I Am Deeply Worried"--date not given]

[Text] [Question] Europe: What makes you think that, after 10 years in which Europe has marked time and has often moved backward, it is now possible to try and achieve a European union?

[Answer] All that has been done by the Six, then the Nine and now the Ten Community states is very creditable. We have a European market. The EC's objectives have been attained in many spheres. The European monetary system has proved its worth. The Community is now one of the major poles of world economy. On foreign policy questions, the Europeans are now increasingly speaking with one voice.

Despite all that, I am deeply worried: The Community is facing a growing number of external and internal challenges. The political will to take up these challenges urgently needs strengthening. That is why I repeat that Europe must find a higher political outlook and set aside quarrels on the Community's various special problems. Otherwise, it will soon be impossible to settle even these problems in a suitable way.

If we have the will to successfully defend our interests in the world, we must act accordingly and give Europe a political structure which will enable it to act in a period of disturbances and crises. My idea of concluding a treaty grouping the European Ten's achievements in the context of a "European union" should give inspiration to discussion which we hope to have with our partners. Others proposals will have to be considered in those discussions. What I regard as essential in a period which requires great efforts, notably in the Community, to harmonize interests on some questions is that we should recall the Community's political objectives and give them a stronger foundation.

[Answer] I am convinced that dialogue with the East should be based on the strong foundation of the interests shared by Europe and the United States in the security sphere. In addition to that, there is a natural framework of interests for East-West relations which has been developed over the past 20 years. We Westerners actively want to ensure peace. We want to avoid confrontations. We want to prevent conflicts or help solve them. We want to force the Soviet Union to curb its armaments and to abandon its expansionist aims in the Third World. The guarantee of military and strategic balance must remain the basis for East-West relations. Other elements of this policy should be readiness to have dialogue, the pursuit of verifiable arms control and the continuation of the CSCE process. For we Germans who live in Europe in a divided country at the intersection between East and West, the consolidation of human contacts in Europe and the expansion of the possibilities for information among men are particularly important.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN: POLISH CRISIS STILL SERIOUS

[Text] Bonn, 9 Feb (DPA)--The Federal Government thinks that the seriousness of the situation in Poland remains unchanged. "The crisis has not been solved. The danger remains as great as ever," Government Spokesman Kurt Becker said in reply to questions from the press in Bonn today. He said that this assessment was clearly expressed at the recent talks between Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and President Giscard d'Estaing in Paris.

Becker denied reports that the chancellor had rejected in Paris a list submitted by Giscard of possible Western responses to Soviet intervention in Poland. He said that he had no knowledge of any such list. Becker said that the Federal Government believes that any decisions on a Western response could be made only if the Soviets actually intervened.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG VIEWS SCHMIDT-GISCARD TALKS

Article Discusses Detente

[Article signed Jr.: "Atlantic Spirit in Paris"]

[Text] In the German-French statement on Friday, the term "detente" survived only as a quotation from a document in which Helmut Schmidt and Giscard d'Estaing 1 year ago condemned the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The federal chancellor adapted to the new terminology used by the French president who replaced detente with "stabilization" (of the East-West relations). This was the true and plain sense of the venture started more than a decade ago. The Bonn doctrine that there is no alternative to detente except cold or even hot war has been abandoned by Schmidt who has adapted to French flexibility. Below the threshold of dangerous confrontation, there are many forms of relations between states and power blocs, even if we do not have a magic word for it.

However, the harmony of words between Schmidt and Giscard d'Estaing cannot quite cover up their differences, which are based above all on their different assessments of Soviet policy and its intentions. The sensitivity of the French regarding Soviet expansion in Africa and the consequence of "Afghanistan" is more developed than that of the Germans who spare no expense to cultivate good-neighborly relations with the East. Scepticism also prevails in Paris on developments in Poland. It is on the basis of such concerns that the "Atlantic" spirit of the Paris statement has emerged, that is, the statement of their readiness to cooperate with President Reagan, to observe alliance commitments and not to slacken defense efforts.

The renunciation of the striving for military superiority can hardly be assessed as covert criticism of Reagan's ideas of strength. Soviet rearmament proceeds so rapidly that the West has a hard time keeping pace. Giscard d'Estaing has nailed Schmidt down to joining in preserving the balance, irrespective of the opinion of SPD leftwingers.

Editorial Notes Outcome

[Rudolph Chimelli editorial]

[Text] The French will have to grow accustomed to a new German image. Their partner is no longer self-assured and becoming richer, as Germany was under five chancellors, but all of a sudden, it is in a dilemma. Having been a model student of the United States, the Federal Republic has turned into a NATO member which made Carter suspicious and which is now being watched by Reagan with uneasiness.

Becoming visible behind the watch on the Elbe River, which to French tastes is too morose regarding the bad enemy in the East, is a basic trend toward neutralism and antimilitarism, a basic trend which, after all, is strong enough to impede arms efforts as pursued by Paris itself. Governing in Bonn isn't a chancellor determining the guidelines of policies in a sovereign way, including those of cooperation with France, but a man who constantly has a harder time enforcing what is necessary against his party. The German mark is as good as the French franc, but no longer better. A breeze of weakness, of a Fourth Republic, is blowing over the Rhine.

During the summit meeting, France's president coined the term "hard core" which Europe has in terms of the close relations between Paris and Bonn. No doubt the relationship is closer than any other interstate contacts maintained by France or the Federal Republic. Cooperation in many fields is so devoid of problems and the confidence so great that it is possible now to talk without diplomatic caution between the Rhine and Seine River. It is also true that the EC does not have any other center of gravity than the German-French core. The only question is how hard it is, or rather, whether at the moment it does not consist of a harder French and a weaker German half.

Schmidt's consultations with Giscard d'Estaing have dispelled the rumors regarding a cooling of relations. What came to light in the process is what government spokesman jargon calls "mutual recognition of different national interests." In trade with the East and in relations with the GDR, there is more of a material and humanitarian nature at stake for the Federal Republic. The French understand that. Likewise, they see that it is difficult for the Germans, for that reason, to wind up the chapter of detente. What they merely accept, however, is that Bonn for the same reason considers the Soviet armament less dangerous, the situation in Poland less threatening and the occupation of Afghanistan a lesser burdening factor. Such a view can be understood only as the reflex of a curtailed capability of action to which the Federal Republic is subjected by its special circumstances. For the time being, nobody takes into consideration the possibility that a specifically German component might be in the game, which, in French thinking, would be romanticism or irrationalism.

When Schmidt was in Paris, he reportedly did not agree with the catalogue of reprisals in case of a Soviet invasion of Poland. In contrast to Giscard d'Estaing, he seems to see more danger in the destruction of the free trade unions by the Polish police and the army. It therefore was inserted in the joint statement that Poland must be able to solve its problems "peacefully." Otherwise, the chancellor very much agreed with the world-political ideas of the president. The "stabilization of East-West relations," which replaces detente, is linked with prerequisites that will be hard to bring into accord with the new American administration's leadership claims to strategic predominance. Giscard d'Estaing and Schmidt start out from a balance which rules out "a position of weakness" as well as "striving for military superiority." France's project of a European disarmament conference to create "confidence-building measures between the Atlantic and the Ural mountains" has now become part of the joint policy. The geographic area involved in the Vienna talks was too small for the French with regard to the European security needs. Limiting strategic armament is considered not very useful by Paris if no balance of tactical arms is established.

The European core may turn out to be hard enough for Reagan's teeth, once the dialogue with Washington takes place on the basis of common positions. If the Russians are supposed to respect Europe, it should really speak with one voice, as demanded by Giscard d'Estaing. But without renouncing national interests, which the chancellor and the president do not want to do, this will be impossible. It has been France's dilemma since de Gaulle's time that Europe, which is supposed to speak with one tongue, cannot have one head or one body, at any price, remarked the publicist Alfred Grosser, unless it be that of the French president.

To avoid having the French and Germans maintain a silent friendship, it again was decided to promote language education. This good intention must not fail again just because Hamburg, Schleswig-Holstein and Lower Saxony resist, thus blocking the other laender.

CDU/CSU OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON TALKS IN U.S.

[Text] Bonn, 9 Feb (DPA)--The deputy chairman of the CDU/CSU parliamentary group, Manfred Woerner, has returned from a visit to the United States with the impression that the new U.S. administration expects greater defense efforts from Europe.

He told journalists in Bonn today: "We Europeans will have to adjust to the fact that we must contribute more to common defense and to the costs in the alliance." Making the kind and extent of deployment of U.S. troops in Europe dependent in the future on the readiness of Europeans to pay more is being openly discussed in the U.S. Senate. Woerner said that the Federal Government faces "uncomfortable talks" because according to its plans, the defense budget makes no provision for additional expenditures.

Woerner said that if there is no longer a dispute in the alliance about the 3 percent increase in the defense budgets, this is because the dispute about percentages has been to no avial. But this by no means means that less is needed: 3 percent is just the starting point. More will be needed and demanded. "We will have to get accustomed to the idea of (?substantial) and massive additional demands." The Americans are talking of increasing their next defense budget by 8 to 15 percent in real terms.

Woerner said that a drastic reassessment of foreign and defense policy is in progress in Washington. This development also requires rethinking on the part of the Federal Government. In the twin concept of defense and detente, the U.S. emphasis at the moment is on defense. "They are obviously determined to consolidate the American world power status, to reestablish American strength and to assert the claim to leadership within the alliance."

Woerner said that Americans deeply are disappointed at the results of the policy of detente. The Soviet power buildup over the past decade has caused great concern. He warned against depicting the American determination to reverse the trend as a policy of strength. "They are not adventurers who want to launch a new crusade against communism or who seek confrontation and want to unleash a wild arms race. Responsible thinking and quite moderate and responsible people are at work, who nevertheless take seriously the reestablishment of military balance around the globe and who want to put an end to the decline of American power."

Woerner stressed that the United States is interested in real disarmament and wants to equally reduce the strategic arms potential on both sides. They will take their time, however. He thought that the new U.S. administration will enter into talks with the Soviets relatively quickly but there will be negotiations only after the review of U.S. policy is concluded and when the Soviets are prepared for really serious negotiations.

He said the United States stands by both parts of the NATO counterarming decision. With regard to the discussion on the neutron bomb, he was told that a decision has not yet been made. During his visit, he said that he considered the debate to be unfortunate at the present time. He said that developments in Poland are being watched carefully, although it has not been said which of the broad range of possible sanctions are under consideration in the event of a Soviet invasion.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG ON REAGAN'S TV SPEECH

[Article signed A. : "Reagan's Drastic Treatment"]

[Text] Those who are prepared at present to invest their savings in dollars--something they can do in every German bank--have an opportunity to get almost 15 percent interest. This nearly astronomic profit margin reveals a lot about the real state of the U.S. economy. President Reagan has described it bluntly: It is a chaos.

The President's television speech will have made millions of Americans more aware than ever before of how serious the situation is. Without unduly dramatizing it, Ronald Reagan gave an impressive lesson on national economy. Millions of Americans did not really know what inflation really means. Those who get a regular additional payment which seemingly offsets almost completely the depreciation of money, as is the case with a large portion of American wage earners and even pensioners, are relatively unimpressed by the adverse figure of 13 percent.

The Americans urgently needed Ronald Reagan's shock therpy to become fully aware of their situation. Roughly, 7 million unemployed means a line of people from the Atlantic coast across the whole American continent to the Pacific. A dollar bill of 1960 is worth only 36 cents today, and if inflation were to continue at the present rate for another 3 years, the value of the green note would be reduced to 25 cents.

The President has now mercilessly made a diagnosis--American patients are used to that anyway by their doctors. Reagan does not lack verve, but there are many in Congress who suspect that cuts will be made affecting above all the poor, the old and the weak. The question is whether Reagan has the political means to really implement this drastic treatment.

SPD'S VOIGT DISCUSSES NEUTRON WEAPON, ARMAMENT

DW091540 Bremen Radio Bremen Network in German 1730 GMT 7 Feb 81

[Reporter Ruebsaat interview with SPD Bundestag Deputy Karsten Voigt; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Voigt, you have stated major reservations before with regard to the neutron bomb. It seems that your approach has not changed because you mentioned again this week the danger that the nuclear threshold could be lowered through this weapon. What do you mean by that?

[Answer] I mean that if one develops such nuclear arms, the danger exists that the difference in the planned use of conventional and nuclear arms will disappear, so that the nuclear arms will lose more and more of their political character. The military planners might possibly have the impression that they could use the weapon, or plan to use it in a much earlier stage than would be the case with regard to big nuclear arms.

I also believe that in the meantime a number of conventional arms systems have been developed which are not less terrible, but which could fulfill the same defense policy purpose as the neutron weapon without moving the military planners' time schedule too much ahead with regard to applying nuclear arms. That is a defense policy argument against the neutron weapon.

Naturally, there are also very significant moral arguments. Next to these moral and defense policy arguments, there are naturally also points of view pertaining to arms control policy, namely, the points of view which the Social Democrats have stressed repeatedly: Political priority must be given to arms control.

This means that in connection with defense policy considerations, the attempt must repeatedly be made to make the introduction of additional arms systems superfluous due to the existence of arms control, or at least slow the introduction down. As far as I am informed, this attempt has so far neither been made by the West nor the Soviet Union in connection with the neutron weapon, despite the fact that Western politicians and the military suggested years ago introducing the neutron weapon into the MBFR negotiations, for example.

[Answer] I must say as before that these arguments indicate for me that reservations against the neutron weapon prevail. For this reason also, I say that following the statements of the U.S. Secretary of Defense, one must not pretend that there are only moral considerations against the neutron weapon. I believe that one ought to include arms control policy points of view and defense policy arguments in the discussion, without making rash decisions.

[Question] Some people among us here point out over and over again that this is just a suggestion, a consideration, some new pondering on the neutron weapon. But there are also experts who maintain that there is more behind it, namely, some sort of psychological preparation of the allies. How do you see that?

[Answer] I believe that one can gather from the statements by Secretary of Defense Weinberger that he wants the alliance as a whole to think about the neutron weapon. I am not at all against thinking about matters. On the contrary, it is welcomed when politicians do some thinking. But his statements on the neutron weapon indicate that he considers the introduction of this weapon to be necessary. I believe that such decisions can be made only after a very careful discussion in the alliance. They should not be made on the basis of bilaterial German-American relations.

[Question] And you see possibilities here for the allies to introduce their interests and fears vis-a-vis the United States?

[Answer] We are an alliance of partners with equal rights, but we are not an alliance of equally powerful partners. But due to our equal rights, we probably will exploit the possibility of pressing for a most careful consultation.

But most of all, I am against some of our politicians, particularly on the conservative side, creating the impression that every additional and new weapon creates additional security. That is plain illusion. It is muchmore correct to say that there are arms systems which could have a destabilizing effect and which could endanger peace. For this reason, one cannot always naively shout hooray whenever new arms systems are developed, demanding their immediate introduction in the West. One should instead most carefully consider the defense policy and the peace policy consequences, without losing sight of arms control; one should instead give it political priority.

[Answer] First of all, there is a tendency in our country to dramatize the balance of strength between East and West. It has changed to the advantage of the Soviet Union. But a situation exists as before which makes every attack against NATO completely unattractive for the Soviet Union. And then, there isn't just the neutron weapon to reestablish a balance. As I said before, there is a large number of new arms systems which are no less terrible, but which are not nuclear arms. They could contribute to offsetting the Soviet Union's superiority which, I believe, exists in central Europe.

I assume that the U.S. administration, the new one, will adhere to a concept of balance between East and West. Were it to desire something else, it would be destabilizing because a concept of balance--the federal chancellor said so also--is necessary to preserve peace. This does not change the fact that it is very difficult to define balance in an individual case. One of the great difficulties in East-West relations is that the Soviet Union and the Americans believe they are in a defensive position, based on different analyses, and are taking measures which from their points of view may be defensively motivated, but which must have an offensive effect on the other party. This dangerous misunderstanding in the mutual assessment of both superpowers is a dangerous element in the development of the international situation.

[Question] Mr Voigt, you said early this week in a NORDDEUTSCHER RUNDFUNK interview that the room for maneuver concerning Social Democratic political aims has become more narrow within the framework of the North Atlantic alliance. What arms policy maneuverability remains for Bonn?

[Answer] Particularly in an aggravated international crisis situation, and we are in such a situation now, the leeway for a dialogue between the blocs becomes narrower for individual members of the alliance. I believe that Social Drmocratic policy must be characterized by exploiting the leeway as much as possible so as to introduce arms control and disarmament elements in the security partnership between East and West in the alliance's way of thinking and its decisions.

Social Democratic successes cannot be measured by whether we can achieve a purely Social Democratic foreign policy formulated by the alliance. That would not be realistic. It must be measured by the fact that we must say very clearly what we want as Social Democrats and then stick with it. We must make it clear that we want to implement this policy. We must not create the illusion that we will be able to fully prevail with out concepts.

[Question] But the difference between Social Democratic objectives and the options of realpolitik may well entail the consequence that some Social Democratic objectives will not prevail. This in turn would probably result in new conflicts in your own party and your own Bundestag faction.

[Answer] To begin with, I would like to say what the basis of these differences is. After all, we do not disregard the need for military defense; rather what we are saying is this: Military defense and deterrence are the prerequisite for the development of a security partnership between East and West in which the military aspect will increasingly lose significance whereas the components of partnership will gain in significance. We do not have a narrow concept of security because we view security in the context of military security as well as social and internal security. We do not view the problem of the Third World only in the light of military balance, but also under the aspect of the social development of that region. Suppose we retain these objectives: Then we would lose even more credibility if we were to pretend that whatever is being said in the United States today is fully congruent with our objectives, as it were. After all, this would elicit considerable displeasure among our own following. We will retain, or even gain, all the more credibility the more frankly we state what we stand for, what we are trying to bring about and what a compromise is as well as what the content of Social Democratic policy is.

[Question] Still, what you are saying will not eliminate the mistrust of broad circles of the people as well, of the very segment of the people which often is labeled pacifists.

[Answer] It is a fact that the growing concern of large segments of the people about the chances for preserving peace and the growing concern and anxiety about the arms burdens cause constantly greater segments of the people at large, and also of Christians and trade union members in particular, to think about the policies pursued to date and to call policies pursued to date, sepcifically the security policy, into question. It is necessary to face up to this discussion. This discussion must not be defamed and the politicians criticizing the results of such discussions in these circles must ask themselves whether everything that has been happening in security policy is really so rational. I can very well imagine that as a result of discussion, new accents may emerge for our own practical policy from positions which at the moment stand side by side in de facto incompatibility. What I see in this discussion is not only something that burdens but also something from which we Social Democrats could profit.

[Question] The consideration of potential conflicts in your party and in your Bundestag faction in the future cannot, of course, divert attention from the fact that quite a few conflicts already exist, for example, the present discussion on the NATO counterarming decision. Those currently arguing against the counterarming decision refer to party congress decisions and with, as they themselves point out, linkage with the SALT treaty playing a special role. But in this respect, the U.S. definition of its stance is unequivocal.

[Answer] I think we should not harbor any illusions. The party congress proceeded from the political priority of arms control and actually presupposed that SALT II would be ratified. In taking a look at today's situation, I find that what the party congress visualized as an objective, an ideal goal, namely, making the deployment of new Western weapons systems superfluous with the help of arms control in that the Soviets, too, would considerably reduce their arms, in all probability can no longer be attained through arms control negotiations by the end of 1983 or early 1984.

It is necessary to view this quite soberly. And the second part of it, the ratification of SALT II, will not exist by then either, or at least not in the form in which it was seen at the time. To this extent, it is absolutely legitimate for large segments of the party and of the Social Democratic following to begin a new discussion.

What conclusions will be drawn is a different question from this discussion, from this new situation. It must state quite soberly that we need a social-liberal coalition, a social-liberal government, if we wish to have any influence at all on the dialogue on arms control policy between East and West. After all, the Federal Government is one of the few voices of reason within West Europe, at least to the extend that it is led by Social Democrats.

If I want to preserve this coalition, then I must, in accordance with the positions of the coalition partner, conclude that anyone in parliament calling the counterarming decision into question and anyone doing so in the government jeopardize the coalition. In my contemplations, I must keep this in mind, and this is what I am doing, too. But it is necessary to respect those who, owing to the situation that has now emerged, strongly underscore their adherence to the political priority of arms control, who pursuant to the discussion in the United States, which clearly tends one-sidedly toward defense, now wish to establish a sort of counterweight through their discussion, a counterweight tending toward disarmament.

[Question] What you mean to say basically is that Karl-Heinz Hansen is not so wrong with his warnings after all, as far as the matter at issue is concerned?

[Answer] I believe that the remarks made by Karl-Heinz Hansen reflect a profound frustration. What he is saying, however, does not lead to a solution but merely helps aggravate the problems.

[Question] Another field of tension within the SPD is the question of arms exports. In this respect, the Federal Government has announced a review of the definition of areas of tension and a new phrasing of existing principles. But even now, some people question that arms exports can be reconciled at all with the legal provisions valid in our country, for example, with article 26 of the basic law.

[Answer] The experts have recognized and approved arms exports before, and to this day, I know of no court verdict that might have prohibited them. This is why I wish to refrain from forming a legal judgment. But I do believe that the assumption of many people that an increase in arms exports would serve our own interests is incorrect. I believe that it is incorrect with regard to foreign, economic and security policies.

[Question] There is a phrase which is being increasingly applied in the discussion on arms exports, namely, arms exports in keeping with FRG interests. You hinted at that. Is this not dangerous since the practical application of this principle could well cause moral criteria to disappear quite quickly?

[Answer] I proceed from the premise that it is in keeping with our national interests to export as few arms as possible. Yet, I would like to have the general term of national interests specified to mean as well that the requirement of our exporting as few arms as possible will be finalized in writing. I assume, for instance, that jobs in the arms industry are anything but safe jobs. I assume on the basis of the findings hitherto made that the truth is not that the one exporting arms thus creates dependencies, but that, conversely, the one who buys arms can bring pressure to bear on the one who sells them. In many ways, we can see this in the example of France and its difficulties. It goes to show that you not only gain new trade partners but also lose trade partners as a result, because others are irked when you deliver arms to a particular party.

NEWSPAPERS EXAMINE SPD'S INTERNAL TROUBLES

[Text] Oldenburg's NORDWEST ZEITUNG writes: When [SPD] Federal Chairman Willy Brandt refuses to accept the talk of a crisis in the orientation and leadership that has become obvious in the SPD, then his assessment of the state of the SPD merely rounds out the picture of the policy of mollification which he has been pursuing. Brandt's version that the present SPD debates merely involve some deputies is belittling and false. Even if we do not assume that the Social Democrats making it hard for the chancellor to govern and tampering with the coalition are many in number, the bitter fact remains that the Schmidt-Genscher government no longer has in its own ranks the required majority on central questions concerning our security and our national interest.

The editorial of the MUENSTER WESTFALISCHE NACHRICHTEN reads in part: The points of attack are quite obvious. Arms exports, nuclear energy and NATO's counterarmament are the fields in which large segments of the party refuse to follow their chancellor. This includes Klaus Matthiesen, who threw down the gauntlet to Schmidt by giving up the nomination as top candidate in Schleswig-Holstein to the Jusos [Young Socialists]. The fact that chief thinker Erhard Eppler at week's end desperately called for topics where a common denominator could be found indicates that he must seriously admit that they are nonexistent at the moment. Everything the government now has to tackle, which it put off much too long anyway, contains the danger of a split.

STUTTGARTER NACHRICHTEN advocates the following view: Eppler deserves attention because he is trying to lead the self-mutilating tug of war in his party back to an objective discussion. Objectivity includes open, serious debate just as it presupposes a readiness to accept decisions properly adopted even if they are not in keeping with one's own conviction, no matter how well-founded that conviction may be. Anyone who refuses to accept this will split the SPD and throw it back into the opposition. At best this would have the advantage that they can voice any opinion they wish since there would no longer be any need for them to make decisions and bear the responsibility for them.

The MAINZ ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG stresses this point: The loud complaint voiced yesterday by SPD Presidium member Eppler that the party no longer has any major topics that might unify it and set it if from the CDU shows that in all probability Brandt will fail in his effort to introduce calm into the party. Eppler, in any event, contributes little to the party's self-awareness when he says that no new pillars of support for the government are in sight. On the contrary, by his demand for a review of the NATO counterarming decision, Eppler touches the most sensitive spot of the Free Democratic partner in the government and thus throws new explosive matter into the coalition alliance.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE maintains: The clamp of party discipline has been undone, as if there were no longer any Social Democratic government responsibility that needed propping up. Ideological definitions of positions no longer show concern for Schmidt, who is suspected of being an advocate of power, or for the coalition. Anybody who, like Hansen, rejects the entire government policy with invectives is merely reprimanded since too many people--up to the Presidium--already agree with him. The thorn in the side of the Bonn Bundestag faction will fester and tempt the parliamentary left into solidarity, says the editorial of FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE.

In conclusion, a quotation from the daily DIE WELT: In the coming weeks, the SPD will have to prove that its leadership team can once again muster the strength to establish actual cohesion beyond mere appeals for solidarity. The chances for success in this respect are none too favorable.

This is also the fault of the three top leaders. Willy Brandt is viewing developments with a calm which hardly heralds the readiness to fight. Herbert Wehner is fighting gruffly, but lacks the calm which would make readiness to talk and force of conviction instruments in the struggle. Helmut Schmidt is neither calm nor militant but behaves according to his personal rule that his policy in itself is so convincing that anyone who doubts it would have to look for another chancellor.

What constitutes an extra burden on internal pacification is the fact that even within this trio disharmonies occur which are caused by personal relationships. This was the view of the daily DIE WELT.

YUGOSLAVIA'S DJURANOVIC ARRIVES FOR 4-DAY VISIT

[Text] Bonn, 10 Feb (DPA)--The Yugoslav president of the Federal Executive Council, Djuranovic, arrived in Bonn this afternoon on a 4-day official visit to the Federal Republic. Djuranovic, who is repaying Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's visit to Belgrade in 1977, intends to have an initial exchange of views with the chancellor immediately upon arrival.

On the eve of the top-level German-Yugoslav talks, both governments described relations between the two countries as good and pointed to the agreement on assessing important political questions. Djuranovic also will meet Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, representatives of all parliamentary groups and top German industrialists. He also will visit Duesseldorf and Stuttgart.

CABINET ISSUES COMMUNIQUE ON 1980 TRADE BALANCE

[Text] The Council of Ministers met on Tuesday, 4 February 1981, at the Elysse Palace under the chairmanship of Mr Valery Giscard d'Estaing. The following communique was released at the end of the proceedings:

The foreign trade minister delivered a report on [apparent line dropped] of France. Imports in 1982 increased to FR551 billion and exports to FR490 billion. The energy bill, which was only FR84 billion in 1979, rose to FR132 billion in 1980. The FR60.4 billion deficit of 1980 therefore corresponds to a further increase in the energy bill, which in fact increased by FR48 billion from 1979 to 1980. Apart from energy, the remainder of our trade remained stable in 1980, thanks particularly to the dynamism of our agricultural exports and despite a strong current of imports supported by domestic demand.

Trading in the services field showed a further increased surplus, which enabled us to keep the overall deficit in our current transactions for 1980 below FR30 billion.

In the months ahead, the containment of the excessive increase in our exports of goods and services--particularly as a result of major plant and engineering contracts secured over the past 2 years--and the priorities decided on to facilitate exports by small and medium enterprises should make it possible to progressively absorb the consequences of the increased cost of our energy imports.

LE FIGARO VIEWS RESULTS OF GISCARD-SCHMIDT SUMMIT

[Serge Maffert commentary: "Rules of the Game"]

[Text] Messrs Giscard d'Estaing and Schmidt have turned the 37th French-German summit into an event. They were both keen to elucidate several important points, in a disturbed international situation in which tensions are likely to increase rather than decrease, at the start of a new "reign" in Washington and at a time when the EEC is facing problems concerning its growth and an organizational crisis.

The French president and the German chancellor emerged from their talks more convinced than ever of the need for close cooperation between their countries. They were pleased to note "the perfect and unfailing understanding" that exists between them and between French and FRG policy.

The Paris meetings on Thursday and Friday therefore will have served first to confirm the existence and value of the "French-German nucleus" in the political, economic, EEC and cultural fields.

The natural extension of this French-German nucleus is the Europe of the Ten and its role as an economic entity and as a coordinated political unit, with a view to it playing its own role in world affairs. Within this dual outlook, in the intentions of Messrs Giscard d'Estaing and Schmidt, France and Germany should play a role in providing a stimulus and proposals, as happened, already, particularly in connection with the Middle East.

Last, but above all, the French-German meeting resulted in a very important "joint declaration" which, if it gains adherence from other partners, might form one of the foundations of future European action. This declaration in any case forms a basic element for coordinating French and German foreign policies and at the same time establishes a kind of code of conduct, or rather specifies the rules of consultation between the United States and Europe and of the dialogue with the Soviet Union.

To this end, Messrs Giscard d'Estaing and Schmidt, working in consultation, formulated their own principles for their respective countries, summed up in the following three proposals: the need for balanced security (with its corollary, a global balance of forces); the need for moderation in political conduct (with, in particular, a number of warnings to the USSR regarding Poland and Afghanistan) and the need for equal responsibility with regard to the world's major problems (including, in particular, respect for the Third World's aspiration to a "real nonalignment").

The most interesting part about all this is the fact that, by adopting these stances, France and Germany are acting as an autonomous unit instead of making decisions in relation to the Americans or Soviets. On the contrary, by presenting their "body of doctrine" right away the two countries are ensuring that Washington and Moscow will have to take the existence and desires of Europe into account.

OFFICIALS MEET WITH TURKISH FOREIGN MINISTER

Mr Turkmen, in France on a two-day official visit, said afterward he wanted to "strengthen Franco-Turkish relations in the tradition of friendship" and from this viewpoint the talks had been "encouraging."

Subjects discussed included East-West relations, the recent Islamic conference in Saudi Arabia, and the situation in the eastern Mediterranean.

Four student organisations, including one representing Turks studying here, meanwhile issued a statement attacking "the military dictatorship" in Turkey and called for the immediate liberation of "thousands of impriosned democrats."

Another organisation, the Association of Friends of the Republic of Cyprus, described Mr Turkmen's visit as a "scandal" and denounced "the torture erected into a system" by the Turkish Army in Cyprus.

BRAZILIAN PRESIDENT GIVES PRESS CONFERENCE 2 FEB

PY091402 Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 4 Feb 81 p 13

[Text of press conference granted by Brazilian President Joao Figueiredo on 2 February in Lisbon]

[Excerpts] [Question] What is your opinion of the position recently adopted by the Brazilian church regarding the regime?

[Answer] I would not say that the Brazilian church has adopted a position regarding the regime. I would say that some individuals within the church have expressed their opinions about certain matters, which at times appear to conflict with the government's viewpoint. I have spoken a lot with some of the church's highest-ranking officials and I have observed that there is agreement regarding viewpoints. The fact is that some individuals do not view certain matters the same way as the government does. I recognize the church's rights, in accordance with our constitution, to help and cooperate with the government, especially in the educational and health sectors; but on the other hand, I view it very dangerous for the church to leave this path and at times, without seeming to do so, enter the field of politics. In this sense I have an easy conscience because I have already seen the letter that his holiness has written and I have learned through the press of the letter in which his holiness emphasizes my viewpoint. Another point that sometimes conflicts with some individuals within the church is the fact that I have a law which I must obey and therefore I cannot step out of bounds, but the church has its own laws which at times do not coincide with what is written in our constitution. But that displeasure of the church against the regime just does not exist. What does exist are some viewpoints of some individuals which do not coincide with ours. And God help me if there happened to be overall agreement.

[Question] We all observed a communist party demonstration in the [Portuguese] Assembly. That night Deputy Alvaro Valle said that the cause was due to the fact that the Brazilian Government has slighted the PCP, which in turn was meant as a message for the Brazilian Communist Party [PCB], and that this would be another political burden for the Social Democratic Party [PDS], which in turn could cause a diplomatic problem, because if Chairman Brezhnev visited Brazil tomorrow he could slight the PDS. What is your opinion regarding the demonstration and was it the Brazilian Government that slighted the PCP?

[Answer] Minister Saraiva Guerreiro has clarified that they were invited. I personally must tell you gentlemen that I learned of the problem through the Portuguese press. I had no knowledge of the matter. Saraiva Guerreiro has informed me that they were invited and that there was no reason not to invite them because they are members of the Portuguese Assembly. I have had the occasion to say in Brazil that I am willing to hold a dialogue with every sector, including the PCB, if the dialogue will benefit the country's political progress and normalization. I have no reason not to meet with them. I believe that there has been a misunderstanding in this matter. I would like to tell you gentlemen that I am not an anticommunist; I am against the communists because I do not accept the communist ideology. But this does not mean that I do not accept them as human beings, as citizens and that at times I have not even defended some ideas that the communists have also defended.

[Question] You have just asserted that you defend some ideas also defended by the communists. Could you explain? In which sector? How was this agreement of ideas arrived at?

[Answer] An improvement in the lives of the most deprived sectors of the population. I believe that every regime and religion throughout the world defends this. Better salaries for the workers: who does not desire better salaries for the workers? Better work, health and security in their working places; this, just to cite the most common points and which can be read in all the newspapers everyday.

[Question] First: You guaranteed that the Portuguese were not to blame for the bomb that exploded early this morning. What makes you say that it was not the Portuguese, or why are you so sure and whom do you suspect it could have been? Another point: What provoked the misunderstanding regarding the slight of the PCP? It is not enough to say that there was a misunderstanding, could you clarify this point some more?

[Answer] I believe I did not express myself properly when I said that "I guarantee that it was not a Portuguese." What I said was that it must have been someone who was unhappy with my presence here. I admit that the Portuguese in general are pleased with my presence here, and in view of this I said that it could not have been a Portuguese, but then it might have been a black sheep. What I do regret, though, is that if I am not wanted the bomb should have been thrown at me and not against the Bank of Brazil office. In the end, the Bank of Brazil has nothing to do with it. It is an imbecilic way of protesting. Regarding your other question: I have already spoken with Minister Sariva Guerreiro and he is going to investigate the truth of the matter.

[Question] Your internal policy in Brazil is based on the so-called political opening, which can lead to democracy. Meanwhile, regarding foreign policy, you have made several trips, including trips to Chile and Argentina where military and totalitarian regimes exist. Is this not incongruous or, on the other hand, does this demostrate the difference between the internal and foreign policies of your government?

[Answer] An incoherence?

[Question] Yes...

[Answer] No, absolutely not. I separate the two things. The internal policy of each country, whether it be Argentina, Chile, Paraguay or Brazil, is one thing; our relations with those countries is another thing. My visit to those countries had the goal of reaffirming and strengthening our friendly links to each of them. Now, if it is true that the democratic political opening in Brazil can serve some purpose in those countries, then it is up to those countries themselves. In my talks with the leaders of each country I have never talked about the consequences that the political opening in Brazil is having on the people. I only discussed mutual interests, ours as related to theirs, and of all the countries in America as related to international policies.

[Question] After your speech in the Assembly, Socialist leader and Deputy Mario Soares lauded your speech and the effort to implement democracy in Brazil. I ask: Why did you not receive, either in France or here in Portugal, any opposition leader, because within 2 months the Socialist leader may gain power in France is he wins the elections, and Mario Soares may return to power here in Portugal?

[Answer] I am very happy, I am very happy and honored with that information. I have not read it, but I have learned of Soares' statement. I am very honored by it. Now, during my trips aboard it is a custom on mine to avoid taking the initiative regarding contacts with members of the opposition because I believe that would be highly unfriendly toward the government of the country.

In certain cases, such as in Paraguay, it was the Paraguayan president himself who called me into a corner and introduced me to some opposition deputies and we had, myself and President Stroessner, a cordial conversation with those deputies. If I did not have the opportunity to talk with members of the opposition it was, in the first place, because no initiative was taken by any member of the French Government and, in the second place, because I would never take the initiative. This does not mean to say that I did not want to talk to them.

FRG FOREIGN MINISTER HOLDS TALKS WITH ULLSTEN

[Text] Stockholm, 9 Feb (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Swedish Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten agree that the dialogue between the great powers and efforts for detente must be continued. A talk between Genscher and Ullsten in Stockholm today focused on the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the Middle East crisis area, the situation in Poland, the process of detente and the North-South dialogue.

Diplomatic circles said that Genscher expressed concern about Soviet arming with medium-range missiles. The threatened European countries have no weapons of equal value. Genscher said that despite the NATO counterarming decision of November 1979, U.S. medium-range missiles would be deployed in Europe in 1983 only if no results in disarmament are achieved. European disarmament conference only makes sense if it is laid down from the outset that the area to which the confidence-building measures apply extends from the Atlantic to the Urals.

The two ministers agreed that world economic developments in the 1980s would be an important topic. Genscher praised Sweden's exemplary role in the North-South dialogue. He said it was to be hoped that the Mexico summit would manage to produce political guidelines for solving the problems of the industrial countries and the Third World. The two ministers dispensed with discussion of bilateral questions because, as they said, there were no problems in German-Swedish relations.

Genscher ends his visit tomorrow with talks with Swedish Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin and the Liberal parliamentary group, and will then return to Bonn.

Praises Neutrality Policy

[Text] Stockholm, 9 Feb (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher praised Sweden's consistent policy of neutrality this evening in Stockholm. Speaking at a dinner given for his German guest by Ola Ullsten, Swedish Foreign Minister, Genscher said that Sweden, in this way, was making an important contribution to stability in northern Europe and to the stability of the entire continent.

Genscher stressed that the United States was indispensable as a partner of the Western defence alliance for securing a balance in Europe. In view of the uneasy world situation which has become more susceptible to crisis, an unprejudiced readiness for talks, arms control and intensive efforts to reduce tensions were especially urgent on all sides. If there were a reversal to cold war, no one would suffer more than the German people which were forced to live in two states.

Ullsten said that the Swedish side appreciated the Federal Republic's involvement in the policy of detente, for which there is no alternative. Ullsten said, with regard to the situation in Poland, that Sweden was proceeding from the premise that the Poles' right to determine their future themselves was being respected by all.

NATIONAL COUNCIL MEETS, DISCUSSES CYPRIOT EVENTS

[Text] This afternoon, the National Council met under President Kiprianou. At the beginning of the meeting, there was an exchange of views on the best possible way for the National Council of function. There followed a detailed briefing of the National Council on the latest developments in the Cypriot problem.

The meeting, which lasted about 2 and 1/2 hours, was attended by House President and Chairman of the New Democratic Front Mikhailidhis; Democratic Party parliamentary spokesman Ladhas; AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou; EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis; Spanos, on behalf of the Center Union; Pan-Cypriot revitalization Front Chairman Sofianos; Interior Minister Veniamin, who is acting foreign minister; Ioannidhis, the Greek Cypriots' representative at the intercommunal talks; Triandafillidhis and Mrs Soulioti, advisers at the intercommunal talks.

ALITHIA: TURKS' DEMANDS THREATEN CYPRIOT TALKS

NC091113 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 9 Feb 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] According to exclusive reports from authoritative sources, the Cyprus issue is in a dangerous deadlock and basically the inter-Cypriot talks are dead.

Specifically, the Greek Cypriot side's inability, the lack of necessary political decisions on their part, their isolation from the Western factor following the rejection of the Western framework and the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement on practical measures, have allowed Turkish intransigence to lead to the current stagnation, which is considered more dangerous than even before.

The serious responsibility of the people, who are currently handling the Cyprus problem and of those who put them in power, emerges from a simple comparison of the U.S. plan with the present demands of the Turks. This comparison was made during confidential meetings by those in power and, according to our reports, is causing political panic. It is for this reason that at every possible occasion recently, desperate cries are being heard for the revival of the National Council and for unanimous agreement on a "minimum program." This move is in an effort to wrest the responsibility from those guilty people and their helpers, who have led the Cyprus problem to its current position of not precluding double enosis as the only way out--a solution which would be presented as an unacceptable dire necessity.

We reveal therefore the Turks' current demands, and compare these with some provisions of the U.S. plan (framework for a solution suggested by the United States, Britain and Canada.)

On the constitutional aspect, the Turks are currently not asking for one president and a vice president as envisaged in the U.S. plan, but for four presidents, two Greeks and two Turks, with official documents to be signed by one of the four, as chairman, serving in this capacity on rotation. The Turks are also asking for equal participation in the central government.

As to the Famagusta issue, the Turks will not negotiate the issue of the refugees' return to Famagusta in conjunction with the issue of the Nicosia airport because, as they say, the Greeks demand the reopening of the airport, not the Turkish side. They say that before the issue of the refugees' return to a part of Famagusta can be discussed, the so-called economic embargo on the north must be lifted and the Greek side must inform foreign travel agencies that it does not object to tourists vacationing in the occupied hotels. At the same time, northern ports must be opened for legitimate commerce and the Greek side must condone the export of products from the occupied territories (mainly agricultural products originating from land owned by refugees!)

As for the Nicosia airport, the Turkish side says that it does not object to its being reopened, provided that there are two entrances and exits, one from and to the Greek side and another from and to the Turkish side with separate passport control and customs clearance.

Generally, when exploring the paragraph on practical measures of the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement--which weakened and did not improve the Makarios-Denktas agreement--the Turks adamantly, and from a position of strength, ask that their "state" be given the right to conclude separate commercial agreements and have its own ports and customs system. This would mean an independent northern state, subject to international law, which proves that they seek a confederal, not federal, solution.

We recall that:

1. The U.S. plan provides for the resettlement of Famagusta prior to the start of the talks. The refugees' return to the town would not constitute a negotiating issue on..."practical measures."

2. The U.S. plan provides for a federal solution without setting up authorities, such as the Turks are currently asking, and without separate ports and an independent "northern state" under international law.

Paragraph 4 of the Western framework stresses that customs, travel and emigration services would be under the control of the central government together with other servies.

In addition, paragraph 4 of the U.S. framework mentioned the following on the immediate return to Famagusta: "For the purpose of promoting an atmosphere of good will and in order to solve pressing humanitarian problems, the Varosha area will become the object of resettlement under protection, and in accordance with United Nations arrangements to be concluded. Such resettlement will be initialed in a concise agreement simultaneously with the resumption of complete intercommunal negotiations."

Generally, the Western framework envisaged a federal solution in a way that would avert partition. The stagnation into which the Cyprus problem has now been led creates uneasiness in many circles who fear that the only remaining development may be "double enosis" about which former interlocutor Tasos Papadhopoulos spoke once.

According to the same reports, the opposition, and especially Kliridhis, does not wish to share the responsibility for the bad maneuvering that has led--and still leads--to the creation of new faits accomplis or dire necessities, not only by the conquerors' intransigence but by the inability and incompetence of the rulers and their former and current partners.

The paper recalled that the Democratic Rally had asked, in good time, for the acceptance of the Western framework which would result in the return [of the refugees] to Famagusta before the resumption of negotiations, thus precluding that the Turkish side would negotiate from a position of strength, given the fact that the West would have the opportunity for pressures and constructive intervention.

AVEROF CLAIMS REAL COMMAND CONTROL OF U.S. BASE

[Text] The Greek commanding officer of the U.S. Air Force base at Ellinikon is exercising real command, and is not merely a figurehead, Defense Minister Evangelos Averof yesterday contended, responding to a question submitted to Parliament by Panhellenic Socialist Movement (PASOK) MPs.

Mr Averof first gave his own version of what took place at Ellinikon during the landing there, for refuelling, of the planes carrying the freed U.S. hostages from Iran to Algeria two weeks ago. Events of that day had led opposition parties and the press to charge there is actually no Greek C.O. at the base and that the government and base authorities had cooperated in staging a charade for the press' benefit, by presenting as C.O. a Greek Air Force officer delegated to play the part just for the occasion.

Due to the base's importance and peculiar nature, Averof said, the government had placed as C.O. an experienced, senior flying officer with the rank of colonel. The defense minister also claimed that the New Democracy governments were the first to raise the issue of revising the status of operation for U.S. military bases in Greece, and that they had proceeded to unilateral measures to safeguard "national dignity."

He expressed hope that ongoing negotiations for signing a new Greek-U.S. treaty regulating the future status of the bases will result in a similar status for all U.S. bases in Greece, and said they might even improve on the current status.

Papandreou Voices Skepticism

[Text] Panhellenic Socialist Movement (PASOK) President Andreas Papandreou yesterday charged Defense Minister Evangelos Averof with misleading the people on the present status of U.S. military bases in Greece.

The charge came in a response to Mr Averof's statements yesterday, where, answering a written question submitted to Parliament by PASOK MPs, the defense minister claimed that the U.S. Air Force base at Ellinikon Airport, and other U.S. military installations in Greece, are under effective Greek control, exercised by a Greek commanding officer.

The base's command and control belongs entirely to the American commanding officer, Papandreou said. The Greek C.O.'s authority concerns only secondary matters, like flying the Greek flag and putting signs in Greek.

What counts, the main opposition leader said, is command and control, and exclusive jurisdiction in this respect belongs to the United States. The defense minister is therefore misleading the public when he claims there is effective Greek control over the bases.

In a response released to the press late last night, Defense Minister Averof stood by his earlier statements on the status of the bases, and disputed Mr Papandreou's claims.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON U.S. BASES NEGOTIATIONS

RIZOSPASTIS Column

NC091402 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 8 Feb 81 p 3

[From the "Political Issues" column: "Bases--What Are They Negotiating With the U.S.?"]

[Text] The U.S.-Greek negotiations on a new agreement on the bases are continuing under conditions of absolute secrecy. It is definite that they will be concluded before long since both sides are eager "to close" the issue. Naturally they have their reasons for this.

The Government is in a hurry because the NC [New Democracy] government knows that the fresh chaining of our country will not be without negative effects on the rightwing's election prospects. Thus, it seeks to have "distance of time" from the day the agreement is signed to election day so that the issue would be forgotten, the people's reaction defused. The government is fully aware of the antinational character of the new agreement and it is eager to conclude its heinous work which started with the reconfinement within NATO and the long-term linkage of our country's future and fate. The illusions of the rightwing--if one can still talk about illusions--do not seem to have been forgotten by the competent officials.

The Americans are also in a hurry. They need the bases with their nuclear material and their spy network in order to threaten the country's neighbors, detente and peace in the Balkans and our very national existence. They need--more than ever--the bases in Greece for the fresh adventurism that they plan for our region and our country as well.

There are no substantive disagreements between the negotiators. There is "full identity of positions" on all the basic, substantive questions. Thus, during their talks they do not discuss "resolved questions." They have no reason to discuss whether or not the bases will stay on Greek territory, whether or not their nuclear arms, their spy network, the "facilities" which they have in Greek seas and harbors will remain. These are "obvious" things and are not discussed. And, naturally, there cannot be any serious talk about the famous "Greek command" or "joint command" at the bases, or control over these bases. The government knows quite well that all this is mere deceit--no matter if the government is publicly maintaining the opposite.

Well, what is the subject of the negotiations? What are the two delegations discussing behind closed doors at the U.S. Embassy or the Foreign Ministry? The competent government officials give the answer in many half words and with evasive statements:

They are talking about the country's honor and dignity and they measure both with U.S. dollars. They are bargaining over national security and independence, normal democratic conditions and peace, in exchange for generous grants from U.S. stratocracy.

They are bargaining over the future of the country and the nation in exchange for the American Pentagon's economic, political and military aid. And when agreement is made, they [the competent government officials] will come out with the impudence and the cynicism of a vassal to speak everywhere about the new "national triumph" of the rightwing!

But they have made a "minor mistake" in their calculations. There cannot be any faits accomplis either for the bases, or NATO or the EEC. Our people and their patriotic forces do not recognize "faits accomplis." The road leading to elections is wide open. The hour of punishment by the people is not far. The rightwing will receive more than it deserves.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA Report

["Exclusive" report to ELEVTHEROTIPIA by Louis Dhanos]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Haig has rejected a Greek request to commit the United States to the 7 to 10 ratio regarding the aid his country will grant to Greece and Turkey. The request was expressed by Greek Ambassador to Washington Tzounis during his meeting with the head of the State Department last Thursday. According to a Washington authoritative source, during this meeting, Haig rejected the request, maintaining that "accepting it would create negative world reaction." Of course, he meant Ankara's reaction.

Nevertheless, according to the same source, the Americans are optimistic that the bases negotiations in Athens will succeed.

NEWS: FRG'S KOHL ON NEUTRON BOMB, AID RATIOS

[Excerpts] West German Christian Democrat leader Helmut Kohl said in Athens Friday that his party was in favor of the deployment of neutron bombs in West Germany if negotiations for effective disarmament failed. He told a press conference after a three-day visit to Athens he was pleased that the U.S. Government had said that nothing would be done to deploy neutron bombs in Europe without close and extensive consultations with its European allies.

Mr Kohl said his party and the Christian Socialist Union Party (CSU) believed in easing tension and favoring detente and worldwide controlled disarmament.

He said that for the past 10 years the Soviet Union had had a superiority in conventional weapons and medium-range missiles although there was a balance in intercontinental ballistic missiles between the two superpowers.

On Greece's entry to the EEC, Mr Kohl said it gives rise to many expectations, at it will give new impetus to the idea of a united Europe, which was showing signs of fatigue in recent years.

Asked to define his party's position on West German military aid to Greece and Turkey, which, from the 3:5 ratio in effect since 1974, became 1:10 last year, Mr Kohl said he discussed the issue in Athens and is convinced that the 1:10 ratio is totally unfounded. "As soon as I go back to Germany," he said, "I will discuss the matter with my colleagues and try to bring the ratio back to 3:5."

JOINT COMMUNIQUE ISSUED ON PCP DELEGATION VISIT

[Text] A PCP delegation composed of Secretary General Comrade Alvaro Cunhal and Political Commission candidate member Comrade Jose Casanova visited Greece from 21 through 24 January 1981 at the invitation of the KKE Central Committee.

During its stay in Greece, the PCP Central Committee delegation had talks with a KKE Central Committee delegation composed of the following comrades: Central Committee Secretary General Kh. Florakis, Central Committee Politburo member, N. Kaloudhis, Central Committee Politburo member A. Ambatielos, Central Committee member A. Paparigas and Central Committee candidate member M. Spyridakis.

The PCP delegation had a meeting with KKE cadres from the city of Piraeus. Comrade Alvaro Cunhal spoke at a meeting of KKE cadres at Athens Sports Stadium. He also had a meeting with Chairman of the Panhellenic Socialist Movement A. Papandreou.

During the KKE-PCP talks, which took place in a cordial and comradely atmosphere, the two delegations had an exchange of information on the two parties' activity and respective viewpoints on topical international issues and on various aspects of the international communist and workers' movement.

A concordance of opinions was noted on all the important issues discussed.

The KKE delegation briefed the PCP delegation on the struggle being waged by the KKE at the head of the working class and the other workers for the sake of their unity and in defense of their living standards and their trade union and democratic freedoms, against the efforts of the monopolies and the government to unload the burden of the profound economic crisis on the shoulders of the workers and the people by means of the policy of unilateral austerity and authoritarianism; for the KKE's struggle, with other anti-imperialist and peace-loving forces, against the aggressive imperialist policy, for the defense of detente and peace, for disarmament, for the implementation of the principles of peaceful coexistence in the Balkans, Europe and the Mediterranean and the entire world, for Greece's exit from aggressive NATO and the monopoly EEC, for the elimination of foreign military bases and to safeguard national independence and sovereignty.

The KKE delegation emphasized its indefatigable efforts on behalf of the unity of all leftwing and democratic, anti-imperialist forces in the struggle to remove the right from power, for a real democratic turning point in the country's life, and for the adoption of a policy of national independence, peace, democratization and economic development for the people's benefit.

The PCP delivered a report on the situation in Portugal and stressed the major changes that have taken place as a result of the 7 December presidential elections. The defeat of the reactionary parties' candidate blocked the right's attack on the Portuguese people's revolutionary gains (democratic freedoms, nationalizations, the agrarian reform, workers' rights) and prevented the success of the reaction's subversive plan aimed at a prompt revision of the constitution and the elimination of the democratic system. Stressing the difficulties and dangers which still remain, the PCP delegation reported on the heroic and powerful struggle of the people's masses and on the PCP's efforts to unite patriots and democrats in defending, consolidating and continuing the gains of the Portuguese revolution and the democratic system consecrated in the constitution.

Both delegations expressed their concern at the deterioration in the international situation, the prime responsibility for which lies with U.S. imperialism, backed by the reactionary forces and the Beijing leaders. By means of actions such as the decision to deploy new nuclear missiles in Western Europe, the violation of signed agreements, the creation of rapid deployment forces, the expansion and reorganization of its aggressive system in the Middle East and the Indian Ocean, the concentration of large-scale sea, air and land forces in the Gulf, and the measures taken against progressive forces on other continents, U.S. imperialism is imparting a new thrust to the arms race, raising serious obstacles to the detente process and prompting tensions and conflicts.

The KKE and PCP believe that systematic and constant efforts must be stepped up to mobilize the people's masses and all peace-loving forces to defend detente, to consolidate peace and to promote international cooperation based on the principles of the Helsinki Final Act.

Both delegations declared that their parties are keen to make a decisive contribution to the efforts to achieve these noble objectives. Both parties steadfastly oppose NATO's aggressive policy.

Both delegations stressed the dangers to national independence and the peoples' security stemming from their respective governments growing commitment to this policy. They also oppose their country's integration into the monopoly EEC.

Both parties firmly believe in the decisive importance to the cause of peace and disarmament and to the workers' and peoples' liberation struggle of cooperation among the countries of the socialist community, the workers' movement of the capitalist countries and the national liberation movement. They consider it particularly necessary to further strengthen the unity and coordination of action of the international communist movement.

The PCP and KKE express their solidarity with the African, Asian and Latin American peoples' struggles for national independence and social progress; they support the Salvadoran people's heroic struggle and denounce all forms of intervention by the U.S. imperialists.

With regard to the Iraq-Iran war, both parties expressed their deep anxiety and believe that the two sides must peacefully resolve their differences. The two delegations expressed their support for the Palestinian Arab people's heroic struggle. They expressed their solidarity with the Cypriot people and spoke out in favor of an equitable solution based on the UN resolutions.

The two parties urged the withdrawal of all nuclear weapon-carrying warships from the Mediterranean, the closing of foreign military bases and the transformation of the Mediterranean into a sea of peace and cooperation.

They also confirmed their solidarity with the People's Republic of Afghanistan.

They condemn the South African racists' armed interventions against the People's Republic of Angola and support the Namibian people's struggle and the South African people's struggle against apartheid.

The delegations expressed their solidarity with socialist Poland and the Polish United Workers Party in their efforts to surmount their difficulties and to resolve their domestic problems.

They express their total solidarity with the Turkish democratic parties and trade union and democratic organizations and with the thousands of arrested patriots.

Both parties confirm once again the traditional ties of friendship and solidarity which link them and stress their determination to strengthen and develop them on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. In the interests of the Greek and Portuguese peoples and in the interests of the struggle of the world's workers and peoples for freedom, democracy, national independence, peace and socialism.

TERCUMAN URGES POLICY ON EAST, WEST TURKESTAN

["Street Corner" column by Ergun Goze: "Horizon in our Foreign Policy"]

[Text] The 12 September operation has been pursuing anarchy very closely. Anarchy is now in the last throes of death. Many other issues too are being successfully handled. However, the most important issue concerns the survival of the state and the unity of the nation. For, at this moment, the Turkish State is under attack. Aren't those who have raided the police station in Izmir the enemies of the Turkish State? Aren't the uncovered "organizations" the enemies of the fatherland, the nation, the state and the Turkish flag? The Turkish State must mobilize all its resources both at home and abroad. Old wars and battles are no longer in vogue. Now "indirect attacks" and, "ideological wars" are popular.

Why should the enemy attack Turkey with heavy guns and tanks? Why should he mobilize millions of his soldiers? He has more sense than that. He simply sets up a trade union and provides it with tactics and funds as well as passports, "if badly needed," and incites our country. The enemy does not stop at that. He gets newspapers and magazines published and he trains militants, who are later assigned to lead underground organizations. If he is not satisfied with this, he arranges for police stations to be bombed, and for policemen, gendarmes and army officers to be killed. He compels the security forces, whose task is to maintain external security, to be preoccupied with internal security affairs without moving one of his own soldiers from his barracks. This is exactly what has been happening.

In that case, something has to be done about it. The enemy must be hit back at his most vulnerable point. He must be harassed with unexpected problems and worries by continually finding new allies and friends and by rectifying past mistakes.

Turkey has begun to widen its horizon and to increase its possibilities by readjusting its Middle East policy in accordance with the dictates of the historical and geographical conditions. Other similar developments must follow. We must have another look at the world map and we must formulate a new topographical policy.

As soon as this is done, we shall realize what a great opportunity East Turkestan offers, and we shall be utterly bewildered as to how we could neglect such a possibility. East Turkestan is under Red China's occupation, while West Turkestan is under Russian occupation. And yet, both China and Russia are waging an anti-imperialistic campaign with their Maoists and Leninists in Turkey. Red China is imperialist in East Turkestan but anti-imperialist in Turkey. The same thing could be said of Russia. The fact that the Maoists in Turkey never say a word about East Turkestan is adequate proof of their deceit and servility. The Leninists are equally deceitful because they never say a word about Turks enslaved by the Russians.

Today China and Russia are ruthlessly hostile to each other. Russia and China dread each other more than they dread the United States. So much so that China wants to create a Chinese force between itself and the Soviet Union, and the most appropriate place is the East Turkestani territory. China aspires to exploiting this rich and wide territory and to use it as an umbrella. Russia, on the other hand, wishes to occupy East Turkestan by using West Turkestan; but it has so far been unable to find a Babrak Karmal. However, as Red China surpasses Russia in tyranny, hundreds of thousands of Turks have fled from East Turkestan to West Turkestan.

The United States, on the other hand, has tied up these two octopuses to one another and is trying to implement its own world policy.

In the meantime, our compatriots in East and West Turkistan look upon Turkey as their fatherland. Only our Foreign Ministry is unaware of the existence of East Turkistan. Even the Japanese have a special policy toward East Turkestan. It is a matter of horizon...

As-Sadat Dinner Speech

NC102134 Cairo Domestic Service in Arabic 2051 GMT 10 Feb 81

[Speech delivered by Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat at a dinner banquet hosted in his honor at the Golf Club in Luxembourg on 10 February by European Parliament President Simone Veil--live in French with superimposed Arabic translation]

[Text] Madame President, dear friends: I would first like to thank Madame Veil for the speech she made now and which concerns my country and my person. I would like also to express my joy at being here among you, which has provided me with the opportunity to meet with many friends. The feelings of amity which link us with the Europeans have roots in our culture and civilzation. Therefore, I am very happy that you have enabled me to exchange views within this framework.

We are convinced of the importance of intensifying cooperation with Europe in general and with each European country separately. We are also convinced that the security and stability of the European Continent are totally connected with the stability and peace in the Middle East, because there are common strategic interests. We also consider that Europe always has a role to play in all international issues. Therefore, I was pleased with the discussions I held with all members present here. I take this opportunity to express my pleasure and the joy all members of our People's Assembly would have to welcome you, particularly Madame Veil, in Egypt.

Now, I propose a toast to the health of Madame Veil and all the friends here and to the friendly relations which link us. We wish prosperity and happiness to all the peoples of Europe. [applause]

Simone Veil Interview

NC101955 Cairo MENA in English 1940 GMT 10 Feb 81

[By Hazem Foda, MENA staff correspondent]

[Text] Luxembourg, 10 Feb (MENA)--Speaker of the European Parliament Simone Veil described today Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat as the outstanding world personality that was capable through his generosity and faith to face up to conflicts and international forces and that was why he was invited to address the European Parliament.

In an exclusive interview with the MIDDLE EAST NEWS AGENCY, Mrs Veil pointed out that for resolving the Palestinian problem it should be first recognised that the Palestinian reality has changed a lot over the past twenty years. The Mideast resolution should take place though mutual recognition by various parties of each other, particularly Israel and the Palestinians, so as to conduct an open dialogue.

The European Parliament as an institution had no authority to negotiate for peace, she said. However, it was hopeful to rouse world conscience through its discussions that would help expound all the historical and human factors pertaining to the problem, the speaker said.

Asked about what Israel had offered to match President as-Sadat's peace initiative, Mrs Veil said that it was difficult in this world to get something as matchable, though, she said, what was more important was what had been accomplished on the peace road. Israel's acceptance of a number of articles in the Camp David agreements represented concessions made by Israel, Mrs Veil said citing Israel's pull out from the Sinai Peninsula, and its giving back the oil wells in the Peninsula.

About the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, the European Parliament's speaker said that she was against the setting up of settlements as they increased difficulties on the peace road.

About Jerusalem, she said that the parties concerned alone were capable of discussing the status of Jerusalem which was the religious centre of all the celestial religions.

CHANCELLOR KREISKY CRITICIZES POLISH TRADE UNIONS

AU101512 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1119 GMT 10 Feb 81

["Excerpt" from a 10 February 1981 Vienna press conference by Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, with Kreisky comments on the Polish Government reshuffle and General Jaruzelski's appointment as Premier--recorded]

[Text] [Kreisky] I do not regard this reshuffle as any symptom of any kind. I do not regard the fact that U.S. foreign policy is headed by a general as any indication of a characteristic change in this foreign policy, either.

[Question] Could the taking over of the premiership by a military man be the beginning of what has been termed a third road, between outside intervention and continuation of the past development?

[Answer] I could imagine that perhaps the reshuffle is designed, among other things, to give the Polish Government a higher measure of authority; because everyone knows that in the past few months, it has lost some of its authority. And it is also known that the decisive aspect for the future is that the government is again able to govern. It is probably also of decisive importance for Poland's future that the trade unions occupy the place that befits trade unions. You see, in our country it would not be possible for trade unions, either, to come and demand that this or that regional administrator quit, or a certain minister has to resign. Our trade unions do not do that because it is not their task. But I do understand that in a country where there is no opposition, such movements play a special part and have a special function, and cannot simply be restricted to the function of our trade unions. Nevertheless, the essential function of trade unions is to represent their members' interests. But this is no criticism, I am merely warning against developments that might automatically lead in Poland to a solution that would not be very pleasant for all of us--for the Poles as well as for us.

SCHMIDT VIEWS ENERGY SUPPLIES, SECURITY INTERESTS

[Text] Bonn, 10 Feb (DPA)--In connection with the discussion about arms exports, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has underlined the Federal Republic's security interests with regard to energy supplies. Speaking at the general assembly of the German Chamber of Industry and Trade in Bonn this evening, Schmidt established a link with the Federal Republic's dependence on energy imports. He said that although the framework of the NATO defense alliance is definitively outlined in geographic terms, this is not yet the case with out security interests.

Schmidt emphasized his view that all energy sources, including nuclear energy, must be utilized to "spread the risk." At the same time, he stressed the Federal Government's readiness to comprehensively cooperate with new U.S. President Ronald Reagan.

According to the chancellor, the Federal Republic has "no cause at all" in view of the "exceptional restraint" exercised to date in its arms exports to have a troubled conscience. Schmidt said that the limited capacities of the arms industry should on no account be expanded because of exports or jobs. He drew attention to the mere 0.5 percent proportion of arms in German exports.

In Schmidt's view, the internal political discussion about the construction of the Brokdorf nuclear powerplant, the question of tank exports to Saudi Arabia and NATO's twin decision have assumed "an artificial topicality." He warned against not overlooking the impression made on foreign countries. We have "a reputation to protect on the outside as well."

The federal chancellor accused entrepreneurs and their organizations of having explained to the population too little about the construction of nuclear powerplants and not having put forward the reasons for them strongly enough. It is not only the affair of the state to ensure that they are accepted. One cannot "simply clap" new modern technologies onto the people otherwise trust in democracy would be jeopardized.

Regarding German-U.S. relations, Schmidt said that they have a broad and firm basis. Joint interests and ideals exist. President Reagan can count on the Federal Government's readiness for "comprehensive and predictable" cooperation. German policy toward East Europe also will remain predictable. According to Schmidt, the Federal Government will make German interests clear in the coming intensive consultations with the new U.S. administration.

In the chancellor's view, the economic problems following the second oil price explosion and which the world must overcome during the next few years are greater than in 1973-74. There is no reason to dress up the present situation, nor is there a reason to paint a black picture. To remove the deficit in German terms of trade, Schmidt believes that a considerable increase in German industry's competitiveness is necessary. Furthermore, the amount of oil used in energy consumption must be reduced. The Federal Government will at some point put a legal ban on powerplants which produce electricity from oil.

REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF YUGOSLAVIA'S DJURANOVIC

Schmidt, Djuranovic Speeches

[Excerpts] Bonn, 10 Feb (DPA)--The President of the Yugoslav Federal Executive Council, Veselin Djuranovic, arrived in Bonn today for the first top-level official talks between West Germany and Yugoslavia for almost 4 years. Immediately after his welcome, with full military honors, Djuranovic had a comprehensive exchange of views with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt which later also was attended by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher.

Speaking at a dinner this evening, which the chancellor gave in honor of his guest, Schmidt and Djuranovic stressed the need to end the arms race. Both sides described it as important to the Madrid followup Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) to reach decisions on a European disarmament conference. Schmidt emphasized that what is important is the introduction of "militarily significant, binding and verifiable trust-building measures which must be applicable to the entire European continent, including the European part of the Soviet Union."

In view of the growing number of hotbeds of tension, the two government leaders said that respect for equality and independence as well as noninterference are the essential bases for peaceful coexistence. Djuranovic described the policy of nonalignment as the "only sensible alternative" to the continuing aggravations in relations in the world. He further complained that global talks on bringing the North-South gap into balance and on a new world economic order are being "shelved."

Schmidt and Djuranovic expressed satisfaction at the development and upsurge in mutual relations. Djuranovic also referred in this respect to the activities of emigre Croats in the Federal Republic and said that the Yugoslav public attentively is following the measures being taken in the Federal Republic against "elements of hostile-minded emigres."

On the subject of economic relations, Djuranovic said that Yugoslavia's continuing trade deficit with the Federal Republic (January to November 1980: DM2.44 billion) could become a "serious obstacle to overall economic cooperation" if both sides do not do more to achieve a better balance. Schmidt praised the industry and skill of the 360,000 Yugoslav guest workers in the Federal Republic who also have greatly served the steady improvement of relations.

Talks With Officials

[Text] Bonn, 11 Feb (DPA)--European security and cooperation, East-West relations and the development of bilateral relations were the main topics at the talks Yugoslav Federal Executive Council President Veselin Djuranovic held with leaders of the parliamentary parties in Bonn today. Djuranovic, who arrived yesterday on a 4-day official visit to the Federal Republic, held separate, 1-hour talks with floor leaders Wolfgang Mischnick (FDP), Helmut Kohl (CDU/CSU) and Herbert Wehner (SPD).

Yesterday, he met Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. In their initial detailed exchanges, they discussed a broad range of international and economic problems. They agreed that external interference in Poland would radically change the situation in Europe.

The Yugoslav Federal Executive Council president's program for this morning includes a visit to the federation of German industry in Cologne.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON EUROPEAN, WORLD POLICIES

LD101211 Paris LE FIGARO in French 5 Feb 81 pp 1,4

[Jean-Paul Picaper exclusive Bonn interview with FRG Foreign Minister Hans Dietrich Genscher: "Europe Must Increase Its Political Cohesion"--date not given]

[Text] Question: Minister, the French president recently referred to entente and cooperation between France and the FRG. Is French-German cooperation a cornerstone of an expanding Europe and what problems must this Europe overcome?

Answer: In the coming years, the Community will be confronted with challenges in the spheres of foreign policy and economic policy. Its cohesion and ability to make decisions will be tested. With reference to this, I believe that in view of declining growth rates and a reduction in our resources, it is important to revise the structures of the Community's expenditure and determine new priorities. To achieve this, it is absolutely necessary to adjust our common agricultural policy according to the price explosion which we can observe in that sphere. We also must settle the question of the EEC's expansion toward the south. We have given political commitments to Portugal and Spain and we must make all the necessary efforts to rapidly bring to a successful conclusion the relevant negotiations.

Nor, finally, should we forget that the idea of European unification is mainly political. It is not only a question of economics, trade exchanges and prosperity. We also must increase Europe's political cohesion and, consequently, its role in the world if we want to safeguard our interest in an appropriate manner. In this context, we must ask ourselves how we can move closer to our common objective of a European union, combine the network which already exists within the EEC with cooperation as it is practiced by the 10 member states within the framework of European political cooperation and orientate them toward the objective of a European union. We should be able to demonstrate this political desire and act accordingly. Also in this sphere, French-German cooperation can pass the test as the cornerstone of an expanding Europe whose importance continually is increasing.

Question: Do you really believe in the effectiveness of joint EEC initiatives in the Near East, the Gulf area and Africa?

Answer: Yes. Europeans should jointly encourage African initiatives. I feel that Africans want Europe to support them in this way and that they appreciate any such support. As a result of their cooperation with us within the framework of the Lome conventions, they have, in fact, realized that we intend to cooperate with really independent African states on a partnership basis.

As far as their relations with the Gulf area are concerned, EEC countries last year proposed the conclusion of cooperation agreements between the EEC on the one hand a number of states in the region, including North Yemen, on the other hand. By taking such an initiative, the EEC wanted to express its political interest to the stability and development of a relationship between it and ourselves as between partners. I believe in the effectiveness and even the necessity of a joint European initiative in the Near East.

The European countries' joint efforts have been credible and effective because they have been based on permanent consultations within the North Atlantic alliance on the one hand and on the inherent parallelism which exists between Europe's interests and the interests of a region close to it, namely the Near East, on the other. This has been reflected in the growing support among Near East countries for the statement on the Near East issued by the European Council in Venice. The Venice statement placed the Palestinian people's right to self-determination and Israel's right to safe existence at the center of the problem of global peace in the Near East. We in Europe should continue our work in the service of this kind of peace since peace in the Near East is also our peace.

Question: Relations between the United States and the Soviet Union are changing. The term "balance" is replacing the term "detente." What role are our countries playing in this context?

Answer: It is a question of the content of Western policy toward the Soviet Union and its allies rather than of its name. As far as its content is concerned, the West has always come to an agreement, often largely as a result of French-FRG consultations. We have always believed that the safeguarding of a strategic and conventional balance should be the cornerstone of any active policy aimed at safeguarding peace and resolving conflicts.

During the Madrid conference, Western delegations had the opportunity, within the framework of a large-scale political debate, to explain objectively and in detail the causes of the handicap which currently is weighing heavily on East-West relations. Most of the neutral and nonaligned delegations agreed with the West's analysis of the situation. Some Eastern delegations supported the Soviet Union either very little or not at all with respect to such fundamental questions as the intervention in Afghanistan and violation of human rights. I regard the manner in which the conference has developed so far as a success.

In the present phase of the Madrid talks, it is a question of drawing appropriate conclusions from this debate to eliminate any causes of tension in the long run. In this sphere, a special role is played by the French proposal aimed at organizing a conference on disarmament in Europe, with a view to increasing confidence in the military sphere through some concrete measures which would be applied to all Europe. An intensive and possibly quite long discussion will be needed to achieve this objective of negotiations and some other important objectives relating to human rights and contacts, but firmness and realism always have marked our behavior as far as the question of detente is concerned.

Question: You are opposed to any reduction in the German military budget but will the FRG be able to carry out its duties toward NATO?

Answer: We carry out these commitments more consistently than some.

Question: In the past 2 months, two problems have been discussed in Bonn: the dispatch of soldiers outside NATO borders and sales of arms in "areas of tension." What are your views on this?

Answer: There can be no doubt that events taking place outside the region covered by the alliance can directly jeopardize the security of the members of the alliance and, consequently, their vital interests. Therefore, it is right and in no way unusual that NATO should consider such possibilities and that members of the alliance which are prepared to do so--France, for instance, but not the FRG--should adopt military measures to ensure joint security on a division of labor basis. This has nothing in common with any enlargement of the NATO treaty's sphere of activity, which no one envisages. Nor does this mean that the FRG stands back when it comes to helping Third World countries through political and economic measures and with development and resisting any trends toward negemony.

As far as arms sales are concerned, I would like to draw your attention to the fact that the arms exports policy which we pursue is a very restrictive one. Whereas we rank first with the United States in world trade turnover (some 11 percent), we come only fifth in the league table of arms exporters (4 percent). This situation must not change. We do not want to improve our position on this list and we remain clearly committed to the principle of a restrictive policy in the sphere of arms exports.

The notion of "areas of tension" goes back to the sixties when the Federal Government determined its attitude toward arms exports. People now wonder whether this notion is still consistent with our times and its realities. The West has been confronted with world tensions which are a result, among other things, of the Soviet Union's efforts to extend its power base. It is therefore natural to want to establish whether the notion of "areas of tension" is still a valid criterion.

Question: You may have read that, according to an opinion poll, 54 percent of French people are in favor of German reunification. But what is the key to the German problem and do you believe that it can be resolved?

Answer: As a result of World War II and the developments in world politics which followed it, the German people now have to live willy-nilly divided between two states. This is why it was and is our political objective to strive to ensure a state of peace in Europe in which the German people will regain their unity through genuine self-determination. We restated this to the other side, also in writing, at the time when we concluded agreements with the Soviet Union and the GDR. This demands very long-term efforts and presupposes, among other things, close and continual cooperation among the three Western powers--the United States, France and Britain--whose rights and responsibilities relating to Berlin and Germany as a whole are still extant. We do not forget that we are part and want to be part of the West. A Germany--whether whole or divided--which would adopt a stance between the West and the East--between the blocs--would serve neither its own nor Europe's security interests. In my opinion, the opinion poll which you mentioned is encouraging because it shows that the majority of our French neighbors sympathize with the German people's national desire.

Question: But the French press has recently again expressed concern about Germany's possible neutralization. Is this concern justified?

Answer: Nothing is less justified than this concern. Our membership in the free Western world is a basic factor of a fundamental political consensus in our country. Our membership in the Atlantic alliance and EC is based on this fundamental consensus. We have never let any doubt arise about our attitude in our relations with Warsaw Pact member states.

BONN UNEASY OVER REAGAN ADMINISTRATION MOVES

DW101336 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 9 Feb 81 pp 19-21

[Text] It is with apprehension that the Federal Government notes the first declarations of intent by the new team in Washington: the plan to station the neutron bomb in Europe after all and the demand for greater military spending. Chancellor Schmidt and President Giscard d'Estaing carefully asked the Americans to exercise restraint.

The news from the United States reached the Bonn people via teletype. The excitement was great.

The new U.S. secretary of defense, Caspar Weinberger, so Helmut Schmidt learned Tuesday night, had announced in Washington that his government might want to deploy the neutron weapon in Europe after all. The first reaction: The chancellor and his foreign minister, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, agreed that a conflict with Washington must be avoided so soon after the inauguration of new U.S. President Ronald Reagan under all circumstances. "The Federal Government is not interested," said Government Spokesman Kurt Becker, "in aggravating the new beginning."

By their readiness to pussyfoot, the Bonn people demonstrated that they intend to learn from bad experiences. Schmidt lastingly disturbed the relationship with Reagan predecessor Jimmy Carter from the outset through harsh criticism. "Never again must be commit this error," a cabinet member warns. "We can still feel it in our bones."

This time it seems the other way round. Just a few weeks ago, Reagan told the chancellor in Washington that he would act only in close coordination with the Europeans. But hardly in office, he seems to have already forgotten his promise.

SPD Chairman Willy Brandt grumbled that "it surely makes him gulp a bit" if "a changed attitude of such an important government" is being announced by the press. Brandt said: "Normally, this is not the way to deal with each other among allies."

Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer also became quite outspoken: "Whenever a new government is inaugurated there, the same old crap happens all over again."

What the new administration apparently lacks, the Bonn government people lament, is a sense of the sensitivity of its allies and their domestic problems. A discussion on the ticklish topic of the neutron bomb is the least the government can use, a government which has been hurting anyway.

What irks Schmidt is that his third government, having been active for just 3 months, already has to digest a "problem addition" (Becker).

Whether German submarines will be delivered to Chile or tanks to Saudi Arabia, whether the military regime in Turkey will receive financial assistance, whether the stakes can be put on nuclear energy as before, whether new missiles will be deployed in the Federal Republic--all these are questions which are controversial in the two coalition parties.

The chancellor is irritated, besides, that "secondary issues, loaded with emotion, cost him so much time and strength, because he is much more concerned with the world economy and a threatening East-West conflict, his friends know.

This is why the government chief was particularly angry at having the discussion on the neutron bomb forced upon him by Washington again, now, of all times. The quarrel in the SPD over counterarmament and disarmament makes it improbable that Schmidt will receive the approval of the Social Democrats for the deployment of the neutron weapon.

Already, the old objections are renewed. A weapon that spares material and destroys human lives, SPD Bundestag Deputy Hermann Scheer criticized, is "an aberration of human thinking."

The Bonn people still hope that Weinberger was mistaken. The U.S. secretary of state wrote to his German counterpart that the matter is "no issue." Therepon Genscher, relieved, said: "Weinberger handled nitroglycerin bottles. He thought it was soda pop."

It is in this easygoing way that the Bonn people intend to explain all confusion between Europe and Washington from initial difficulties of the Reagan administration. The often impatient chancellor, too, for the time being shows mildness: "They have to find out first where the pushbuttons are."

The strong words of the U.S. President against the Soviet Union, however, have sobered the Social Democratic rulers. To begin with, Schmidt after his meeting with the new White House man in November had disseminated optimism about the German-American future. At the time he still believed that Reagan's announcement concerning the restoration of U.S. military superiority was but election campaign clamor. The chancellor soon felt, however, that the President is determined to retain his mannerism of seeking to make an impression: He called the Soviets "liars" and "cheaters."

So far there has not been any safe judgment in Bonn as to the course of the new men in Washington. This is why the most important reading matter in the chancellor's office is the "wireless bulletin from Washington" disseminated free of charge by the U.S. Embassy in Bonn, containing news from the New World.

Genscher and Schmidt proceed from the premise that they will be able to make Bonn's interests better prevail with Reagan's team during their exploration journeys to the United States in spring. In important positions of the new administration they will be meeting experienced experts on Europe such as Secretary of State Alexander Haig and former U.S. Ambassador to Bonn Walter Stoessel.

Schmidt is also hopeful that Reagan wants to maintain a minimum of reasonable relations with the Soviet Union, despite his statements, which is a principle of American policy since the times of Dwight D. Eisenhower. "The security of both world powers vis-vis each other has absolute priority," said Government Spokesman Becker.

One thing seems certain already: Not detente, but armament, has priority for the Americans these days. After first contacts with the Reagan administration last week, CDU reconnoiterer Manfred Woerner prophesied: "I predict grave disputes between Washington and Bonn."

Already the Carter administration in the end urged the Europeans to make stronger defense efforts. it seems certain now that Carter's successor, who is determined to rearm, will increase this pressure.

The existing demands of the Americans threaten to spoil West German financial planning. Under the slogan host nation's support, Washington expects Bonn not only to renovate the old GI barracks in the Federal Republic but also the construction of an additional 55,000 apartments for the families.

Even more expensive will be shelters, supply depots and maintenance buildings for those American Reforger units which can be flown in an emergency on short notice from the United States to the European front. The budget department on Hardthoehe estimates that there will be construction costs of at least DM4 billion plus another DM200 million annually.

These amounts go beyond the means of the defense minister. Hans Apel: "If the finance minister will ask me whether I can place that in my budget, I will say that I cannot."

But matters could become even worse. The German military attache in Washington reports already that the Reagan government, which wants to give priority do the development of the navy, will urge Bonn to reinforce the Federal Navy in the North Sea. Then the Germans would have to reconsider whether they want to build more than the planned six frigates.

The defense minister is against these plans: "No money." He wants to make a final decision after having talked in March to his U.S. colleague Weinberger. Apel's slogan: "The Americans must realize eventually that there are limits for us as well."

The limits have not been measured yet. The chancellor stated in the Bundestag that he agreed with U.S. Secretary of State Haig that extending NATO's area of responsibilities is out. He also confirmed Bonn's standpoint that German soldiers will not be active outside the alliance, say at the Persian Gulf.

But, he added, "the question will come up in any case whether we could and should contribute in some other way to stability in that region," for example through "supplying military equipment."

The old Bonn principle not to send arms to tension areas must be reconsidered, "because there cannot be an eternally defined termfor tension," including the Middle East.

By saying that Saudi Arabia is a "first rate stabilization factor," Schmidt indicated that if everything were up to him, West Germany's most important oil supplier could buy German tanks.

The chancellor appealed equally strongly to the conscience of the arms exports critics as to those comrades who would prefer to terminate NATO's decision to close the arms gap. After all, the Soviet Union produces 50 "medium-range missiles mainly aimed at Europe" every year, a fact to which the West must react. Schmidt: "The one who calls in question NATO's double decision or one of its two parts, calls the alliance in question."

Is the Bonn chancellor standing side by side with a U.S. President who preaches America's strength in the world and who wants to bring the Soviets down to their knees?

The friendship is unlikely to become that close. Schmidt and French State President Valery Giscard d'Estaing announced their determination on Friday last week "to cooperate trustfully with the new American Government" and to comply with their security policy commitments.

But some passages of the common statement read like an admonition addressed to the Americans. Both Europeans reject all "striving for military superiority", demanding firmly, "moderate political action without as well as within Europe."

Since Giscard and Schmidt fear that the U.S. President could embark too firmly on a pro-Israel course, they demand a Near East solution "with the participation of all interested parties"--that means also with the "terrorist association," as Reagan called the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

The wish for moderation also pertains to American policy vis-a-vis the countries of the Third World, "whose striving to be really unaligned must be recognized"--as the Paris communique put it.

The Germans fear that Reagan could possibly intervene in Central American El Salvador to keep the U.S.-supported rightist junta in power. "It would be bad", said an aide to the chancellor, "if El Salvador became the Western Afghanistan."

Moderation has still another meaning for Schmidt: The chancellor realized clearly that in case of an increasing confrontation of the superpowers, the sensitive German-German relations could experience irreparable damage. Klaus Boelling, Bonn's new representative in East Berlin, is already concerned: "It is a question how great our leeway will be."

COMMENTATOR OUTLINES NEUTRON WEAPON PROBLEMS

[Adelbert Weinstein article: "The Neutron Weapon Is No Current Issue Any More in Brussels"]

[Text] Brussels, 8 Feb--The neutron weapon is no current topic of discussions in NATO headquarters. A member of the NATO Council said laconically that the problem is not topical for the time being after the clarifying statement of U.S. Secretary of State Haig. Political circles of the alliance maintain that the reputation of the former Atlantic commander in chief is still great in the alliance. Nobody doubts the credibility of Haig's written explanations saying that the United States does not want to produce the neutron weapon for the time being.

This pulls the carpet from under speculations that General Rogers, the current Atlantic commander in chief who visited Bonn a day prior to Weinberger's press conference, informed the Federal Government of Washington's intentions to introduce the neutron weapon. Military circles say that Rogers knew as little as the State Department that Weinberger would give an answer to a journalist's question which touched off political unrest in the alliance. NATO headquarters advises those politicians who continue to criticize the U.S. secretary of defense to carefully read the formulations of Weinberger. Regarding the contents of his statement, he just repeated in connection with the neutron bomb what was said in the Republican election program, without mentioning a date. In defending himself, Weinberger interpreted his statements in a similar way.

The press chaos in NATO countries on Weinberger's statements as well as official and semi-official statements of individual governments indicate that, roughly speaking, the alliance is divided into three camps: adversaries of the neutron weapon, supporters and the undecided. Great Britain and France are not basically against the introduction of the neutron bomb. France itself is working on the completion of the radiation weapon. Its military policy of independence would not be called in question by agreeing to an American initiative to incorporate the neutron weapon in the Atlantic arsenal. The French approach also is determined by the thesis that Paris does not want to depend on a strategy not just vis-a-vis the West, but also vis-a-vis the East. That is, there is no reason why one ought to renounce an arms system which could offset the Soviet tank superiority, just because Moscow initiated a shrewd propaganda campaign against the neutron weapon.

The British approach is also flexible. Western renunciation of the neutron weapon would hardly lead to progress in disarmament talks and MBFR negotiations, being argued in London. Military realism makes the British, like the French, consider the neutron weapon as a defensive weapon with the help of which a Soviet tank attack in central Europe could be warded off successfully. NATO circles assume, therefore, that Mrs Thatcher in her Washington visit slated late this month, will inform President Reagan about this British approach if the neutron bomb should be discussed.

The Scandinavians think differently than the people in Paris and London. The Norwegians and the Danes oppose emphatically the introduction of the neutron bomb. Resistance is very strong in The Netherlands as well. Belgium avoided making any official statement. But the Belgian Socialists are against it. Observers of the Atlantic scenery believe that a key role will be played by the Federal Republic in the future. Although no reason exists at present to hold a basic discussion on the introduction of the neutron weapon, because Secretary of State Haig has clarified the American standpoint in time, an intensive discussion in the alliance cannot be avoided in the long run. Experts knowing the situation believe that the topic will appear on the agenda at the Atlantic spring conference at the latest. Bonn will then have to follow suit. This time, the Federal Government could still maintain an embarrassing silence.

The shrill note of radical Social Democrats can be considered for the time being as the emotional reaction of the party's leftists and must not necessarily be considered as the German approach. But once a factual discussion sets in, the demagogical formulation of the German antagonists of the neutron weapon does not suffice, claiming that this weapon is immoral because it kills people while preserving material and equipment; it cannot be considered the German approach to this arms system. This polemic interpretation of the neutron bomb's effect is termed as too simple by scientists and technicians.

Nobody contests the radiation effect of the neutron weapon. The concentrated radiation permits the production of small neutron projectiles which cause respectively smaller damage than other nuclear arms. If one wanted to achieve with the usual tactical nuclear arms the same result against Soviet masses of tanks as with the neutron weapon, the respective nuclear warheads would have to be about ten times stronger than the respective neutron arms. The destruction sector and the degree of destruction would be ten times greater. Military experts therefore consider the neutron weapon as a deterrent weapon which would be preferable to all other destructive arms, particularly in densely populated central Europe. Military experts consider it a contradiction in itself that the NATO countries located in the strategic zone of central Europe, namely the Federal Republic, Holland, Belgium and parts of Denmark, could vote against a weapon which would limit military damage. One is prepared, however, to show political understanding for this irrational approach.

Observers of Bonn's policy view the rejection of the neutron weapon by the SPD leftists and the restraint of the Federal Government in the background of the German policy toward the East. The independent national policy of the Germans, which has to take into consideration the compatriots in the GDR and thus also the interests of the Soviet Union, lies in a conflict of interests with the supranational security policy supported by the Federal Republic in NATO. Bonn believes that German agreement to an additional destructive weapon such as the neutron weapon, would endanger disarmament talks and thus the thing that is called detente by the Social Democrats. Since the Germans, because of their economic and military potential, have become against their will the spokesman of the rest of central Europe, analysts predict that the Germans' approach to the neutron weapon must bring influence to bear on the approach of the Belgians and the Dutch.

The assertion that the introduction of the neutron weapon would lower the nuclear threshold can water down the discussion on the neutron weapon, maintain military and political observers. The military leadership believes that the introduction of the neutron bomb in Western defense will change the balance of forces again to the advantage of the Atlantic alliance. The neutron weapon does not move the nuclear threshold up or down. Experts also contest the thesis that this weapon would lead to a limited nuclear war in Europe. Atlantic circles point out that all predictions involving the destructive capacities of nuclear arms systems, calculations on the limitation of damages, regional limitations of targets must be usually revoked after 2 years.

The question whether nuclear war could be limited must, therefore, remain unanswered for the time being. So far, nobody in Europe has made the attempt to examine the "strategic environment conditions" under which the East and the West could wage nuclear war at the European central front. Since the Soviets are not interested in such factual realizations and since they base their policy so far on ignorance and threats which cannot be proved, NATO ought to begin to collect "factual material to make the discussions more realistic." Weinberger's slip of tongue, therefore, ought to be considered a chance and not a mishap.

SPD LEADER DISCUSSES PRESENT STATE OF PARTY

[Interview with SPD Presidium member Erhard Eppler]

[Text] SPIEGEL: Mr Eppler, you were the only one in the SPD Presidium to object to the recommendations to initiate party disciplinary action against Bundestag Deputy Karl-Heinz Hansen. Do you think Hansen's charges against Helmut Schmidt are justified?

Eppler: I agreed with all members of the Presidium that you just cannot conduct a political discussion the way Hansen does. And along with my friends in the leftwing of the SPD, I advocate the view that Hansen has impeded an important discussion. But I did want to avoid any dramatization. Hansen is not a born martyr type nor should he be made one.

SPIEGEL: It was in a doubtelessly exaggerated form that Hansen said what many Social Democrats think about counterarming and arms exports. What, then, is the charge that could be leveled at him, barring lese majesty?

Eppler: Being a learned scientist of languages I cannot separate form and content. By the form of his utterances, Hansen has made the discussion on the contents difficult. The SPD Presidium, too, realized that the contents will be, and will have to be, the subject of the discussion in the party.

SPIEGEL: And yet the suspicion is obvious that outsider Hansen is to be given exemplary punishment for all those who like himself come out against the counterarming decision, against arms exports, and against incessantly increasing defense costs.

Eppler: It was an important reason for my rejection that this misunderstanding is obvious. Hansen is a symptom, he himself is not so important. We must quickly overcome his case so as to be able to discuss the matter at issue.

SPIEGEL: It becomes constantly more evident that NATO's counterarming decision overtasks the SPD. On the one hand, the hope dwindles that the deployment of new medium-range weapons in the Federal Republic could still be avoided or even just limited. On the other hand, a retraction of the decision is no longer conceivable, either, without jeopardizing the government and the coalition.

Eppler: The manner in which the December 1979 SPD Congress was won over for the counterarming decision shows, as through a magnifying mirror, the problems of our democracy. For, among the delegates, all of whom are efficient people in communal politics or in other fields, there are not 2 percent who would even understand the jargon of the arms controllers. This is why most of those who gave their approval merely meant to say: We have so much confidence in the defense minister, in the chancellor, that it is probably right if they explain it to us that clearly.

SPIEGEL: And they feel deceived now that it is an established fact that SALT II will not be ratified and the chances for a new arms control agreement by the end of 1983 keep declining?

Eppler: When I told Helmut Schmidt at the party congress in a different context that not every victory constitutes a gain I also meant that. For it was obvious even at that time that the U.S. Government would not even dream of entering into serious talks on disarmament of the Eurostrategic weapons. The so-called zero option never existed at any time as far as the Americans were concerned. And now this measure, which was passed off as absolutely necessary for the military balance--whatever you wish to interpret as balance--is being included in a strategy which is no longer aimed at balance but at preponderance. It will be a miracle if the party would not react to that.

SPIEGEL: With the unrealistic demand to "terminate" the counterarming decision, as Hansen put it?

Eppler: The Brussels decision is a dual decision: Prepare and negotiate. If the United States disregards the second part of the decision the Europeans must not stick to the first part. Perhaps the Europeans should make it clear to the Reagan administration where they are prepared to go along in Europe and where they are not. It is my conviction that the times are past when people believed that they could exert influence on U.S. foreign policy by coaxing and a telephone talk with Jimmy Carter...

SPIEGEL: ...This probably is the conviction of the chancellor as well.

Eppler: But if this is so, then decisions on principle are indicated and due. Then Europe must make it clear to the United States that it will not play ball in a strategy of arming to death. And it may well be said in such a context: You have changed the business basis, now it is necessary to talk over once again the deployment of the Pershing 2 and the cruise missiles.

SPIEGEL: Open opposition to the protective power United States--can a German Government afford such an endurance test in the alliance?

Eppler: Either we are alliance partners or we are satellites. If we are satellites, then we should say so. But if we are an alliance of democratic nations, then we are no assembly of pussyfooters. It is nearly an insult to the American nation to pretend that the Americans suddenly would cease abiding by their contractual commitments--for instance, vis-a-vis the Soviet Union in Berlin--if the Germans refuse to do their bidding in one point.

SPIEGEL: The announcement of the U.S. secretary of defense that after all the United States might deploy the neutron weapon in Europe, has seen to it that the conflict after the next has been safeguarded.

Eppler: It is my impression that the people around Reagan really mean what they have said in the election campaign. And that is bad. Not only with regard to Europe, but also with regard to Central America or South Korea. We Social Democrats have a different idea of the junta in El Salvador than Mr Reagan. If the neutron bomb issue will be added, it could easily go too far. Our government will either maintain resistance, or there will be growing resistance by a great part of the people against the government. In such a case I predict a similar shift as in the ecological movement to take place in the peace movement.

SPIEGEL: A peace movement which would actually be an out-of-NATO movement?

Eppler: The argument that NATO will collapse if no neutron weapons are deployed here could be turned around in saying that the preparedness of a great part of our populace to say yes to NATO will collapse if the neutron bomb comes. The attempt to include the Federal Republic in a policy of superior strength would produce new neutralism in our country which would make many people puzzle later on.

SPIEGEL: The federal chancellor has enough will to continue detente and peace policy. But if the climate deteriorates between Moscow and Washington, his leeway would shrink. The American pressure for solidarity increases.

Eppler: I have been in the government for 6 years myself, and I know how limited the leeway is vis-a-vis the world powers. It cannot mean, however, signalling to the Americans that if in doubt, we always share your opinion.

It cannot be a NATO task to become involved in the hegemonial fights of the superpowers in Africa or Asia. Both superpowers must know that after all the echo from Europe will be similar to the way it was addressed. The Soviets must know that military adventure such as in Poland will press the West much closer to the United States; Reagan must know that there can be an American policy to which we would not react with mild talking but with a dry no. That is important also for the inner-American opposition to Reagan.

SPIEGEL: A no which you will not hear from Helmut Schmidt.

Eppler: I cannot make any prognoses about the stance of the federal chancellor. But I have an idea with regard to an SPD congress and with regard to its saying yes or no.

SPIEGEL: That means fights between the wings, and in the end of this the SPD could find itself forming the opposition.

Eppler: The problem today is that no great issue exists which could integrate the party and make it stand out against the CDU. We are dealing almost exclusively with issues where the Union supports the government, while considerable parts of the SPD have growing doubts. That pertains to the decision to close the arms gap, to the arms exports as well as to Brokdorf. I do not know for how long a party can live only with disintegrating issues.

SPIEGEL: The SPD top echelon so far tries only to superimpose the grumbling of the basis with solidarity appeals. The chancellor purposefully evades the demand for issues indicating a direction, for "spiritual leadership."

Eppler: I do not want to refer to persons. But I see the situation of the government as follows: Both decisive pillars on which it rests, the economic and the foreign political crisis managements, are crumbling away quickly. New supporting pillars are not in sight. The two pillars on which the parts rests were peace and reforms. The party will be in better shape only when it becomes again what is its own and unmistakable contribution to peace, and what reforms in the eighties mean.

SPIEGEL: Namely?

Eppler: We must show a way out from the madness of a quickly accelerating arms race. I name two key words: Examination of the decision to close the arms gap; change of the Bundeswehr armament to become an army whose defense capacity will not deterioate, but whose structure and armament will make it completely unable to launch an attack.

And we must implement a policy of selective growth, linked with a reform of agricultural, transport, health, energy and development policies, with all these reforms saving rather than costing money. That pertains also to a reform of the Bundeswehr.

SPIEGEL: Mr Eppler, SPD faction chairman Hebert Wehner warns against "English conditions" in the party. Does a cleavage threaten the Social Democrats, as Wehner fears, if they lose their ability to rule due to policy fights and program discussions?

Eppler: Well, we should not voluntarily form the opposition. I fail to see why the danger of a cleavage should be greater in the opposition than in the government. Government or opposition--it is important to pursue a policy representing the vast majority of the Social Democrats.

CDU'S KOHL SAYS MOSCOW 'HYPOCRITICAL' OVER POLAND

[Excerpts] Bonn, 10 Feb (DPA)--In a review of the political situation presented to the CDU/CSU parliamentary group today, opposition leader Helmut Kohl described the state of the Federal Government in strongly critical terms.

Kohl expressed his concern at developments in Poland. He said that the threats against Warsaw by the Soviet Union and its GDR and CSSR allies are becoming increasingly open from day to day. It is hypocritical for Moscow to warn the West at the same time against interference in Poland's internal affairs. Poland's sovereignty is threatened by the Soviet Union alone. "We also gauge the will to peace and readiness for detente of the Soviet leaders in Europe and worldwide against how they act toward their own alliance partners within their sphere of influence." Anyone who wants to disarm, as do large sections of the SPD, cannot shut his eyes to the arms buildup and aggressive Soviet policy directly on the frontiers of the Federal Republic.

Kohl warned the Federal Government and the SPD against a latent anti-Americanism in connection with greater defense costs. Their necessity derives from the security position of the Federal Republic, which is part of the Western alliance. The Soviet Union is solely responsible for the change in the balance in Europe.

FRENCH-IRANIAN RELATIONS MEETING POSTPONED

[Text] Paris, 10 Feb (AFP)--A meeting between a top French Foreign Ministry official and an Iranian Government envoy, scheduled to be held today, was postponed for reasons not made public.

The envoy, Ahmad Azizi, arrived in Paris yesterday leading a five-man delegation for talks at the Foreign Ministry on "global relations" between the two countries, which recently sparred [as received] over a French delivery of Mirage fighters to Iraq, Iran's enemy in the Gulf conflict, and non-delivery by Paris of three missile-firing gunboats ordered by Iran.

Although neither the French Foreign Ministry nor the Iranian Embassy here would comment on the postponement, sources close to the Iranian Government said it could be linked to a meeting held yesterday to attempt to settle certain facets of the extremely complex financial imbroglio between France and Iran.

Following the fall of the shah in 1979 and changes brought by the new regime, Iran cancelled contracts with French companies evaluated here at some 10,000 million francs (2,200 million dollars), including a contract with the Framatome Company for the construction of several nuclear power plants.

The Iranian sources said that at yesterday's meeting at the arbitration commission of the International Chamber of Commerce here, France and Iran discussed the designation of arbitrators to decide on the Framatome case. Iranian Atomic Energy Company Director Ezatollah Saabi attended the meeting.

SUPPLIES OF IRAQI OIL TO BE RESUMED 'SHORTLY'

LD101113 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 6 Feb 81 p 6

[Text] Supplies of Iraqi oil to France are to be resumed shortly. In February, the two French companies ELF-Aquitaine and Total will receive around 3 million tons of oil from Iraq per day.

Before the conflict with Iran, Iraq supplied 23 percent of French oil. In November 1980, its share fell to 7.5 percent or 530,000 tons.

The resumption of these supplies coincides with France's decision to supply four Mirage F1 aircraft to Iraq--a decision which Iranian President Bani-Sadr described on Wednesday as a real "act of war against Iran."

DEFENSE MINISTER ON BUDGET, DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

[Text] Speaking to a civilian and military audience at the Higher National Defense Studies Institute in Paris, Defense Minister Robert Galley launched an appeal for austerity to the general staffs and technical services which are drafting the post-1982 military programming law which will, in principle, be submitted to parliament in the spring 1982 session.

After highlighting budgetary growth in the defense sphere which is "unprecedented in our country's history since the war" and has been "obtained in a period of economic difficulties connected with the world crisis," Mr Galley made no secret of the fact that those responsible for defining the future of military equipment "will have a very difficult task in the face of the growing number of threats and their diversification," but "also in the face of the rising costs which make it necessary to develop high-performance weapons."

"Indeed," the defense minister explained, "there can be no question of jeopardizing the country's economic and social development by drawing excessively on the nation's resources. Austerity is more essential than ever--austerity in choosing equipment, austerity in implementing programs and austerity in daily life."

Mr Galley then listed the choices for France's future military equipment in the conventional and nuclear spheres.

"Major studies," the minister indicated, "are now being carried out on a mobile strategic surface-to-surface launcher. By considerably reducing its vulnerability with regard to the accuracy of new weapons, its mobility could make this weapon a strong deterrent. Like other countries, we also are studying the possible characteristics of a new generation of nuclear submarines: extension of the patrol zone by increasing the missiles' range, increasing secrecy and detection capacity and increasing firing rate and penetration capabilities adapted to the defense which might be used."

Within the strategic nuclear forces, "we will consolidate the central place held by the submarine component," Mr Galley explained before giving details on planned developments in the tactical nuclear deterrent arsenal.

"Work is being carried out on the possibility of extending the range of tactical surface-to-surface missiles and work is also being carried out on the enhanced radiation weapon (otherwise known as the neutron bomb--LE MONDE note). "If these programs are finally launched," the minister stated, "they too will be aimed at extending the margin for maneuver available to the political authorities who control the use of the nuclear weapons, by increasing the tactical nuclear weapons' deterrent potential in diversified situations and by increasing the degree of complementarity between the various systems."

LE MONDE EXAMINES FRENCH-GERMAN SUMMIT TALKS

Reports Economic Aspects

[Text] At the end of the French-German summit on Friday, 6 February, it was announced that at the industrialized countries' summit in Ottawa next July, France and the FRG will propose objectives to be attained in the development of alternative energy sources.

During the ministerial talks [Industry Minister] Andre Giraud for France and Minister of Economics Otto Lambsdorf and Minister of Research and Technology Andreas von Bulow for the FRG assessed the efforts being made by the two countries in the manufacture of nonoil fuels, assistant Elysee spokesman Jacques Blot stated.

In view of the forthcoming Ottawa summit, the ministers agreed to encourage contacts between the departments concerned and to study the possibility of coordinating their alternative energy research and development programs. They also decided to cooperate in the sphere of adapting vehicles to nonoil fuels and demonstrated their will to involve other countries in these various activities.

At the Tokyo (June 1979) and Venice (June 1980) summits, the seven big industrialized countries set objectives in the sphere of oil consumption and import reductions. France and Germany will try to go further in this sphere during the Ottawa summit.

The other economic questions examined during the French-German summit were chiefly:

The European Monetary System [EMS]: Paris and Bonn want to ensure continuity and stability of operation in the EMS. Giscard d'Estaing noted the system's "very positive results."

Iron and steel: France and the FRG will ask their iron and steel experts to consider voluntary agreements and arrangements which could replace the current system of constraints established in the EEC to limit steel production. The Elysee spokesman also indicated that Paris and Bonn reached agreement to oppose any new increase in the EEC's steel production capacity.

Soviet gas: The conclusion of contracts for the supply of Soviet gas was discussed. No decision was taken. This question will be examined in detail by the two countries over the next few weeks. The FRG has fixed the maximum amount of gas it is prepared to import from the USSR at around 30 percent of its consumption, in other words, 5 percent of energy consumption.

The EEC: The FRG has agreed to reduction in the monetary compensatory amounts paid to its farmers when 1981 agricultural prices are fixed. However, no agreement was reached on the size of the reduction or on totally dismantling this system of compensatory amounts--a goal which France would like to attain in 2 years. The FRG pointed to the difficulty of such decisions, stressing that its farmers' income fell by 12 percent in 1980.

Finally, the two countries agreed that budgetary receipts provided by the EEC should not be more than 1 percent of income from value added tax.

Analyzes Joint Statement

LD101405 Paris LE MONDE in French 8-9 Feb 81 p 1

[Editorial: "The French-German 'Hard Core'"]

Indeed, the main aim for France and the FRG was to deny recent rumors of a cooling in relations between the two countries. However, in addition to that, Giscard d'Estaing and Schmidt intended to show that the Europeans, at least their French-German "hard core" to cite the president of the Republic, are maintaining their own role in East-West relations and are not leaving Mr Reagan a monopoly in that sphere.

The U.S. President, therefore, is being offered cooperation "in a spirit of confidence" but also is being reminded of the concerns recently expressed by the two governments. For Mr Schmidt, "balance with security" rules out "the search for military superiority", although it is also appropriate to rule out "acceptance of a position of weakness"--this is a better definition of the term "stabilization" which Giscard d'Estaing used in his television interview. The Americans are urged not to go too far. The negotiated arms control effort, another idea dear to Mr Schmidt, also is stressed, as is the nation of "dialogue" which should accompany "vigilance."

The same applies to the call for "moderation in political behaviour"--another version of the "restraint" preached recently by the French president. This formula applies chiefly to Poland since it is clearly with regard to Poland that the warning issued 1 year ago after the invasion of Afghanistan is recalled: "Detente will not withstand another similar blow." Giscard d'Estaing and Schmidt merely go a little further by expressing the hope that Poland will settle its problems not only without foreign interference but also "in a peaceful way." This takes account of the very topical danger of repression carried out by the Polish forces alone, backed up from a distance by Moscow.

In any case, the two statesmen were not afraid of liberally punctuating their document with the prudence and precautions dictated by the situation in their respective countries.

The chancellor must take account of the crisis in his own party and his opposition's Atlanticist excesses, hence, his insistence to the press on fidelity to the alliance and to the defense effort and also on the need for disarmament negotiations.

On the French side, Giscard d'Estaing was not sorry to illustrate with strong domestic ulterior motives, his intention to play the card of personal serenity contrasting with the agitation of a "dangerous world." His main proposals were explicitly supported by his ally and partner, be they negotiations on Afghanistan or the conference on disarmament in Europe or Chad. Could the "hard core" be more French than German?

TURKISH FOREIGN MINISTER CONCLUDES OFFICIAL VISIT

[Text] Paris, 10 Feb (AFP)--Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen today wound up an official two-day visit to Paris and described as "very good and very complete" his talks with French leaders.

He expressed satisfaction over "wide-ranging exchanges," particularly on the economic and cultural levels.

Bilateral cooperation over energy had been discussed and he had met the head of the French Atomic Energy Commission. But the meeting, he said, was a fact-finding one, as Turkey was at the moment only in the exploratory stage where atomic energy is concerned.

Another subject discussed was the likelihood of developing the 1963 agreement between Turkey and the European Economic Community (EEC) that should eventually allow Turkey to enter the EEC.

Earlier, on French radio, Mr Turkmen said his government was "irrevocably" committed to a return of democracy in Turkey.

In an interview, the foreign minister recalled the recent declaration of Turkish head of state General Kenan Evren announcing decisive steps in that direction for late next summer.

Mr Turkmen acknowledged that political terrorism in Turkey had not yet been brought under absolute control but said that the level of violence had been reduced from a daily 20 victims before the current military regime took over to only one a day now.

LE MONDE PUBLISHES MOST RECENT OPINION POLLS

SOFRES-FIGARO

[Text] The SOFRES-FIGARO magazine opinion poll published by this weekly on 7 February reflects another drop in the head of state's rating. The poll was carried out between 23 and 29 January on a sample of 1,000 people aged 18 years and over.

Of the people questioned, 51 percent "do not really have confidence" or "have no confidence at all" in the president of the Republic's ability to "solve the problems now facing France." And 44 percent have "full confidence" or "reasonable confidence" in him. These figures were respectively 49 percent and 47 percent during the previous poll in January. Regarding Raymond Barre's rating, 63 percent of the people expressed negative opinions and 30 percent positive opinions (as against 62 percent and 31 percent in January).

Mr Chirac's popularity rating fell from 33 percent to 32 percent between January and February. Mr Debre's rating shows a drop of 5 points (from 29 percent to 24 percent). In opposition ranks, Mitterrand is up 5 points from 35 percent to 40 percent of opinions expressed in his favor, Mr Rocard remains at the same level (50 percent), Georges Marchais is down 1 point (from 18 percent to 17 percent) and Michel Crepeau is up 2 points from 12 percent to 14 percent.

PARIS MATCH

[Text] According to an opinion poll published by PARIS MATCH 13 February and carried out by "Public" on 29-31 January, among a representative national sample of 1,000 people over 18 years old, Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Mr Mitterrand are neck and neck for the second round of the presidential elections. The result is the same as in the weekly's previous survey (see LE MONDE 16 January).

In the first round, depending on the three situations postulated (either Messrs Chirac and Debre and Mrs Garaud will run, the same without Mr Debre, or the Mayor of Paris [Chirac] alone), the present head of state is expected to receive between 31 and 33 percent of the vote (as against 28-31 percent at the beginning of the year), Mr Mitterrand from 25.5 to 26 percent (as against 24-26 percent), Mr Marchais 17 percent (as against 16-17 percent), Mr Chirac 10-12 percent (as against 11-13 percent), Mr Debre 2.5 percent (as against 6 percent), Mrs Garaud 4.5-5 percent (the same), an ecologist candidate 7-8 percent (as against 6-8 percent), an extreme leftwing candidate 2 percent (as against 3 percent) and an extreme rightwing candidate 1 percent (the same). Mr Crepau remains stable with 1 percent.

This poll was carried out following the television appearances of Mrs Garaud and Messrs Crepeau and Giscard d'Estaing and before the official announcement of Mr Chirac's candidacy.

PCF'S GREMETZ CRITICIZES AIRCRAFT SALE TO IRAQ

[Text] Giscard d'Estaing's delivery of several Mirages as part of an order of 60 of these aircraft and of several tanks and helicopters to Iraq constitutes a dangerous act, illustrating the adventurist and dangerous nature of his foreign policy.

Nostalgic for the gunboat policy, he is deliberately throwing oil on the fire in an area of the world where tension already runs particularly high. By encouraging Iraq to continue the war, he is intervening directly in this conflict and contributing to the risk of it spreading.

Instead of acting to facilitate the quest for a negotiated solution, as suggested by the nonaligned movement, he chooses to fan the flames of the conflict.

Following the strengthening of the French military presence in Africa, Giscard d'Estaing has confirmed with this scandalous delivery that he intends to make habitual use of intimidation, interference and the threat of intervention to hinder the peoples' emancipation.

He is thus the worthy representative of the old French colonialist right at the service of arms dealers and the interests of a number of multinationals.

For the sake of class interests, he is bringing our country into line with the strategy of U.S. imperialism and making it play a lamentable role on the world scene.

We must definitely be rid of this policy which ignores national interests. In fact, as Georges Marchias has pointed out in the 131 proposals, France's real interests lie in action for peace, cooperation and understanding among the peoples.

PCI'S BERLINGUER NOT TO ATTEND CPSU CONGRESS

[Text] Rome, 10 Feb (ANSA)--Enrico Berlinguer, political secretary of Italy's Communist Party, the largest in the West, is not going to Moscow for the Soviet party congress set to open on February 23.

The news appeared on the front page of the Italian daily LA STAMPA today. The Turin daily cited "fully reliable" sources and pointed out that this would be the first time that a PCI secretary did not go to the Kremlin to take part in a meeting of Russian Communists.

LA STAMPA said that the PCI delegation instead would be led by veteran party leader Giancarlo Pajetta. The Soviet party has already been informed of the change in plans and reacted with "deepest irritation", the daily said.

Formally, the PCI will explain Berlinguer's failure to go to Moscow as the result of his concern over Italy's present, delicate and instable political situation, the paper continued. It will be said that Berlinguer wants to follow first hand every tormented phase of the situation at home, the paper said. "Nevertheless, the PCI is fully aware of the range and possible consequences of its decision", LA STAMPA said.

Berlinguer has always been present at the Soviet party congresses, even at times when relations between the two parties were strained, the paper noted. It will be very difficult for the Soviet side to accept the absence of the leader of the strongest communist party in the West, LA STAMPA said.

However, the problems opened by Afghanistan and Poland have threatened to make Berlinguer's presence at the congress embarrassing. His silence on such issues during the congress would also prove embarrassing, the paper said. Thus, the decision to stay at home.

If the Russians decided to deny Pajetta the floor (as happened in 1976 with the French Communists in the absence of their party leader Georges Marchais,), it would be the first time that the PCI's voice was not heard at a Soviet party congress, LA STAMPA concluded.

FOREIGN MINISTER DESCRIBES BASIC POLICY STANCES

LD091201 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 30 Jan 81 pp 7, 9

[M. Bettencourt Resendes interview with Portuguese Foreign Minister Andre Goncalves Pereira: "Results of Legislative and Presidential Elections Are Not Contradictory"--date and place not specified]

[Excerpt] DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: What, basically, will be the differences between the Foreign Ministry as it was under Diogo Freitas do Amaral and the Foreign Ministry as it will be under yourself?

Goncalves Pereira: I assume that ministries belong not to individuals but to the state. So it does not seem to me that there is a change in basic stances with respect to the main guidelines of foreign policy. Moreover, the government program deviates little from the previous program in this respect. This was emphasized in the parliamentary debate on the government's foreign policy program.

But in answer to your question, there are two factors which are perhaps worth mentioning. First, there has been an exacerbation of international tensions, which makes coexistence among the various countries even more difficult and, of course, affects small countries such as Portugal. In addition, everybody has a different way of working. Professor Freitas do Amaral was a great foreign minister with his own way of working. I will be the foreign minister which I am able to be with my own way and methods. There will certainly be more differences in the way of working than in the main policy guidelines.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: What do you believe to be the main features of your way of performing the job?

Goncalves Pereira: It is difficult to say after only a fortnight. I am at a preliminary stage of studying the problems, but my attempt will be twofold. Without disregarding the major foreign policy problems, which this year have a particularly important role, I intend, despite the budgetary restrictions which we will have this year, to make an effort to improve the performance of the ministry's services and the position of its officials.

This ministry has been a victim of the macrocephaly of the state which has existed specifically since 1975. That is, the state machine, directly or through the public enterprises, grew excessively. This did not happen with this ministry. In 1974 we had about 50 missions, today we have 111, and we will have more this year. But the ministry cannot increase its personnel and is also a victim of the budgetary stringency which is being imposed this year.

So the ministry and the ministry's officials are paying, together with all the others, for the extravagances in which the state budget indulged during the years of the revolutionary period. We contributed almost nothing to that macrocephaly, but it is clear that this ministry is also included in the restrictions and the austerity policy which the government must pursue.

Within these limitations I will attempt to do my utmost to ensure that this ministry's working conditions and working efficiency are improved. And I must tell you with satisfaction that there are positive factors in this connection, with respect to the officials' quality and dedication, which I am very pleased to emphasize.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: You have said that there are no basic differences between this government's foreign policy and that of the previous government, so it is to be assumed that one of the major priorities, namely, the issue of Portugal's entry into the EEC, remains. However, there is a ministry in this government which did not exist in the previous government, namely, the ministry of European integration. To what extent does the establishment of this ministry remove issues concerning entry into Europe from the Foreign Ministry's province?

Goncalves Pereira: The exact answer to your question is "not at all." I draw attention to the fact that there is no Ministry of European Integration. This is a mistake which has been made and which is perfectly natural, but there is no Ministry of European Integration. Within the framework of the members of the government there is a minister of European integration, whose services are comprised within the prime minister's office, and it is for this reason that I can tell you that there is no change in the Foreign Ministry's role in negotiating the terms of entry. It is clear that Professor Freitas do Amaral had, as you know, a dual capacity, namely, that of deputy prime minister and of foreign minister. So there was a personal link between the activities which he conducted as the second-ranking member of the government and those which he conducted as foreign minister with respect to joining the European Communities. Now that that personal link has ended, there has been a return to a pattern which already emerged to some extent in Professor Mota Pinto's government, in which there was a distinction between the political activities, which rested with the Foreign Ministry, and the negotiating activities in the technical and sectional field, which at that time rested with Prof Jacinto Nunes and today rest with Mr Alvaro Barreto. So there is a distinction between the political and diplomatic aspects of activity (these rest with the Foreign Ministry, which is indeed a ministry and not merely a minister) and, on the other hand, the links at the technical level--but clearly with political implications--which will rest with the minister of European integration.

It is even possible and probable that contacts between the minister of European integration and the EEC bodies will be more frequent than mine, but this does not alter the fact that the specifically political aspect and the definition of the major options in this respect rest with the Foreign Ministry, within the policy of the government, the prime minister and the cabinet. But I would like to add the following: The creation of the post of minister of European integration, which seems extremely advantageous and opportune, is not aimed merely at looking outward but also and especially at looking inward. There is an immense task of adjusting the structure of the economy, the administration, education and the mentality in Portugal for entering the Common Market. These activities will have to be conducted by the minister of European integration, and possibly also by the minister for administrative reform. The fact is that the Foreign Ministry really is not suited to these tasks, aimed at domestic action and adjusting domestic structures. And here Mr Alvaro Barreto's very lengthy ministerial experience and knowledge of the Portuguese economy will certainly be extremely useful.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: So do you not fear that areas of conflicts of authority will emerge?

Goncalves Pereira: No, I do not fear that at all. No conflicts of authority will arise between Mr Barreto and myself, both because our spheres of activity are well defined and because we have been close friends for over 35 years. And we both will undertake to thwart attempts to sow discord prompted from outside.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Another of the priorities, or, at least, of the main guidelines, of the government's foreign policy concerns relations with the former colonies. The mission scheduled to visit Mozambique in February will not be, it is to be assumed, an isolated initiative. Are other initiatives already envisaged?

Goncalves Pereira: This mission is perhaps the most important initiative, as an individual initiative. Moreover, it is a mission which should have set out in December, was postponed in agreement with the Mozambique authorities for reasons which are easy to understand and should go ahead in mid-February, being headed by a member of the government; that is, it will have a degree of representation at the political level and not at the merely technical level.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Is it not yet known whether it will be at ministerial level?

Goncalves Pereira: When I speak of members of the government, they can only be ministers, secretaries or under secretaries of state, since I do not believe that it is the prime minister's intention to visit Mozambique personally. So it will be a minister or a secretary of state; we will see at the time and in accordance with the Mozambique authorities, what the representation will be. But it will be at government level. And the idea is that the new government has a mandate which everything indicates, according to the forces supporting it, or leads us to disbelieve, according to the forces opposing it, could last the legislative term. We believe that the government has a mandate for a legislative term and we must plan activity for 4 years.

So this mission which will visit Mozambique will give continuity to cooperation schemes which have already been undertaken and attempt to lay down the main guidelines for the cooperation to be developed over the next few years in the cultural sector, in the educational sector and in the other sectors in which Mozambique needs technical assistance and we are able to give it.

We have the utmost interest in this, and this year, despite the budgetary restrictions which I have already mentioned, it has been possible for the Foreign Ministry to increase, albeit only slightly, the sums at its disposal for this purpose. But cooperation is not confined to Mozambique. Cooperation has been working especially well with Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea and Sao Tome and Principe. So we have no specific problems with respect to cooperation. It is merely necessary to increase it.

With respect to Guinea and Cape Verde, the cultural centers there are fully operational. Voluntary workers sent by Portugal are continuing to set out, and participation, for instance, with respect to Cape Verde in large-scale public works which will be started in 1981 and in which there will be Portuguese participation, is envisaged. I have in mind the construction of the Harbor of Praia, in which it very possible that there will be Portuguese participation and financial aid, if that is the Cape Verde authorities' decision.

In addition, cooperation with Angola will be intensified this year and over the next few years. At this moment I must tell you that it is developing in terms of a real improvement. Our ambassador in Luanda has maintained constant contacts, more frequently than during the previous year, with the members of the Angolan Government. Last year Angola asked for about 970 teachers to be sent there. This ministry's General Directorate for Cooperation was able to arrange the departure of 800 teachers. So a considerable effort was made which almost approached the very large number of teachers requested from us. Not all of them sent out, not because of lack of readiness on their part or ours, but because of difficulties in housing, infrastructures, education, and so forth, in Angola.

As these problems are resolved and if the Angolan Government's desire to receive these teachers persists, they will sent out. You can see the importance of a figure of that kind, of that magnitude--800 Portuguese teachers in Angola. That is undeniably significant.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Does this mean that the political problems which existed during the previous government's term of office between the Portuguese Government and, specifically, the Governments of Angola and Mozambique are in the process of being surmounted?

Goncalves Pereira: I do not remember. When you speak of the previous government, are you referring to the first constitutional government, headed by Dr Sa Carneiro?

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: I am referring specifically to some statements by Angolan leaders about the difficulties of increasing cooperation with Portugal as long as the Portuguese Government maintained a stance which they termed one of "indulgence" toward activities against established regimes in the former colonies....

Goncalves Periera: I was obviously not in the government at the time, and although I remember hearing of these statements, I do not find from the examination of the dossiers which I have conducted that this has been an obstacle to the development of cooperation. The obstacles to the greater development of cooperation, which even so took an immense quantiative and qualitative leap forward in 1980 (1980 could be said to be the first year that cooperation reached high levels and figures) have been not of a political but of a practical nature. Moreover, I must say that this ministry's viewpoint is that cooperation between these countries and Portugal is a historical inevitability, irrespective of the regimes prevailing in one country or another. There may be temporary mishaps but, in my opinion, the stances adopted by one government or another will not change this degree of historical inevitabiility. We have so many things in common. There are certain tasks which Portuguese technicians are particularly well suited to perform, with the knowledge which they have of local structures for both sides to increase this cooperation, irrespective, as I say, of the merely political viewpoints or even political incidents which may occur in relations among states. For our part, this is what we will do. We will seek to ensure that the cooperation which we wish to provide is kept as far as possible away from everyday problems and political stances in the strict sense of the term, because cooperation is also politics in the broadest sense of the term.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: To change the subject, will our stance toward the United States have to be defined in coordination with the stances adopted by the EEC countries, or do you believe more conspicious support for U.S. stances on our part to be advisable?

Goncalves Pereira: Neither. Because we are not an EEC member, and so our stance does not have to coincide with that of those countries, although it should take it into account, because it is a very important stance. But nor do we have to have a stance closer to the United States than any other country. Our relations with the United States have been excellent over the last few years. It must be one the countries with which we have maintained the closest relations, and it is certainly the country from which we have received the greatest financial aid in all fields. This is a fact which cannot fail to be taken. So I would distinguish two levels in relations with the United States: the purely bilateral level, at which there is no dispute between the two countries, at which there is a desire on the part of the United States to help resolve some of the economic difficulties with which Portugal is contending, and at which, moreover, the United States remains one of our principal export markets, and the multilateral level, at which, specifically with respect to military cooperation, our links with the United States pass through NATO. This year we are witnessing attempts to strengthen NATO in which the United States has a decisive role to play. The Portuguese Government (moreover, not only the government, because the president of the republic has had occasion to reaffirm publicly Portugal's participation in NATO commitments) will support the multilateral actions undertaken by NATO.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: With respect to the Soviet Union, will this government adopt a "severity" of stances similar to that of the previous government?

Goncalves Pereira: As far as severity is concerned, I leave you responsible for the term, which is perhaps not the most appropriate, because a country of Portugal's size can hardly be severe with a world power like the Soviet Union, but these stances--you are referring, of course, to the denunciation of some agreements, the summoning of our ambassador for consultations and the expulsion of diplomats--were the consequence of specific circumstances.

Some of them stem from the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The expulsion of the diplomats was due to the fact that these diplomats, in the government's well-founded opinion, were conducting activities which went beyond mere diplomatic duties.

So there is no intention of undertaking initiatives against anybody--either against the Soviet Union or against any other country.

I had occasion to state in my parliamentary statement that we are not in conflict with any country in the world. And we are not in conflict with the Soviet Union. Perhaps we are in ideological conflict with communist expansionism, but we are not in direct conflict with any particular country.

Insofar as our stance is perceived by the foreign minister (because it rests with the prime minister to direct the government's policy), it will be one of not undertaking initiatives to antagonize the Soviet Union or any other country. But we cannot fail to react if there are incidents or stances which we regard as unfriendly, as was the case with the expulsion of the diplomats, whom we believed to be conducting unfriendly activities here. Or, if there are widespread actions which we believe to be justified, as was the case with the international community's reaction against the occupation of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union, then it is possible that we will support Western initiatives, provided that we deem them fruitful.

However, I must say that the previous government had a problem which this government does not have: that of changing stance. In fact Prime Minister Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo told your newspaper in the last days of December [presumably 1979] that, according to a message from the Soviet ambassador, the Russian tanks would withdraw from Afghanistan, and thus the Helsinki agreements would be fulfilled. But the Helsinki agreements obviously have nothing to do with the matter, because they are of limited application to Europe. Nor did the tanks, withdraw; rather, they were substantially reinforced.

So when the government took office, it had to indicate that its stance was not one of continuity with the previous government. And indeed it was not. When those statements were made by the prime minister, they could have been interpreted as a grave lack of solidarity within the context existing at the time. This government does not have that problem, because its stance falls within the previous government's line.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: With respect to Timor, what specific initiatives to unblock the present situation are envisaged?

Goncalves Pereira: I must remind you that this question cannot be addressed solely to the government, because article 307 of the constitution states that actions to be carried out concerning East Timor are the responsibility of the president of the republic and the government. The government has discussed the issue's humanitarian aspects, specifically securing the cooperation of the International Red Cross. And something has been done to lessen the sufferings of the population of East Timor, as far as the political aspect is concerned, responsibility rests, as I have said, not only with the government. However, at the United Nations last October, Portugal secured approval of a motion once more denying the legitimacy of the acquisition of sovereignty by force. In accordance with the UN Charter, we do not recognize the annexation of East Timor, which is a solution through force, and we believe that the population of East Timor should be allowed to choose the destiny which it wishes. This is also the significance of the majority votes at the United Nations. So it is in this direction that the government's line will continue, but, I reiterate, it does not rest solely with the government, because the president of the republic has a constitutional power in this respect.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: With respect to the president of the republic, one of the complaints made by the previous government concerned the difficulties created by Belem Palace in resolving the problems inherent in diplomatic appointments. With respect to your government, do you expect these difficulties in this field to persist, or are there signs that there will be no problems of this nature?

Goncalves Pereira: Obviously, I leave you responsible for your assessment of the relations existing at a time when I did not belong to the government. I will refer exclusively to the future.

I have deemed it necessary to propose urgently only one appointment of an ambassador abroad. I can even say where--in Washington. What I cannot do is to tell you the person's name, even though it is now public knowledge. It is a diplomatic practice: we do not yet have the U.S. Government's approval, and it is not the foreign minister who will violate this practice.

This is the only initiative which I have deemed urgent, in view of the replacement of the U.S. administration. I must say that the prime minister, with whom it clearly rested to decide whether or not to endorse my initiative, and the president of the republic gave their consent to seeking approval. So I have experienced no difficulty so far. With respect to the extensive diplomatic reshuffle which I am planning to submit to the prime minister, the prime minister will have occasion, of course, to discuss it with the president of the republic. But do not ask me for a prior opinion as to whether difficulties will or will not arise in this connection. I confine myself to judging facts, and I cannot at present foresee any specific difficulty.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: I would now like to ask for your opinion with respect to the problems confronting international law in the recent issue concerning the U.S. hostages in Iran. Do you believe that all existing ideas on this issue will have to be reappraised or that it will be necessary to set up systems for monitoring these international rules?

Goncalves Pereira: No, I do not believe so, for a simple reason: This is that if you examine the outcome of the affair, Iran gained nothing from the clear violation of international law constituted by the detention of the hostages. On the contrary, the resolution of the problem was extremely disadvantageous for Iran, which ended up by receiving only a portion of the money which was indisputably Iranian. The remainder is under discussion. However, this instance demonstrates that, despite difficulties, the traditional solutions of international law eventually prevail. There was a clear violation of international law which lasted for over a year but was eventually ended. So there is no danger of the traditional institutions, such as, for instance, diplomatic immunity, collapsing. What is necessary now is for the territorial state in which diplomatic missions exist to really perform the duty of protecting those missions, just as, for instance we have done in Portugal, where unfortunately there have also already been instances of terrorism in diplomatic missions--I have in mind the bombing of the Cuban Embassy. But we must adopt all possible public order measures and other measures to prevent this from happening.

However, at the international level, it is to be emphasized that at the last UN General Assembly the drafting of a convention which would strengthen the protection of diplomats by imposing further responsibilities on the territorial state for the protection of diplomats and diplomatic installations was proposed by a large majority of countries, including Portugal. Portugal supported this initiative at the United Nations and will support its continuation, and I presume that if that convention emerges from it, Portugal will endorse it. We have every interest in complying with international law--which is this government's overall rule--in ensuring the protection of the diplomatic missions which are under our supervision and are on Portuguese territory and in territorial states ensuring the integrity of Portuguese diplomatic missions abroad.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: But does not the lack of any kind of sanction encourage the violation of these rules of international law?

Goncalves Pereira: You know that the process of laying down sanctions in international law is generally very slow. To some extent there are unorganized sanctions which work. Iran suffered grave consequences from the viewpoint of trading relations for having placed itself to some extent outside the international community, a position which has fortunately now ceased with the release of the hostages, and I do not know to what extent the Iran-Iraq war would have occurred if Iran had not been in a position of such considerable international isolation. So despite everything and the fact that the formulation of sanctions always takes time in the international context, I have the impression that the precedent will not be repeated, because any state which finds itself confronted with a similar situation will realize that it is in its interest to ensure rapidly the fulfillment of international obligations.

[Text] Madrid, 10 Feb (AFP)--Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo was designated today as Spain's new premier by King Juan Carlos, an official source said here.

Mr Calvo Sotelo, who was the candidate of the Democratic Center Union (DOU) must now win a vote of confidence in the House of Deputies of the Cortes. The vote is expected next Tuesday.

If he is confirmed by the chamber, Mr Calvo Sotelo will succeed former DCU leader Adolfo Suarez, who resigned as premier on January 29.

PCE Opposition

[Pedro Fernandez Cespedes dispatch]

[Text] In the face of a government led by Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo the PCE will, in the exercise of its constitutional rights, carry out a (?frontal) opposition in parliament and in the streets. That is the principal idea contained in the communique issued a few months ago which, in synthesis, contains nothing more than the ratification by the Central Committee at its meeting today of what the Executive Committee in turn said with regard to the government crisis and its meaning and with regard to the nomination of Leopold Calvo Sotelo to the post of prime minister. The PCE (?says) that in the Congress of Deputies, the Communist parliamentary group will vote against this nomination because it considers it to be negative to the interests of the popular masses and to the solution of the great problems which Spain faces, among them [word indistinct], the economic crisis, unemployment, the fight against terrorism, the development of autonomies and the democratization of the state apparatus. The PCE insists that [word indistinct] because of the gravity of these problems, only a government with a broad parliamentary base which has the participation of the left would have sufficient strength to tackle these problems with democratic solutions and (?simple progress).

Finally, the PCE Central Committee has put the Executive Committee in charge of drawing up a manifesto to the country once the crisis has been resolved in which the Communists' analysis and the solutions which they are putting forward in view of the gravity of the situation (?will prevail).

In short, this is the communique which the PCE Central Committee issued today.

BRIEFS

PCE/ML LEGALIZED--The Spanish Communist Party Marxist-Leninist [PCE/ML] has been legalized. This has been announced by the constitutional court, which has ruled in favor of the appeal for legalization lodged by the party. This ruling endorses that already made by the Madrid No. 16 court. This is the first ruling handed down by the constitutional court on the legalization of a political party. [Text] [Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1230 GMT 10 Feb 81 LD]

FRG'S GENSCHER CONTINUES TALKS WITH ULLSTEN

LD102050 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 10 Feb 81

[Text] The Polish situation was discussed in Stockholm where FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today ended his official visit. A European disarmament conference and plans to set up a nuclear-free zone in the north were also discussed in Stockholm. Here is a report by Juhani Lompolo:

The tense situation in Poland was one of the topics in the talks between Foreign Minister Genscher and his Swedish host Ola Ullsten. The ministers, however, did not speak much and were cautious in their comments on the matter. Foreign Minister Genscher said that the countries follow closely the policy [word indistinct] without interfering in Poland's internal affairs. The Poles must be allowed, on their own and peacefully and without outside interference in their affairs, to solve their own problems, Genscher said.

The idea of convening a European disarmament conference was also raised in the talks between the ministers. This is quite understandable because Sweden has offered to host such a conference when an agreement has been reached. This is what Foreign minister Genscher had to say on the matter:

We feel that in the present international situation the decision taken at the Madrid CSCE about such a European disarmament conference would in itself form an important element in calming the international situation and in increasing trust, said Foreign Minister Genscher. He said that the Federal Republic of Germany supports France's proposal for a disarmament conference, and stressed the importance of the so-called confidence-building measures at the beginning of the conference. Foreign Minister Genscher also raised the aspect contained in the French proposal that all of Europe from the Urals to the Atlantic should be taken as the basis for these confidence-building measures and disarmament. No exception should be made for the Soviet Union, as was the case in the final act of the Helsinki CSCE.

The ministers also discussed the plans to bring about a nuclear-free zone in the north. Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten said that Sweden takes a positive attitude to the idea, but in his opinion, in order to be effective, the zone should cover a larger area than the Nordic countries alone. In his opinion, territories bordering on the Nordic countries should at least be included in a grey zone, and the medium-range missiles directed at the north should then also be withdrawn. Ullsten thinks that there are still many obstacles to the establishment of a nuclear-free north.

Foreign Minister Genscher, for his part, thinks that the biggest threat is the Soviet medium-range missiles which, he said, can reach any European country from Soviet territory. This is the reason why talks on such plans, on a nuclear-free zone in the north for example, are losing their significance, said Foreign Minister Genscher at a press conference which was the last point on the agenda during his visit to Sweden.

VISITING PAKISTANI FOREIGN SECRETARY GIVES VIEWS

LORD PRIVY SEAL ON TALKS WITH JORDANIAN GOVERNMENT

LD101119 London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT in Arabic 5 Feb 81 p 1

[Interview granted by Lord Privy Seal Ian Gilmour to ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT correspondent in Amman--date not specified]

[Excerpts] [Question] When the lord privy seal and minister of state for foreign affairs visits a country like Jordan, we expect his visit to be political even though he may sign tourist, cultural or transport agreements. Can we hear from you the real reasons for your visit?

[Answer] As you know there are several complicated issues in the area that affect the general situation there and affect us as well in that we are interested in the situation in the area. I wanted to discuss in detail these issues with the Jordanian Government; this is in addition to other issues of common interest which I wanted to discuss with officials here. All this is part of the continuing consultations between two friendly countries enjoying good relations such as Britain and Jordan.

[Question] In the light of the role which Britain played within the so-called European initiative, one would imagine that you are trying to submit certain ideas or steps that might be put forward by the EC. Do you believe that this interpretation is correct?

[Answer] The matter is more general than it is detailed in your question. As you know, the European initiative is now in the hands of the Dutch chairman of the Community. Therefore, Netherlands Foreign Minister van der Klaauw will visit the area shortly and hold talks which will be a continuation of what Mr Gaston Thorn began and will deal with specific matters such as the right of self-determination for the Palestinians, Israeli withdrawal and the position of Jerusalem--issues for which the EC has prepared intensively.

[Question] What are your personal expectations regarding developments in the Middle East problem, particularly since there is a new administration in the United States?

[Answer] I have lived with the Middle East problem, or let us say that I have been interested in it for many years, but I cannot indulge in predictions regarding it. But certainly there is such an increasing interest in the West and in the area that I am hopeful of the achievement of long-awaited progress. Any person trying to indulge in predictions in this case in particular would only be impulsive and rash.

KKE-INTERIOR STATEMENT ON YUGOSLAVIA VISIT

[KKE-Interior Central Committee Secretary Bambis Dhrakopoulos statement--place and date not specified]

[Excerpts] Our Yugoslavia visit and our meeting with League of Communists of Yugoslavia [LCY] leaders was a further step in developing relations between our two parties that are linked with so many common ties and struggles.

We met with Comrade Dragosavac, LCY Executive Committee secretary, and other members of the Yugoslav delegation, as well as with comrade Mojsov, president of the LCY Executive Committee Presidency. During our meeting we made a broad review of positions and assessments of both parties on international relations problems and in particular, on the continuing deterioration of the international situation, the struggle for detente and peace in the present phase, the role of the nonaligned movement, the problems in the world labor movement's latest developments, the problems in the relations between our two countries, and the Balkan cooperation course. Once again, the two parties had a very broad identity of views on these issues. Our side affirmed the KKE (Interior's) correctness of positions and policy.

A mutual briefing was held on the domestic situation and the problems of both countries and on the activities of both parties. Our delegation explained our party's positions on the situation in the country and the prerequisites that it considers necessary to effect the course toward a change.

The Yugoslav delegation explained the way in which the LCY and the Yugoslav Federal Government today face the repercussions of world crises on their country's economy by devising a program that will stabilize all sides of the economy, by further developing of the socialist self-management system with the decisive participation of the working class in this institution, and by confronting economic and other problems of the country. The LCY leaders expressed their total optimism on the economy's future and their country's course.

We believe that our visit was very useful and productive, for party relations and for the relations of our two peoples and countries.

GENERAL COMMENTS ON NATO SOUTHEASTERN FLANK

TA101608 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1510 GMT 10 Feb 81

[Text] Erzurum, 10 Feb (AA)--General Sedat Guneral of Turkey, commander of NATO's Land Forces for Southeastern Europe (LSE), said because of petroleum, all NATO member countries had "vital interests" in the Middle East. He made the statement in an address to Turkish and NATO commanders gathered in Erzurum Tuesday for the NATO exercise codenamed "Ally Enterprise 81", which he is commanding jointly with Maj Gen Michael Reynolds of Britain, commander of NATO's Mobile Force (AMF).

Middle East and Turkey

Guneral told members of the National Security Council, the defense minister, the commanders of the 3rd Army and 9th Army Corps of Turkey, and NATO officers representing Belgium, Federal Germany, Italy, Britain and the U.S.--countries which have air force contingents in the NATO Mobile Force for Europe--developments in the Middle East have made the region "more unstable and sensitive" than ever. No one could shrug off the possibility of a major conflict breaking out any time in the region, "contrary to the relative balance and stability (?in) central Europe." And Turkey, included in his area of responsibility as a NATO commander, was the only NATO country facing directly the threat to the Middle East, Guneral pointed out. [passage indistinct] the increased strategic importance of the area.

The areas under NATO's commander of Land Forces, Southeast, (LSE) "are surrounded either directly by Warsaw Pact countries or by sympathizer countries," Guneral noted, and included the critical straits of Istanbul and Canakkale.

Potential Threat

"The land, sea and air threat to the area under my command," Gen Guneral said, "is incomparably great in quantity and quality to the threat to any other area. And perhaps the greatest threat can be defined as the possibility that the supremacy in strength may provoke the potential aggressor into believing that it might succeed."

In the face of the massive strength of the potential aggressor "which will doubtless be used to realize known aims should the opportunity arise," Guneral admitted, the forces under his command included three Turkish armies plus NATO support forces. Given these conditions, he went on to say, it was not difficult, although it (?was) highly undesirable, to estimate the outcome of any future developments.

Guneral called on the leaders of NATO member countries to ensure that the gaps in NATO's military strength, "which tend to reach dangerous proportions" are removed as soon as possible, thus reducing the risks in the present situation. Nevertheless, he added, he would like to confirm that all NATO contingents were "determined" to defend their countries against all aggression, regardless of the odds.

Gen Reynolds on Mobile Force

Gen Michael Reynolds explained the "deterrence" function of the NATO Mobile Force whose air and land units could be deployed with speed in the face of any possible threats to a NATO flank, thus demonstrating the defense determination and solidarity of the allies.

Gen Ersin on Turkish Exercise

Commander of the Turkish Land Forces Gen Nurettin Ersin, who is in Erzurum together with the other members of the National Security Council, except Head of State Gen Kenan Evren, told the commanders gathered that a purely Turkish exercise by the 3rd Army, codenamed "Republic Is Virtue" was timed to coincide with the NATO exercise in eastern Turkey in order to allow the NATO Mobile Force to get firsthand information about this area, which is included in its field of responsibiiity.

The 3rd Army served an area vital both for the Turkish Armed Forces and for NATO, he noted.

Army Begins Winter Exercises

The temperature was minus 2 [centigrade]. The site is 2,083 meters above sea level. The exercises, which will be held under such difficult conditions, are aimed at improving the units' winter fighting.

PRIME MINISTER COMMENTS ON ECONOMIC ISSUES

[Text] Ankara, 10 Feb (AA)--Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu said his government was aware that it had to remove economic difficulties faced by citizens in order to ensure domestic peace. He made the statement in a talk intended for broadcasting over TRT radio and TV Tuesday evening, dealing particularly with economic and welfare measures.

Tax Reform

He listed the aims of the recent tax reform legislation as follows: To reduce the tax burden on fixed and low-income groups, which had grown with inflation; to fill the gaps in existing legislation; to raise fixed tax rates to a realistic level; and to prevent tax evasion.

A major achievement of the new legislation was to extend taxes to taxable groups which had so far been exempt from taxation.

National Income and Export Earnings

The rate of growth, which had been 7 percent annually in the first three five-year plan periods since the early 1960's, had started to recede in 1977, with the GNP reduced to 0.7 percent only in 1979, and 0.8 percent in 1980. The target growth rate for 1981 is 3 percent, the premier announced.

Shortages of foreign exchange and energy plus acts of anarchy and strikes and lockouts had all led to falls in production, he noted, Manpower lost because of strikes in the 8 and 1/2 months until mid-September in 1980 was equal to total manpower lost over the last 8 years, he said.

He noted with satisfaction that exports in 1980 had gone up by 28.5 percent to $2.9 billion, bringing in the highest level of export earnings in the history of the Turkish Republic. The export target for 1981 was $3.5 billion. Transit carrying from Europe to Middle Eastern countries increased to 1.2 million tons in 1980, Ulusu noted.

Due to her agricultural potential, Turkey had already started to play an important role as the supplier of food to neighboring and other countries of the Mediterranean, the Middle East, and Europe.

Turkish industry had recuperated and was increasing its output close to capacity, while Turkish businessmen gained increasing skill in marketing Turkish crops and manufactures.

Remittances of foreign exchange by Turkish workers abroad rose from $1.7 billion in 1979 to more than $2.1 billion in 1980, Ulusu announced. The "realistic" exchange rates applied would raise this total even further, he predicted.

Labor Relations

The prime minister promised for workers a standard of living "compatible with principles of social justice and equity."

The difficulties arising out of the distinction between "civil servant" and "worker" would be removed, he said.

He was aware that the 40 percent increase in the net pay of civil servants was "inadequate" but one had to be content with that "for the time being" in order to ensure the success of the government's current policy of "stability."

It was essential for all, he said, to economize both in carrying out public services and in meeting personal needs.

CUMHURIYET SPEAKS OUT AGAINST NEUTRON BOMB

NC110756 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 7 Feb 81 p 3

["The World Today" column by Ali Sirmen: "The Neutron Bomb Again"]

[Excerpt] Ivan's son asked him: Daddy, what is the neutron bomb like? And the father responded: This bomb requires a lot of explanation. Imagine Red Square and imagine that bottles full of vodka have been lined up in four rows from one end of Red Square to the other. Then think of this vodka with no one left to drink it. Well, this is the neutron bomb.

This is how the dry Soviet humor describes the neutron bomb, while those who attach absolutely no value to human life call this bomb the "clean bomb." The cleanliness of the bomb is apparently due to the fact that it kills human beings but does no harm to buildings. This shows how clean the bomb is and from what angle those who are trying to manufacture it look at human beings.

What kind of civilization is this? Isn't this "the monster known as the civilization with only a single tooth left" to which our national poet refers in his poem?

Jimmy Carter had suspended the manufacture of the neutron bomb but cowboy Reagan is preparing to order its manufacture. This is the first present Ronald Reagan has offered to humanity during the first 2 weeks of his presidency.

American experts are exploring the possibility of confining the use of the neutron bomb to areas outside the frontiers of the two big powers. When, for example, the Soviet or the Warsaw Pact forces march on U.S. territory, which is on the other side of the Atlantic, it will be too late to use the neutron bomb. So, the bomb will have to be used when forces hostile to the United States and NATO advance on European territory, particularly on countries which form the wings of NATO. That is, the areas exposed to the dangers of the neutron bomb will be Europe in general and its wings in particular; Turkey is one of those countries which constitute the wing.

Let us, for a moment, imagine that the neutron bomb has been dropped over the Bosphorus to destroy advancing enemy forces. A question comes to mind here: How, we wonder, will the "clean bomb" differentiate the hostile enemy forces from the friendly Turks who are NATO members?

Moreover, when we come to consider that the neutron bomb affects a far larger area than the atom and hydrogen bombs, the horror of the situation becomes all the more manifest.

The "clean bomb" is in fact a "cleaning bomb." Its perils should therefore be clearly evaluated. Whether this weapon is developed in the United States, in the Soviet Union or in any other country, it creates far greater danger to Turkey than the atom and the hydrogen bombs.

We have to come out against the neutron bomb for the sake of our own survival.

BRUSSELS WILL NOT BE U.S. FORCE HEADQUARTERS

LD111434 Brussels Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 11 Feb 81

[Text] Brussels will not be the headquarters of the future American Rapid Deployment Force. This denial comes today following the revelations made yesterday by the New York TIMES.

Belgian military authorities speak of pure speculation on the subject of an American plan to base the command of the force of (?110,000) men in Brussels under the commander in chief of NATO in Europe. The force is still not in existence operationally.

People in NATO circles are also very perplexed about the validity of placing these forces under the command of the Atlantic alliance since the force is in fact designed to ensure the defense of regions like the Middle East, a region which is outside the jurisdiction of the North Atlantic treaty.

FOREIGN MINISTER'S SPOKESMAN ON NEUTRON BOMB

LD111229 Brussels LE SOIR in French 8-9 Feb 81 p 3

[Text] Questioned Friday [6 February] by BELGA on the statements regarding the neutron bomb issue which have been attributed to the foreign minister, Mr Nothomb's spokesman, who had contacted the minister in Senegal, gave the following details:

"The U.S. defense secretary has indicated his interest in the possibility of including the neutron weapon in U.S. forces' arsenal.

"This opinion has been duly noted. However, it is not a U.S. Government decision or a proposal submitted to the allies for consultation.

"Questioned on this affair by a journalist in Lagos, Foreign Minister Charles-Ferdinand Nothomb naturally refused to adopt any stance which would prejudice possible analysis of the problem.

"In so doing he abided by his predecessors' traditional attitude. The hypothetical possibility of deployment in Belgium was never mentioned during the press conference."

The foreign minister's spokesman added that the U.S. Government has, in addition, just recalled that the United States will not take any decision on the deployment of that weapon in Europe without first consulting the allies.

FOREIGN MINISTER VAN DER KLAAUW IN SAUDI ARABIA

[An Salomonson dispatch: "Van der Klaauw Warns Against Isolating Israel"]

[Text] Riyadh, 2 Feb--During his visit to Saudi Arabia Foreign Minister van der Klaauw has warned his counterpart Prince Sa'ud not to take any action in which Israel would become isolated in the United Nations. According to The Netherlands foreign minister, an Arab campaign would exacerbate the situation in the Middle East rather than lead to a solution.

Prince Sa'ud expressed satisfaction that Europe's knowledge of the Middle East has improved and that Europe's stance is now based on reality.

According to Sa'ud, Israel has lost the right to be a UN member since it refuses to implement Security Council resolutions. In the prince's opinion, no decision has as yet been made on the issue as to whether the Arab countries will seek to expel Isreal at the next UN General Assembly.

The declaration of a holy war against Israel by the Islamic Conference summit in At-Ta'if should be regarded as a mobilization of all forces to restore their rights to the Palestinians, Prince Sa'ud said. According to him, the expression "jihad" should not be interpreted as a real war but more as a conflict in the broad sense of the word, and also as an economic struggle. The Saudi minister thus gives a mild interpretation of the relevant passage in the Mecca declaration, stating that the jihad must be waged "with all means," until "all the occupied Palestinian and Arab territories have been restored to their legitimate owners."

"The Netherlands stance has already changed. The participation in the UN Interim Force in Lebanon is an indication of this, and The Netherlands stance on Jerusalem has also changed. These are good signs," Sa'ud stated. According to him, the conversation with Van der Klaauw led him to hope that Europe is not only choosing a stance but will also play a more active role in seeking peace in the Middle East.

Europe and the PLO

The Saudi minister expressed considerable interest in the European Middle East initiative (in preparation of which Van der Klaauw will soon be undertaking a tour of 14 countries involved in the Middle East conflict). However, in order to make it a success, Europe, in his opinion, will have to recognize the PLO. One of the greatest problems would then have been eliminated.

Sa'ud stated: "It is remarkable that you should leave the decision of with whom negotiations should be conducted to one of the parties directly involved in the conflict. Under no circumstances can Israel itself specify with whom it wishes to negotiate. It must accept the negotiating partners whom the Palestinians themselves also accept. Well, the Palestinians accept the PLO."

Concerning the new U.S. President, the prince said that he hopes that the President will use his country's power to bring peace to the Middle East in which the Palestinians' rights will be recognized. Reagan was wrong, according to Sa'ud, when he described the PLO as a group of terrorists in his election campaign.

The occupation of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union is harshly condemned in Riyadh. The minister said that he regards it as one of the most threatening and destabilizing factors in the world. According to him, this occupation will undoubtedly have repercussions. "It is a return to the era of imperialism, which is responsible for two world wars. It is the law of the jungle, where the strongest has the right to go everywhere he wishes because he is the strongest," Prince Sa'ud said.

He said that he is not in favor of an interntional conference, such as French President Giscard has proposed. According to the minister, as long as there is no sign at all that the Soviets intend to withdraw their troops from Afghanistan, a conference cannot contribute to this.

On his departure from Riyadh, Van der Klaauw was very satisfied with his visit, which according to him, took place in an "extremely good atmosphere." The plans for a European initiative, concerning which the minister will soon be visiting Riyadh for a second time as EEC Council chairman, appear to be well received here, although it is clear that the Saudis adopt an orthodox stance toward Israel.

Van der Klaauw described Prince Sa'ud as extremely intelligent and as somebody who knows his business and expresses himself clearly and incisively. "The first of the next generation in Saudi Arabia," the minister stated.

Yesterday evening Van der Klaauw arrived in Algiers. He is to stay in Algeria for 2 days. The minister informed his Egyptian counterpart Butrus Ghali about his talks in Riyadh during a brief stopover in Cairo.

Economic Cooperation

LD101009 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 2 Feb 81 p 3

[An Salomonson dispatch: "Economic Agreement With Saudi Arabia"]

[Text] Riyadh, 2 February--An agreement on economic cooperation will shortly be signed between The Netherlands and Saudi Arabia, Foreign Minister van der Klaauw has announced. The text only needs to be approved by the Saudi cabinet. The agreement contains no clauses on the Arab boycott. A mixed commission will monitor the implementation of the agreement.

In mid-February Agriculture Minister Braks will pay a visit to Saudi Arabia with an economic delegation. There seems to be great interest in this visit in Riyadh.

King Khalid discussed in great detail with Van der Klaauw the possibilities of cooperation in the agricultural field, especially in connection with irrigation. In certain food sectors the King said, Saudi Arabia will be self-supporting in 1982.

Shell will start building large refineries and chemical plants in Saudi Arabia. After an initial breaking-in period oil production will finally reach 100,000 barrels per day. Van der Klaauw also expressed to Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Sa'ud his appreciation of Saudi Arabia's moderate line on oil policy, as a result of which prices have not rocketed and shortages, due to the war between Iran and Iraq, have been able to be avoided.

Because of oil, in the first 11 months of 1980, The Netherlands exports to Saudi Arabia amounted to 1.9 billion guilders, and imports from Saudi Arabia 7.3 billion guilders.

REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF YUGOSLAVIA'S DJURANOVIC

Schmidt Dinner Speech

DW111205 BONN PRESS AND INFORMATION OFFICE in German 10 Feb 81

[Prereleased manuscript of the speech by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at the dinner given in honor of the visiting president of the Yugoslav Federal Executive Council, Veselin Djuranovic, in Bonn on 10 February]

[Text] Mr Premier, ladies and gentlemen: To begin with, I would like to cordially welcome you, the premier of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and the gentlemen of your delegation, again into this circle. I am glad that we can now reciprocate the hospitality which you, Mr Premier, accorded me and my delegation nearly 4 years ago in Belgrade and in your homeland Montenegro. I vividly recall the talks with your unforgotten President Tito, with yourself and with other Yugoslav personages, and the impressions I gained from your beautiful country.

I was in Belgrade in May to pay my last respects to President Tito jointly with the federal president and with the federal foreign minister. Anyone having participated in the functions shared the mourning of the whole world over a great statesman.

It is with respect and sympathy that we are observing how Yugoslavia continues the political course on which it embarked. Yugoslavia continues to preserve its independence with purposiveness and determination. Your country is a factor of stability in Europe.

But it is not just on this continent, Mr Premier that your country contributes toward the peaceful coexistence of the peoples. Yugoslavia helped found the United Nations organization. Without President Tito, the development of the movement of nonaligned states is inconceivable. Your country, finally, is the spokesman of the Group of 77 which is waging the dialogue between industrial countries and the Third World. By the worldwide activities of a prudent foreign policy, Yugoslavia makes a specifically European contribution toward stability and balance which, I think, benefits all Europeans. This is why to us the exchange of political views between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia has always been particularly valuable. Now, at the beginning of a difficult decade, this is even more true.

It was with great relief and human sympathy that we experienced the end of the kidnapping in Tehran. Algeria, a country with which Yugoslaiva is closely cooperating in the movement of nonaligned states, contributed to this solution in a manner which justly met with recognition and gratitude from many sides.

Unfortunately, we cannot but state that many other conflicts are continuing which threaten peace in the world. This applies to the war between Iraq and Iran--an open an armed conflict in a region which is vitally important to all of us. This applies to Afghanistan where the Soviet military intervention continues and by which the confidence of many peoples with regard to the respect for their sovereignty and independence has been badly shaken. This applies to the military occupation of Chad by which many states in Africa feel threatened. This applies to the south of Africa where a policy of economic, social and political equal rights must replace the racial policy; where Namibia is waiting to achieve an internationally recognized independence in a peaceful way. This applies to the Middle East where the peace process urgently needs new impulses in a serious conflict lasting for decades.

But in Europe, too, we are not free from concern. Our Polish neighbors find themselves under the pressure of economic difficulties and confronted with problems which they alone can solve and whose solution, in keeping with the letter and spirit of the Final Act of Helsinki, also must be left to them alone. To the extent they desire our economic cooperation in this connection, we shall do what we can.

The East-West relations are in a critical phase. The Federal Government is convinced that no reliable peace can be had in the world without balance. This is why the Federal Republic of Germany is affiliated with the Atlantic alliance and has put its military weight onto the Western scales.

The preservation of military balance is an extremely difficult process. The danger keeps growing that mankind will arm itself to death unless it is possible to establish the balance for good by means of verifiable agreements and to reduce it to as low a level as possible. This is the reason why the talks of the great powers on the limitation of the most dangerous weapons are of such great signficance. The Federal Government advocates the constant continuation of the SALT process.

As far as we Europeans are concerned, the nuclear medium-range weapons also have strategic significance. The Atlantic alliance has reacted to the growing imbalance in the field of these weapons with the necessary decision on counterarming. This decision, however, for the first time, contains a second party which offers and demands negotiations on the mutual limitation of nuclear medium-range weapons. We will adhere to this dual decision because we are convinced that it serves peace. Consequently, we will continue to advocate our stance that the talks on a limitation of the nuclear medium-range weapons opened in Geneva in October 1980 be continued as soon as possible.

In the efforts toward the preservation of a balance of military forces, we have underscored time and again that balance alone is not yet an adequate prerequisite for a peaceful coexistence of the peoples. What must be added is the respect for the equal rights, the independence of all peoples, and for their legitimate interests. What must be added, moreover, is the will for peace. What needs to be added is the will for a balance of interests, for compromise, for cooperation.

In the Final Act of Helsinki, the principles have been phrased which all states must observe if security and cooperation in Europe is to last. The first phase of the CSCE followup conference in Madrid has been concluded.

We hope, as we did before, that it will be possible to come to terms on concrete results. What commands the foreground as far as we are concerned is improvements in the field of human contacts and information as well as the adoption of a precise mandate for a conference on disarmament in Europe.

We support the proposal concerning such a conference submitted by France because we consider real stabilization of the military power ratio in Europe a priority task. At a time when cooperation between East and West in burdened by serious crises of confidence, we urge concrete negotiations on concrete confidence-building measures. The participants in the CSCE process cannot afford another, voluminous, expensive and complicated conference which will not yield any concrete results. One must therefore see to it in Brussels with a precise mandate that the disarmament conference will be a success. Part if this is the establishment of agreement in Brussels on the task of the conference.

Involved are militarily significant, committing and verifiable confidence-building measures to be applied to the entire European Continent, including the European part of the Soviet Union. The application of such measures on all of Europe is an indispensable part of our concept. Everywhere in Europe the same confidence-building measures must be valued for the armed forces of all CSCE states. Granting privileges to the biggest military power in Europe would only create new mistrust.

Both German states could make a special contribution to new confidence in Europe. Both states agree that never again will war emanate from German territory. Relations between both German states, however, must not become the origin of additional burdens for the anyway difficult East-West relations. One-sided acts of delimitation, contradicting the spirit of the final document of Helsinki and the basic treaty, have created great damage.

The Federal Republic is prepared at any time to continue along the path of developing German-German cooperation to a mutual benefit. Delimitation does not solve conflicts. The more critical times are, the more important talks will be, the more important will be a clear and predictable policy, the more important for us will be cooperation with our partners in the alliance and in the European community--which was just joined by Greece as the 10th state. Our aim and our offer are unchanged: cooperation and the balance of interests on the basic of equality.

We need cooperation in Europe to master the challenge coming from the Third World. Two problems are of central importance for us:

1. Some 4 billion people live in today's world. In the year 6000, there will be 6 billion. Despite great efforts by far not all of the 4 billion people with whom we live together in this world can find the most necessary things for life: sufficient food, clothing and housing. How will this be once there are 6 billion people? We must find an answer to this problem, and before the year 2000 when it could be too late.

2. The oil price explosion has boosted the oil bill of developing countries, which in 1973 amounted to 8 billion, to almost 70 billion in 1980. Some countries must spend more than 50 percent of their export gains on urgent oil imports. The entire development aid of all Western industrial countries this year will not suffice to cover just the increase of the developing countries' oil bills from 1979 to 1980.

All countries must help here, including the East European industrial countries, most of all the OPEC countries, with direct investments and contributions. It will not be simple for many of them because the increasing economic problems have not stopped short in front of the industrial countries, including the Federal Republic of Germany.

I do not believe that anyone can offer a ready solution for this challenge. We must rally all our forces to make a great effort and find common solutions quickly.

Our relations with the countries of the Third World are clear: The Federal Government seeks cooperation on a partnership basis with these countries, on a basis of equal rights. We reject any kind of striving for predominance in the Third World. We welcome and support regional cooperation leading to more stability.

Mr Premier, we have discussed many of these issues today, which deeply worry you and me and many people in our countries, and we will continue our talks on them. We found that we basically agree that our world needs more partnership.

We therefore have agreed that our bilateral relations are of great value. Going beyond direct relations between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, we stated together with satisfaction that relations between our two countries have pleasantly developed. They can be considered today as a good example of trustful relations characterized by manifold cooperation between countries with different social systems. If there are occasional difficulties, we can always assume that preparedness exists on both sides to overcome such difficulties in mutual interest.

Of special importance is economic cooperation between the Federal Republic and Yugoslavia. With the help of the new cooperation agreement concluded last year, an extended contractual basis for the future was created between the European Community and Yugoslavia. We have supported as much as we could Yugoslavia's efforts aimed at stabilization in a difficult economic situation. By extending its guarantee ceiling, the Federal Government has created an important prerequisite for making available a considerable credit by a consortium of German banks.

In the field of cooperation and joint ventures between German and Yugoslav firms, the Federal Government still sees great and not fully exploited possibilites. On the other hand, however, I hear from German economic circles and medium-size firms that there still are some open questions in this field and even problems. Your visit to the Federal Association of German Industries in Cologne tomorrow will certainly offer an opportunity to discuss this issue more thoroughly.

In speaking of cooperation, I would like to particularly mention the many thousands of your compatriots living in the Federal Republic of Germany. With diligence and high qualification, they have achieved a recognized position in our economic life. It is to their credit that relations between our two countries are becoming permanently deeper.

Mr Premier, relations between our two countries are close and mutually advantageous. They are united with each other through many common interests. Both of us feel responsible for peace not only in Europe, but in the world. These are good, excellent prerequisites for the further intensification of our cooperation. We will use them.

I raise my glass to the further fruitful development of our cooperation for both sides--to the friendship between our people, to a peaceful and prosperous future of Yugoslavia and to your personnel health!

Discussion With Officials

[Text] Bonn, 11 Feb (DPA)--Yugoslavia is seeking increased export opportunities to the Federal Republic in order to overcome its high deficit (1980: more than DM2.5 billion). This desire was one of the main topics of economic policy discussed between the Yugoslav Premier Veselin Djuranovic and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in altogether 6 hours of talks.

Government Spokesman Kurt Becker told journalists today that during the preceding cabinet session, the chancellor described his exchange of views with the Belgrade head of government the previous evening as an "astonishing example of world political agreement between two states with different social systems."

Djuranovic, who has been in the Federal Republic since Tuesday on a 4-day official visit, this morning had 1-hour meetings with each of the chairmen of the lower house parliamentary groups, Herbert Wehner (SPD), Wolfgang Mischnick (FDP) and Helmut Khol (CDU/CSU). As in the meeting with the chancellor and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the topics discussed included world political issues as well as the expansion of bilateral relations with special consideration given to increased economic cooperation.

The German side's interest in this also was stressed today by the president of the Federal Association of German Industry [BDI], Rolf Rodenstock, who later welcomed Djuranovic to the BDI building in Cologne. During the meeting between the Yugoslav government leader and about 60 German entrepreneurs, the industrial representatives expressed the desire for the removal of existing obstacles which make further cooperation between firms difficult in Yugoslavia.

Djuranovic, whose program this afternoon includes a meeting with Deputy SPD Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski will be received on Thursday by Federal President Karl Carstens. Afterward, he will visit Duesseldorf and later Stuttgart. It is in these two federal laender that most of the approximately 360,000 Yugoslav guest workers are employed.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON EUROPEAN DISARMAMENT

[Text] [Question] The background of our talk remains the same: The European disarmament conference where the Swedes, whom you are visiting, have prepared a special initiative. The foreground has changed due to current developments. The Polish premier has resigned after having been in office for less than 6 months. The central committee has nominated Defense Minister Jaruzelski as his successor. How do you assess this event?

[Answer] Since the beginning of the Polish events, we in the Federal Republic of Germany--this pertains to the Federal Government as well as to our parties--have never left any doubts about our great concern for the developments in Poland. But we have always demonstrated a high degree of restraint, because we expect all other states to show the same restraint, so that Poland can solve its problems alone and without outward interference. I believe that in the current development phase, this restraint should be maintained particularly strictly.

[Question] Do you see at a first glance that current developments in Poland, significant developments, could bring influence to bear on the political geography of Europe?

[Answer] I think that such an assessment would contradict what I have just said.

[Question] Do you think that at a time when tensions in one country bring influence to bear on the political climate in Europe as now, a conference of all European countries, a disarmament conference, is overdue?

[Answer] I have never left any doubts that we support the suggestion of the French Government to hold a European disarmament conference. This suggestion is being discussed at present in Madrid where all signatories of the final document of Helsinki are assembled. There aren't just European states, there are also the United States and Canada, who have also signed the final document.

We plan in the first phase of the European disarmament conference to agree on confidence-building measures in all of Europe, in other words, from the Urals in the east, to the Atlantic in the west. There cannot be any doubts at all that particularly here in Europe, which is a highly armed continent, the building of confidence is of elementary significance to make some progress in arms control and disarmament.

[Question] Why are you not a bit more modest in the interest of quick talks among the European countries? The demand contained in the French concept, extending the area of such a concept from the Urals to the Atlantic contains some (?friction).

[Answer] The final Helsinki document we signed in 1975--that is all European countries, the Soviet Union, France, the neutral countries, Great Britain, we, the GDR, the United States and Canada--clearly defines the area of the final document's validity. That is the area I mentioned, from the Urals to the Atlantic.

I think it would be wrong if the beginning of a disarmament conference is burdened with prerequisites such as: One can hold the conference only if the entire area of validity is not involved. The final document is valid and one must stick with it.

One more thing must be kept in mind: Confidence is indivisible, also geographically. I think that a conference where one part of the European territory is exempted, would drive a wedge of mistrust into the negotiations. Everybody who wants the building of confidence [several words indistinct] which has been laid down in the final document of Helsinki.

One must seriously ask: Where is the problem that somebody could shy away from measures which have been agreed to through the building of confidence, such as watching the movement of troops to avoid surprise attacks and so on. We, for example, do not shy away. We have nothing at all against subordinating the whole area of the Federal Republic to these measures. The French have nothing against it, the Poles have nothing against it, the Austrians have nothing against it. So one must ask oneself about the reason when somebody says: Just one part of my area. I think that the Soviet Union would be well advised to incorporate the European part of its country, which is involved here, so as not to create mistrust by its refusal.

[Question] I would like to insist a bit that we stay with the point that it is expedient and perhaps even imperative to get to the negotiating table quickly. Is it, under the circumstances, not opportune to keep the preconditions for participation in such negotiations lower altogether because such negotiations in which one participates do offer the option of making one's own voice, specifically the European voice, better heard? In the SALT negotiations, you always have to take the detour over the Americans.

[Answer] Well, we do not participate at all in the SALT negotiations. These are negotiations between the two states which have intercontinental, strategic weapons, namely, the United States and the Soviet Union. But what this disarmament conference involves, indeed, is making surprise attacks in Europe impossible and achieving that all states will submit to the confidence-building measures. Nothing would be more erroneous than to call in question now what has been agreed upon in Helsinki 5 and 1/2 years ago. No, this applies to only a part of Europe. I believe that we would, thereby, inflict a serious blow to the cause of security in Europe and on the building of confidence. I must repeat: All European states are prepared, within the framework of the building of confidence, to have their whole territories controlled, put under surveillance, if you wish to put it that way. And one cannot but wonder why this should not apply to the Soviet Union as well.

[Question] Does the Federal Republic by its excessive, its great claims on the holding of such a conference, not make itself dependent on the United States which now represents the Western interests alone via these SALT negotiations? [Is this not] objectionable because the United States seeks military preponderance? At the German-French summit in Paris, meanwhile, the balance of forces was declared to be the precondition for European policies. Does this not spell preprogrammed conflict?

[Answer] It is necessary to state, to begin with, that this European disarmament conference, which we are discussing now, will be dealing with entirely different topics than the SALT negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union where the intercontinental strategic weapons are involved. Weapons which we do not have and which are not stationed in the Federal Republic of Germany, either.

[Answer] No, there will not be any intercontinental, strategic weapons deployed here in the future as well, these are deployed in the Soviet Union and in the United States. What is deployed in the Soviet Union in addition, and growing in extent each month, is medium-range missiles, strategic medium-range missiles which constitute a threat to all European states. This is a field negotiated between the two great powers.

What matters here, at the European disarmament conference, is to mitigate the danger of surprise attacks and thus to build confidence as a result. And really, you cannot speak of an exaggerated or, as you say, great German position when what matters is nothing else but to observe what all have signed in Helsinki. And besides, this is not solely a German position but a position of all Western partners. You can also read up on this in the 6 February German-French statement you just quoted. This statement also refers to the area of validity of the confidence-building measures from the Atlantic to the Ural mountains.

[Question] What remains is the contradiction with the United States, which aims at military preponderance.

[Answer] Who said that?

[Question] The Reagan government prior to and after its inauguration.

[Answer] No, there is no such thing as a statement by the Reagan government. All they said was that they propose to eliminate the imbalance. And you know yourself that we, the Federal Republic of Germany and our European partners--and this is also contained in the German-French statement--want to maintain balance in any case, our objective being--and this likewise being a common goal of the Western alliance--that we propose to attain balance on as low a level of armaments as possible. Now, we really cannot say that it does not mean anything if Europe at the moment is being threatened by the Soviet medium-range missiles. This is truly a serious threat. And all I can do is appeal to the Soviet Union time and again not to continue this missile armament but, on the contrary, to reduce these missiles lest we, on the Western side, be compelled to catch up to the extent required by the present level.

NEWSPAPERS VIEW LATEST DEVELOPMENTS IN POLAND

[Text] The Bremerhaven NORDSEE-ZEITUNG writes: A sharper breeze blows in Warsaw and some people have been feeling it for days already. The appointment of the highest ranking Polish general, the former National Defense Minister Jaruzelski, to the office of head of the government has left no doubt in the Polish capital that by this appointment, the leadership intends to attain an intimidating effect on those elements in the Solidarity mass movement which can no longer recognize a limit for the options of this organization. Central Committee Secretary Grabski in his speech to the Central Committee dealing with Solidarity hinted that administrative action might be taken against these elements when he said that there is no room in the country for adventures and scatterbrains. It is not hard to determine the direction from which the sharp breeze is blowing. It comes from the ranks of the medium-level party functionaries, from the security apparatus and, of course, also from the direction of Poland's communist neighbors in East and West, who show growing concern.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE advocates this view: And yet, it seems as though this appointment is a constructive decision and not already a destructive one. Above all, it is perhaps a last effort to solve the crises with the instruments aboard, that is to say, with Polish politics. Furthermore, this cannot be considered a coup d'etat, a seizure of power by the armed forces, for Jaruzelski enjoys the confidence not only of the armed forces but also of the party and the Soviet power. This is reflected already by the straight line and the consistency of his career. The initial reaction shows that the Poles, too, have comprehended that something new will begin now: the discontinuation of the strikes in Jelenia Gora and Katowice overnight, as it were. This moment of calm of own volition suddenly is more audible than many an earlier outcry.

MANNHEIMER MORGEN states: It is obvious that the formation of the government was taking place with a view to the court's decision which finally prohibited the admission of an independent trade union of peasants, called Rural Solidarity. New turbulences are in the offing because in such a case the peasants have announced a food supply strike, and the urban solidarity wants to side with the Rural Solidarity. So far, no final decision has been made in Lech Walesa's trade union on a general strike. But the regional trade union associations were advised to form an opinion on this matter. If a general strike breaks out in Poland, a fight by hook or by crook with General Jaruzelski will be in the offing.

RHEINPFALZ of Ludwigshafen points out: Poland's supreme communist, Kania, has made his contribution to the mastering of the crisis, if he succeeded. The supreme court did what it could by rejecting the request for the establishment of a trade union of peasants, to at least maintain the fiction of a sound socialist world. The only unknown quantity in the figuring is the army commanded by Jaruzelski. He was said to have stated that Poland's soldiers will not shoot at Poland's workers. But now one can probably be certain that Poland's soldiers will also not shoot at Brezhnev's, Honecker's or Husak's soldiers. This is Kania's last chance to force the Polish people under the party authority. The open threat will lead to the voluntary subordination of Walesa and his trade union. A thin hope, but still a hope, is the Poles do not want to surrender themselves completely to the dictate of the big neighbor. Kania's balance act is full of risks. It is not very likely that he will succeed.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG notes: Poland's party chief has selected Jaruzelski to set internal signs too. The general is suitable for that as well. In last year's summer strikes, he belonged to the group of those PZPR Politburo members who were against using force against the strikers. It is hard to imagine that without agreement by the defense minister, a Polish Army unit was participating in the unveiling of the monument for the victims of the 1970 strike in Gdansk. Now Kania presents a government chief to the Poles who has obviously some understanding for the social reforms, while simultaneously--despite his advice against using force in the weeks of the strikes--being able to represent the power of the state more effectively and even make use of it. Jaruzelski can better than anybody else in the Polish leadership make it clear to the Poles what is at stake now. He is Kania's last chance.

WEINSTEIN EXAMINES WARSAW PACT WEAKNESSES

[Adelbert Weinstein editorial: "The Weaknesses of the Warsaw Pact"]

[Text] Much has been written about NATO's military weakness. There have been critical commentaries about the Atlantic armed forces for as long as the alliance has existed. Our open society mercilessly discloses the shortcomings of the Western alliance. But the public knows little about the Warsaw Pact. Ignorance is the fertile soil for erroneous assessments. The idea is widespread that on the other side of the Iron Curtain a military bloc threatens us, a bloc which has no cracks. Aren't there 30 operational Soviet units concentrated on the other side, supported by 55 non-Russian divisions which follow a uniform command, a common military doctrine and are equipped with standardized arms and equipment?

Certainly, the figures are impressive. Moreover, it would be a strategic mistake to underrate the adversary. But painting everything in black and white, NATO only negatively and the other pact system only positively, would be equally dangerous. The Warsaw Pact has its weaknesses also, such as the strategic situation in Poland, for example. Some 26 Russian divisions have been on guard at the Polish borders for months. A comparison indicates how atrocious this reality is. What kind of NATO would it be where the Americans would have to march up divisions against the Federal Republic in order to preserve the strategic zone of West Europe as an operational foundation for the West? In addition to the ideological danger, the unrest in Poland is a declaration of struggle against the Russian strategy. The 20 Soviet divisions in the GDR buffer zone can be used neither for attack nor defense if the supply lines through Poland are not firmly in Moscow's hands.

In addition, there are the psychological strains depressing the Warsaw Pact. Even now, the Polish as well as the Russian troops are exposed to a severe psychological test in view of the unusual situation. If a confrontation came about, the pact system could break apart. Two developments are possible: The Russians would invade alone--then they would isolate themselves from their allies--or the Soviets would get some "fraternal armies" to help. The result would be a "spiritual split" within the pact. The Czechs would probably appear to be eager supporters of the Red Army. They would revenge themselves for the Polish participation in the attack on their country in 1968. Moreover, they could pursue their old hatred of Poland. The GDR troops would be obedient as well. Hungarian troops, however, would not much like being misused, let alone Romanian divisions.

A forcible solution, therefore, would unleash forces which, though existing covertly in normal times, are not politically active: The historically caused elements of tension which helped determine the life of the peoples in the East over a period of centuries, these emotional forces would also exert influence on the fighting potential of the satellite armies in the event a clash with the West were to come. The Poles can be had for an attack on NATO only if they came to the conclusion that the Bundeswehr was threatening their homeland. Then their aversion to the Germans would be greater than their animosity for the Russians. Polish soldiers harbor hardly any hostile feelings against Americans, Frenchmen or Britishers. The Czechs, in contrast, consider the East German soldiers enemies (because they also invaded Prague) rather than the West German soldiers. The Czechs regard the other Western allies, above all France, as potential friends. No Hungarian nor any Romanian can be convincingly motivated to wage war against the Western world because by and large the armies of the Warsaw Pact consist of conscripts and they are receptive to but little ideological influence.

What remains is the combined command, the military doctrine of attack and standardization. The top echelon of the Warsaw Pact was reorganized in 1969. The Soviets also appointed non-Russian generals to headquarters posts. A Committee of the Defense Ministers was set up and a supranational Military Council emerged. But what was passed off as a reform was merely "command cosmetics." When the Czechs were attacked, the Russians neutralized the Supreme Command of the Warsaw Pact.

What would become of the standard military doctrine in case of hostilities? Apart from the Poles, no satellite army is considered to be particularly bellicose. Reportedly, the Russians have little confidence in the GDR's National People's Army. Western surveys have shown that even in the event of an initial success morale in the Polish Army would presumably be mediocre, in the GDR Army weak, and in the case of the Czechs, Hungarians and Romanians practically zero. In the event of setbacks, probably all non-Russian divisions would undergo a psychological low. The value of the 56 satellite divisions is unstable.

This judgment by American analysts may in part be contestable, but it is appropriate in many points. It remains an advantage for the Warsaw Pact, however, that all divisions have modern equipment from the Russians. The training of the high-ranking officers at Soviet academies likewise is a point in favor of the pact system. The "professionals" in all armies of the East value this privilege highly. Otherwise, it is only the pressure of the military machine of the giant and the Communist Party in Moscow which hold the military pact together.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE LAUDS JONES RETENTION

[Commentary signed Ein.: "To The Gulf?"]

[Text] Presdient Reagan has made an important decision. The new government will retain the old chief of staff. The service term of General Jones, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has been extended to 1982 by President Reagan.

Since the power change in the White House, rumors have been persistent that Reagan and Weinberger intend to exchange the military top echelon of the Pentagon. It was, above all, the rightwing of the Republicans which urged a change. The President did not yield to this pressure; he needs this brilliant military adviser. His expert knowledge cannot be doubted by anybody; his word wields weight. The Europeans should not overhear what Jones said the other day: He feels that the United States might be forced to relocate the U.S. divisions envisaged for NATO, including the units of the U.S. 7th Army, to the Gulf region if required. The other NATO states will have to do more than heretofore for their own defense.

SPD EXECUTIVE IS CONSIDERING BRANDT PROGRAM

[Excerpts] Bonn, 11 Feb (DPA)--The SPD leadership has underlined the party's determination to uphold its government responsibility and pledged itself emphatically to continuing the coalition with the Free Democrats and to adhere to agreements between the two governing parties. In a special session on the tensions of a crisis nature within the SPD, the party executive this evening in Bonn adopted the first two points of the five-point program submitted by Party Chairman Willy Brandt, which calls for solidarity on the part of the SPD in political action.

Regarding security policy, Brandt's 9-page draft, which he agreed on with leading SPD politicians from the Federal Government and laender, reaffirms that NATO's decision on missile arming in Europe will be adhered to but at the same time stresses the need for disarmament talks between East and West.

Regarding energy policy, Brandt's draft program refers expressly to the continued construction of the Brokdorf nuclear powerplant. The document apparently stresses the principle that the use of nuclear energy is indispensable but that the decisions regarding its development must be made in individual cases at the regional level. At the same time, however, the priority of saving energy and using coal before nuclear energy also was underlined.

Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who intervened several times in the debate of the 40-strong leading body of the SPD, and other leading politicians admitted prior to the beginning of the meeting that there are differences within the SPD but rejected the view that the SPD's ability to govern or the coalition's existence are threatened by the differences. The chancellor said that he is not expecting the tensions within the party to be cleared up very quickly. To some extent, very serious criticism is involved.

OFFICIAL EXPLAINS TRAINING OF FOREIGN SOLDIERS

[Text] Bonn, 11 Feb (DPA)--In the FRG, 219 foreign soldiers from 39 countries presently are receiving military or civil training. Among them are 31 marine cadets from Iran, as well as--this year for the first time--soldiers from Saudi Arabia and Syria. This information was given by Willfried Penner, parliamentary secretary to the Federal Ministry of Defense, who was replying to a question put by CDU Deputy Hans-Juergen Stutzer during the Bundestag question-hour on Wednesday.

Asked whether it did not represent double standards to refuse to export arms to certain countries because they were considered to be in areas of tension, while at the same time their soldiers were being trained in the FRG, Penner admitted that it is difficult to be consistent over this question. A "sensible" foreign policy must, however, also take account of what benefits the FRG. Apart from this, the Federal Government is concerned with giving help in military training above all to those countries in which, in the government's view, democratic conditions prevail.

GISCARD, AS-SADAT HOLD 2-HOUR TALK IN PARIS

[By Aly Shoubashy]

[Text] Paris, 11 Feb (AFP)--Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat discussed the Middle East and Chad at a two-hour meeting here with President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

An Elysee spokesman said the meeting was one of "great cordiality and frankness."

Mr as-Sadat, who yesterday addressed the European Parliament in Luxembourg, arrived in France today on a private visit. He was nevertheless greeted at Orly Airport by Mr Giscard d'Estaing personlly and a guard of honor.

During the talks at the Elysee Palace, Mr as-Sadat reiterated the main points of his Luxembourg speech. Mr Giscard d'Estaing in turn outlined the European Economic Community (EEC) initiative on the Middle East taken in Venice last June by the European Council--the EEC heads of government--and developed at last December's Luxembourg summit.

After discussing the general situation in Africa, Mr as-Sadat and Mr Giscard d'Estaing devoted "special attention" to Chad, the spokesman said. (Mr as-Sadat recently expressed regret that France had allowed Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi "to act against Chad.")

On Franco-Egyptian relations, Mr as-Sadat and Mr Giscard d'Estaing agreed that these were developing extremely satisfactorily and they expressed determination to keep them that way, the spokesman said.

At a press conference before leaving Luxembourg this morning, Mr as-Sadat made an emphatic plea for EEC members to promote a Middle East settlement. "I want to make it very clear that I welcome a European initiative," he said, "I even ask for it." Europe, he added, "must take its share of responsibility for peace in this area either now or when international guarantees are necessary for peace and the future of the region."

"The proper approach now for any initiative should be bringing Palestinians and Israel to a mutual and simultaneous recognition," he said.

In London, a Foreign Office spokesman said that Britain welcomed Mr as-Sadat's remarks, particularly on Israel and the Palestinians. The remarks were "entirely in accordance" with the EEC view on the Middle East, the spokesman said.

Tomorrow Mr as-Sadat will meet Baron Alain de Rothschild and other members of the French Jewish community.

Also at the Council of Ministers, President Giscard d'Estaing briefly summed up the latest French-German summit: France and the Federal Republic are determined to contribute to the stabilization of East-West relations and to the maintenance of peace.

FRANCE, IVORY COAST TO CONDUCT JOINT MANEUVERS

[Text] Paris, 11 Feb (AFP)--Maines and paratroops from France's foreign intervention force will take part in joint manoeuvers with the Ivorian Army in West Africa next month, a well-informed French source said here today.

The manoeuvres, to begin on March 7, will include landing exercises in the Ivory Coast with French Navy amphibious tank and troop landing craft, the source added.

It will be the first time that equipment from the Lorient base in Britanny, West France, has been used on manoeuvres outside French territory since April 1978, when units from the base returned from Lebanon, where they had been serving with United Nations peacekeeping forces.

The source said that an amphibious assault transporter, two tank and troop landing craft--the Ouragan (5,800 tonnes) and the Bidassoa (1,750 tonnes)--and a smaller 25-tonne tansporter would leave Lorient for Abidjan between February 12 and 17.

The source said that the French troops would come from the 11th Parachute Division and the 9th Marine Infantry Division. He added that army transport and combat helicopters would also take part in the exercise but gave no details of the numbers of men involved nor of the type of equipment they would take with them.

CORSICA HIT BY 'UNPRECEDENTED' WAVE OF EXPLOSIONS

[Text] Bastia, 12 Feb (AFP)--The French Mediterranean island of Corsica was rocked by an unprecedented wave of explosions early today, though with 37 bombs reported by mid-morning nobody had been injured.

The blasts had not been claimed but were believed to be the work of the Corsican National Liberation Front as they went off only hours after the State Security Court in Paris passed jail sentences on a group of Corsican extremists.

The explosions were spread across the island and caused extensive damage. A major target was the court house in the southwest coast town of Ajaccio. Other bombs went off outside shops, banks and the home of Corsica's chief treasurer.

PCI NAMES DELEGATION TO SOVIET PARTY CONGRESS

[Text] Rome, 11 Feb (ANSA)--The Italian Communist Party (PCI) today officially announced that its Political Secretary Enrico Berlinguer would not be going to Moscow for the Soviet party congress, which begins February 23.

Instead, the PCI delegation would be composed of Gian Carlo Pajetta, head of the party's International Relations Committee, Paolo Bufalini, Marco Stefanini, secretary of the Marche Regional Committee, and Francesco Marazzi who is a member of the Central Committee.

The PCI press office did not give any reason for the fact that Berlinguer would not be attending the Soviet party's 26th Congress. This will be the first time that a PCI secretary has missed such an occasion.

L'UNITA DEPLORES PRAVDA EUROCOMMUNISM CRITICISM

LD111635 [Editorial report] Rome L'UNITA in Italian on 5 February carries on page 17 a Giulietto Chiesa Moscow dispatch headlined "Very Alarming Statements in Soviet Press" on coverage in PRAVDA of 4 February of events in Poland and the summary carried by PRAVDA on 3 February of an article critical of Eurocommunism published by the PCP monthly MILITANTE. Under Chiesa's report, L'UNITA publishes the following unattributed commentary headlined "Opportunism? If Anything, the Contrary!"

It seems incomprehensible why the reactionary forces--as the PCP monthly, cited by PRAVDA, states--would welcome the fact that the Italian Communists are unreservedly hoping for the success of the Polish Communists' efforts to begin a thorough and necessary regeneration in their country. It is on this very regeneration that the confirmation of the Polish Communist Party's [as published] leading role depends. We therefore reject the "opportunist" label put on our idea that only on the basis of real mass consensus and of the workers' real involvement can a communist party perfrom its vanguard tasks. Do we have to point out that a party's autonomy and its defense of its own country's independence do not conflict with internationalism but lend substance to it?

"But we are worried about the polemic among communist parties adopting a harshness and tones that will make a realistic analysis difficult and a profitable comparision of ideas impossible, at a dangerous time which demands reflection and sense of responsibility.

"As for interferences, such an interpretation can be placed on simplifications and apodictic condemnations, but definitely not on our desire for understanding or on our reflections on experiences whose relevance and validity far transcend the borders of a single country.

"The Portuguese comrades--and others too--know that our critical approach to and frankness about international issues have always been dictated by a view of shared interests, and definitely not by circumspection due to a preoccupation with domestic politics, still less by any yielding to foreign pressures."

CONFERENCE VIEWS PROBLEMS OF PCI-PSI RELATIONS

["F.I." report: "Conference Organized by Socialist Leftwing: What Prospects for Communist-Socialist Unity?"]

[Excerpts] Rome--On what bases can a dialogue aimed at future Socialist-Communist unity be restarted? To try to answer this question, so difficult because of the deep political disagreements that now separate the two parties, was the aim of the conference held in Rome yesterday under the auspices of "Socialism Today," the publishing series headed by Claudio Signorile [PSI Directorate member].

The theme was "1921-1981, Socialists and Communists: an Assessment" and reports were delivered by L. Salvadori and Raolo Spriano [director of PCI's Gramsci Institute]. They proceeded from events a long time ago, but in 5 hours of debate all the matters of contention between the PCI and PSI were reviewed, reaching a kind of preliminary list of the points on which an often incandescent polemical blaze has recently burned.

Signorile himself was keen to specify the aims of the conference when he said that within "Italian democracy there is an objective need for leftwing convergence in the field of reform and of a government strategy." There is a danger of everyone withdrawing to his own "winter quarters" and until "the frost disappears" of allowing "the political divarication and the substantial nihilism of the left to crystallize." The conference therefore reflects the need to "reverse the trend within the left, substituting dialogue for polemical aggression and the honest assertion of political differences and differences of role for rivalry and counterposition, thus making each party's just desire for autonomy a factor of growth and regeneration, not rupture, for the left."

But what obstacles must be overcome along this path? Many answers to this question, while not concealing the acute and profound nature of the disagreements, have pointed to the areas and methods for a joint commitment. But they have also painted a crude picture of the present state of relations between the PSI and PCI. Salvadori pointed out that what is at stake is the very possibility of the two parties continuing to be "two components of a united alignment, which has hitherto been called the left." In 1921, Socialists and Communists were "fraternal enemies" and suffered a traumatic split, but nevertheless "retained a shared aim and invoked the same class, the proletariat struggling against capitalist exploitation, and not by chance both invoked Marxism." Today, however, there is a crisis in the "very idea of socialism," as maintained until the mid-fifties; and the working class' role as a historical agent for change is being questioned. It is therefore out of the question to achieve unity centered on a form of socialism viewed in terms of state ownership of the means of production or on the basis of "a utopian view of self-management." It is a matter of managing" a democracy of industrial relations that will carry out a redistribution of income by means of democratic planning." But, looking back at both parties' lines of conduct over the past 15 years, Salvadori eventually identified as the major obstacle to unity the "long-suffering pro-Sovietism" which supposedly still ails the PCI.

There is thus a danger of the PSI gaining pyrrhic victories, the PCI continuing to develop its autonomy from the USSR "dragged along by events" and of both parties--while standing firm on their own justifications as parties--leaving themselves exposed to a joint defeat.

There has been a reemergence, albeit without exacerbation, of the tendency to regard the history of the workers movement as some kind of test bench for the PCI's present political "credibility," to the extent that by concentrating on the "unresolved problem" of the PCI, as Spriano put it, "this party is turned into Italian history's major scapegoat." In other words, there is a tendency to draw abstraction from the specific role played by every political force in the country's past and present affairs.

Analyzing certain essential phases of PCI-PSI relations, Spriano asserted that the "most glaring contradiction" is now as follows: Many objective causes of conflict (primarily over the relationship between democracy and socialism) which at other times in history prevented a unitary reassembly of the workers movement have disappeared, but at the same time we are witnessing an exacerbation of political disagreement.

Spriano expressed the opinion that what lies behind this divarication, which could jeopardize the country's democratic development, no less, is basically the assessment of the PSI, which considers the Italian case an "anomaly," an element of backwardness that must be brought back "to the framework of European social democracy pure and simple."

But what is the PSI's policy today? This point, although decisive in assessing the opportunities for a convergence among the leftwing forces in view of the country's very grave crisis, was only touched on with very general references. Luciano Barca raised the issue explicitly. "The quest for unity is essential in order to give the country the basis of a democratic alternative to the DC's power system, but this quest requires clarity." The PSI's conduct "raises questions concerning the prospects that it is pursuing."

In the past, errors have undoubtedly been committed by both the Communists and the Socialists. But are these the errors being discussed? Are we divided by a different idea of socialism? Barca replied that the polemic is nurtured by the impression that part of the PSI "seems actually to be abandoning the quest for a new idea of socialism." At the time of the center-left, the split between the parties did not prevent a fruitful debate, which among other things encouraged the Communists to "emerge from a certain degree of Manicheanism." But it now almost seems as if "the processes of revision within the PCI are irritating to the PSI and thus the Communists are constantly being set new goals," in the belief that this is the only way to increase its [the PSI's] political scope. Only a serious debate on the major domestic and international issues, however, can restart a unitary process on the left, on solid bases.

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE EDITORIAL ON NEUTRON BOMB

[Editorial: "Neutron Bomb"]

[Text] With a new administration in Washington it was unavoidable that the question of the timeliness of strengthening Western Europe's defenses with neutron bombs would be raised again. And because Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger is a friendly man he answered all the questions put to him at his first press conference, regardless of how hypothetical they were. He spoke of the stationing of U.S. troops in Israel, although this is not a current possibility, and he said that the production of neutron weapons is something which must be considered and if necessary discussed with U.S. allies.

There was every justification to raise the question with him since when the plan to strengthen NATO defenses with neutron bombs against armed Soviet attacks was around 3-4 years ago, clumsy decisions were made. The U.S. offer was considered in Europe in a year of public debate and against the background of a violent Soviet propaganda campaign. But when the governments affected by the offer later agreed to accept it President Carter suddenly annulled it. He had his reasons. He did not want to irritate the Russians during the SALT negotiations. But the clumsy way in which he treated his allies caused serious damage to cooperation and was the beginning of the European mistrust which persisted for the duration of his administration.

Because production was abandoned last time for purely political reasons, there could be no objections if the new U.S. administration took the production of neutron weapons into account when considering how the U.S. military machine can best be strengthened.

Since then, France has manufactured its own neutron bomb, which will go into production next year. From the military viewpoint the neutron bomb is a significant step in arms technology. It is a minihydrogen bomb which, like a grenade with great precision and efficiency, could be used against the massive tank advances which are the Warsaw Pact's greatest threat against Western Europe. It could make a whole tank column unfit for combat instantaneously and, unlike other nuclear weapons, it does not leave any persistent radiation behind to make the area uninhabitable, inaccessible and deadly for a long time afterwards. It is a fearful weapon, like all nuclear arms, but it is these weapons which through their fearfulness have kept peace in Europe.

But it was not wise of the U.S. defense secretary to think aloud about a sensitive political problem even before his own government has had a chance to think it through and discuss it with its allies. There were great political misgivings in Europe in the past because a radioactively cleaner nuclear weapon could help to lower the threshold between conventional and nuclear warfare, and other doubts have been added to them. It will be necessary for the new U.S. administration to discuss the reinforcement of the Western defense strategy with the alliance, before individual arms can be the subject of debate.

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE APPRAISES BRUNDTLAND ELECTION

[Editorial: "Gro Harlem Brundtland"]

[Text] Newly appointed Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland was carried into her post on a wave of opinion that has washed away many old norms. It ought not to be a sensation any longer than a woman has become Norway's prime minister. But it is worth noting that through its choice the Labor Party has broken with a number of hitherto accepted notions of how people qualify themselves for society's most prominent position through their work in the party.

The Norwegian Labor Party has long had closer ties with the Norwegian labor movement than its Danish sister party has been able to maintain. The party's previous prime ministers have all trodden the narrow path which combines trade union work with political activities. Gro Harlem Brundtland has not. Where her predecessors received their education in the movement's hard school, she has an academic education and a career as a doctor behind her. Where her predecessors slowly rose to the top, she suddenly arrived in a ministerial post as an unknown quantity, and only then began to concern herself with internal party work. Where her predecessors appeared to have grown out of the party, Gro Harlem Brundtland has been chosen as a contrast to what the party apparatus itself could produce.

Thus the departure from normal practice which lies behind the choice made is a sign of the crisis in which the Labor Party finds itself. Gro Harlem Brundtland has been chosen to give new life to a movement which had almost played out its role. The electoral barometer has long been pointing to the right, and it is a surprise therefore that the Labor Party has gambled on a leader who in the past has been left on its own center. At the heart of this otherwise refreshing election the question must nevertheless be asked whether the "grassroots," who have demanded Gro Harlem Brundtland's election, are also representative of the attitudes of the Norwegian electorate.

FINLAND

EXAMINATION OF OIL IMPORT STRUCTURE, SUPPLY

LD112045 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 11 Feb 81

[Juhani Ikonen commentary]

[Summary] Juhani Ikonen examines Finland's oil supply situation of the basis of the price agreement between the Neste oil company and the Soviet supplier signed yesterday:

While the dollar at the end of 1980 was worth about 3.8 Finnish markkas [Fmk] it is now worth well over Fmk4. This benefits all oil-exporting countries. Oil revenue will go up in accordance with the OPEC price increase of December and its real value will be increased by as much as the dollar has increased in relation to other currencies. Before yesterday's increase the Soviet supplier charged $34, worth Fmk3.8, per barrel: that is 159 liters. Now the price of Soviet oil is $38.5, with the dollar worth over Fmk4. In terms of dollars the price has increased by some 13 percent. In terms of Finnish markkas the price of Soviet oil has risen by 16.5 percent. This year Neste should be able to collect perhaps Fmk1.7 billion more than last year for its oil products so as to cover the additional bill for the crude oil. This means that the retail price needs to be raised by about 20 penni per liter and kilo.

With the price per barrel at $38.5 the Soviet oil is nearly the highest price for crude oil that Neste has paid. The Soviet price does include a correction for prices lagging behind. However, North Sea oil is probably the dearest; it is estimated to cost about $39 but the quality is different and its share of overall imports is well under 1 million tons per year, whereas imports from the USSR amount to 7 million tons.

Despite the war, Neste hopes to obtain oil from Iran and Iraq this year. Iranian oil now probably costs $37 per barrel and Iraqi oil $36. Prices are below Soviet prices but when freight charges are added, perhaps $1.5 per barrel, it comes to the same thing. Saudi Arabian oil costs only $32 plus freight. Neste has an agreement with the Saudi national oil company on deliveries of 2.2 million tons this year. It is obvious because of the cheap price Neste will do everything to increase the share of Saudi oil by other means. Last year Neste obtained nearly 3 million tons of Saudi oil. At present Neste's commercial directors are in London where they can have talks not only on North Sea oil deliveries but also on Iraqi and Iranian oil.

BRUNDTLAND REJECTS UNILATERAL NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report: "Norwegian Rejection of Unilateral Nuclear-Free Zone"]

[Text] Oslo--"There can be no doubt that it will not be my policy to try to bring about a unilateral declaration on the part of the Nordic countries of a nuclear-free zone," new Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland stated on Norwegian radio on Saturday [7 February].

Brundtland was replying to a question from Conservative Party leader Kare Willoch as to whether she could support a nuclear-free zone if it did not also include parts of the Soviet Union. The new prime minister rejected such a notion.

It is particularly the Soviet Kola Peninsula and the Baltic Sea which Norway has demanded should be included in plans for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries as has been proposed by Finland.

DEFENSE SECRETARY STRESSES NEED FOR NUCLEAR ARMS

[Text] War could well result if Britain dropped her nuclear guard, said Mr Nott, defence secretary, last night in his first public speech since moving to the post.

Nuclear weapons could not be disinvented, he told the Electrical Contractors' Association annual dinner in London.

"I am conscious in my new job of a continuing, one could say a growing fear of war, and in particular nuclear war.

"The task before us is to devise a system for living in peace and freedom while ensuring that nuclear weapons are never used to destroy or to blackmail us into submission."

Fifty million people had been killed in the 1939-45 war, he said, with weapons much less destructive than the conventional weapons of today.

He and his collegaues were not warmongers making preparations in secret but men and women of peace, faced by the threat of nuclear and conventional blackmail.

"The abhorrence of war is no substitute for clear and realistic plans to prevent it.

"If we drop our guard we may be forced again to learn lessons in the appalling school of practical experience. Strong defences are vital to our national survival and are essential to this government's programme."

Earlier Mr Nott said that about 5,000 million pounds would be spent next year on defence equipment, sustaining hundreds of thousands of jobs, many in high technology areas where we have a world lead.

"The defense business, with its substantial exports of over 1,000 million pounds, represents a significant part of our national economy."

As well as 334,000 servicemen about 230,000 or so British based civilians were also employed in vital defence work, he said.

FIFTH SESSION OF INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS HELD 11 FEB

[Text] The second meeting of the fifth session of the intercommunal talks took place this evening at the Ledra Palace Hotel, and the discussion continued on the initial practical measures to be taken by both sides for the promotion of good will, mutual trust and return to normal conditions.

In a statement before today's meeting, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Gobbi, said that the talks are developing normally and that slight progress has been achieved in almost all items on the agenda. However, he added that great persistence and patience are needed. Replying to a pertinent question, Gobbi expressed the opinion that at this stage of the talks there will be no detailed proposals on the issue of initial practical measures but also expressed the optimism that there will be detailed proposals in the near future. I think, he stressed, that both parties are prepared to achieve progress, something that has been manifested in the talks to date. The talks, he added, are developing in a sound and civilized way. The quality of the talks is an indispensable prerequisite for the achievement of progress in the future.

Replying to another question, Gobbi said that an agreement exists between the two sides on the issue of payments for social insurance and on other relevant issues and that what remains to be done is to implement these agreements. There are, he mentioned, certain technical problems that must be overcome, and he stressed that the United Nations is not showing any negligence on the problem of implementing what has been agreed upon.

Finally, Gobbi mentioned that soon the talks will recess for a short time, a week or 10 days at the most.

Then, the Greek Cypriot side's representative, Mr Ioannidhis, stated that on the issue of initial practical measures demands have been placed on the table of negotiations by both sides and that they are being discussed. Common ground exists on some demands, he said, and the Greek Cypriot side will be very happy to see these demands implemented as soon as possible. Replying to questions, Ioannidhis mentioned that the most serious demand of the Turkish Cypriot side on the issue of initial practical measures is the lifting of the so-called economic embargo.

Ioannidhis also mentioned that the Greek Cypriot side has raised the issue of the missing persons, on which an agreement exists.

Finally, the Turkish Cypriot side's representative, Mr Onan, stated that on the issue of initial practical measures, his side attaches priority to the lifting of the so-called economic embargo. Onan further said that this issue was put forth during the Kiprianou-Denktas meeting which was chaired by the UN secretary general, and that it had been agreed upon that it be included in the agenda of the intercommunal talks.

Replying to a question connected with the withdrawal of Turkish troops from the island, Onan said that the issue was not included in the agenda of the talks. This is a much broader issue, he said, and must be examined by Greece, Turkey and all the others in a subsequent stage.

Next Meetings Scheduled

[Text] This evening a new meeting took place within the framework of the intercommunal talks.

A statement by the United Nations on the meeting mentions that the sides continued good and full discussion of various aspects of the issue of the initial practical measures.

The next meeting will be held next Wednesday on the issue of the constitutional aspect. It was agreed that no meeting will be held on Wednesday, 25 February, and that the following meeting be held on 4 March.

In a statement at Larnaca airport prior to his departure, President Kiprianou stressed that he was attaching particular importance to these talks because of the role West Germany could play. Kiprianou said these talks would also cover the second phase of Cyprus' association with the EEC. He said: We will ask for West Germany's help in the Cypriot Government's efforts to secure better terms for Cypriot exports to the EEC in view of the negotiations that will open within the framework of the second phase.

President Kiprianou further said that he would also discuss bilateral issues with Schmidt with the aim of further strengthening of relations between both countries. In conclusion, the president expressed the conviction that his visit to West Germany would be very useful in every respect.

I KATHIMERINI ON ISSUES INVOLVED IN ROGERS' VISIT

[Editorial: "Greece Will Not Consent"]

[Text] At a time when the question of the Greek-U.S. defense agreement (which is centered on the status of foreign bases in our country) still awaits a settlement and when a divergence of views from both sides over fundamental points has delayed the relevant talks, General Rogers, the supreme commander of NATO Forces in Europe, arrived in Athens yesterday on a 3-day visit.

The basic and real reason for the general's visit--as it was also reported yesterday--is to encourage solutions to unresolved issues related to the area and extent of operational responsibility in the Aegean.

The fact that the personal presence of the supreme commander was considered necessary indicates the form and extent of the differences--if not of the deadlock--between Greece and the appropriate central NATO organizations over the issue.

Talks have been in progress in Athens since last Thursday at the National Defense General Staff between Greek officers and their counterparts from NATO's Naples headquarters (mostly Americans.) Discussions, however, remain without result due to the great and unbridgeable divergence of views between the two sides, at least up to the present.

The Greek side insists--understandably--on preservation of operational control over the Aegean within the limits and under the known conditions which were in force prior to August 1974. It cannot accept the proposals of the other side about the definition of new limits for the operational control of Aegean airspace or about movable limits and so forth.

The Greek position is based on previous decisions of NATO's Military Committee--in truth, why the reneging?--and upon the Haig-Davos agreement which was taken as the basis for Greece's reintegration into the military wing of the Atlantic alliance.

It is, however, also based upon something else: this is the fact that the position and expansionist aspirations and, generally, the impositions of Turkey at the expense of Greek territory (Hellenic as well as Cypriot) remain unchanged.

Consequently, the order of priority of the dangers and other necessities which Hellenism--all of Hellenism--is faced with, also remains unchanged and immutable. It is this very order of priorities which defines the position of Greece on the subject in hand. The insistence of the other side on the solutions it proposes is dictated by a desire to give in to the illegal views of Turkey and is not inspired by the true and accepted interests of the alliance which can in no way be served by such [proposed] solutions.

The Greek Government will not consent to anything which could be construed as a probable or even a "forceful" imposition over the legal and acquired rights, the security and sovereignty of Greece over its national territory--or even upon the existence of Hellenism as a whole.

RIZOSPASTIS RAPS GOVERNMENT ON MISSILES ISSUE

[Text] The government avoids committing itself to oppose a possible U.S. aim to install Pershing-2 and cruise missiles in Greece.

Replying to a relevant interpellation by the KKE parliamentary group, deputy Foreign Minister Th. Rendis and deputy National Defense Minister G. Rodhiou cited the NATO resolutions issued in December 1979, and noted that "the issue of the installation of these missiles in Greece does not exist." Rendis also added that "our country's return to the NATO military wing will not change this decision."

However, both government representatives avoided taking a stand on reports that the Atlantic alliance is considering broadening the circle of countries in which to install "Pershing-2" and "cruise" missiles. According to the same reports, Greece is included in this circle of countries.

ARMY CONCLUDES WINTER EXERCISE IN ERZURUM

General Ersin made a general assessment of the exercise. Pointing out that the exercise was generally successful, Ersin said that it was observed that the units which participated in the exercise are ready for battle even under the harsh winter conditions in the area. Noting that the Turkish units are also capable of success against enemy units which are much better equipped, Ersin explained that Turkish troops have so far been successful under very difficult conditions.

VOTCP CRITICIZES U.S. POLICIES, NEUTRON BOMB

[Station Commentary: "Dangerous Steps"]

[Text] Dear listeners: The Middle East constitutes one of the main areas of tension in the world. The United States is grossly interfering in the internal affairs of the people in this region. It is reinforcing this area militarily in a bid to strengthen its strategic military positions and seize the rich oil fields. It is establishing new military bases for aggression. The United States currently has 2,500 military bases in 114 countries. Every one of these bases constitutes a grave threat to world peace and security and to peoples' liberation wars.

The new U.S. administration wishes to use our country as a bridgehead in realizing its hegemonistic and expansionist goals in our region. There are numerous indications of this Washington policy. The Reagan administration placed the mobile forces, which are intended for a military attack against the Persian Gulf and which number 110,000, under the command of U.S. General Rogers--the commander in chief of NATO's armed forces. The world press notes that the mobile forces will be deployed on Turkish soil in particular.

As stressed in our news bulletin, a section of the mobile forces is participating in the provocative NATO maneuvers in Erzurum. These Pentagon schemes are not new to our listeners. As will be recalled, Pentagon generals have clearly stated that they view Turkey as an ideal country in their Middle East policy and have informed the Turkish Government that they will use the NATO and U.S. bases on our soil extensively for the mobile forces. We discussed these issues in detail in our previous commentaries.

The Reagan administration is now bringing NATO into the picutre in order not to remain alone in its adventurist plans for our region. This is aimed, on the one hand, at extending NATO's sphere of influence into the Middle East and, on the other hand, at deploying U.S. mobile forces in Turkey under the (?guise) of NATO by applying [word indistinct] pressure and thus implementing the adventurist plans of the United States in the Middle East.

The letter sent by 69 U.S. senators to the Turkish Foreign Ministry is closely related to these U.S. goals. As will be recalled, in the letter--which constitutes a blunt interference in our internal affairs--the U.S. senators angrily opposed the fact that Turkey reduced its relations with Israel to the lowest level and asked the Ulusu government to change its attitude. This is reminiscent of the letter sent to Turkey in 1964 by the Vietnam murderer Johnson. The Washington administrators attempted to overtly interfere in our internal affairs in that period and tried to realize their dangerous plans for our country by disregarding our national independence and sovereignty.

Turkey's dependence on imperialism and NATO is one of the primary factors that allow the Washington administration to ridicule our national pride in this manner, to use such strong language by daring to tell us to change our foreign policy and to apply pressure on us. The bilateral slavery agreement, which was ratified and implemented, plays an important role in the realization of Washington's schemes for our country.

Through this agreement, which is fundamentally against our people's national interests, 12 U.S. bases on our soil are being placed under the order of the Pentagon. Washington could deploy neutron bombs in our country on the basis of this agreement.

Despite the massive protests by world public opinion, the Reagan administration announced that the neutron bomb will be produced and deployed in Western Europe. A widespread campaign is being waged against the deployment in Western Europe of nuclear weapons sufficiently powerful to turn the world into ashes instantly. Parliamentarians, clergymen, social democrats, communists, socialists, even bourgeois governments and all persons in favor of peace and detente are voicing their protests against the dangerous plans of the Reagan administration.

The Turkish Government is remaining silent on this issue--an issue which is vitally important for our country. This silence is increasing the concern among forces in favor of peace and national independence. The daily DUNYA says that we should not be dragged into the adventurist plans of the United States and that this would be incompatible with our national interests, drag our country to the verge of national destruction and cause suspicions among our neighbors with whom we want to have normal relations. CUMHURIYET and MILLIYET newspapers criticize the Reagan administration's policy of escalating the tension, inciting the arms race and slandering the Soviet Union, and point out the increasing U.S. pressures on our country. The newspapers note that the U.S. plans to produce the neutron bomb and deploy it in Western Europe threaten our country as well.

All national democratic and anti-imperialist forces: Unite in order to thwart U.S. pressures on our country, to disallow the United States to grossly interfere in our internal affairs and to prevent our country from being used as a tool for imperialist goals in the Middle East.

SCHMIDT, DJURANOVIC ASSESS SFRY-FRG SUMMIT TALKS

[Excerpt] Bonn, 12 Feb (DPA)--The Federal Republic and Yugoslavia will deepen their economic cooperation. Both governments want to accelerate their efforts for the conclusion of agreements on double taxation and the protection of capital investments. This was emphasized today to journalists by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt as one of the results of his talks with Yugoslav Premier Djuranovic.

Both heads of government underlined also their countries' strong interest in an agreement by the Madrid CSCE followup conference on a mandate for a European disarmament conference.

Djuranovic today ended the Bonn part of his 4-day official visit to the Federal Republic with a call on Federal President Karl Carstens. He is going on to Duesseldorf and is later expected in Stuttgart. Most of the 360,000 Yugoslav guest workers are employed in North Rhine--Westphalia and Baden-Wuerttemberg.

Schmidt and Djuranovic stressed that these first official German-Yugoslav summit talks in nearly 4 years resulted in a high degree of agreement in the assessment of the world's political and economic development. Against the background of the political situation in Poland, the two politicians underlined the necessity of constant efforts to safeguard peace and security in Europe.

Djuranovic, who praised the Federal Republic for its regard for the principles of equal rights and the sovereignty of all states as well as for noninterference, drew attention to the obligation entered into by all European countries to remain true to the "spirit of Helsinki." This calls for constant political contacts and talks, "primarily if there are unfavorable developments, so that such situations do not deteriorate further." Schmidt emphasized Bonn's great interest in the independence and unity of a nonaligned Yugoslavia, which is an important pillar of stability in Europe.

According to Djuranovic and Schmidt, there are still opportunities for the expansion of of bilateral relations, which are assessed very highly, primarily in the economic sphere. The planned agreements on double taxation and the protection of investments could, in the chancellor's view, contribute toward the further reduction of the Yugoslav deficit in its trade with the Federal Republic, which in the period January through November 1980 amounted to DM2.5 billion. The cooperation agreement between the EC and Yugoslavia could also promote Belgrade's export opportunities, even if this could still take some time.

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON SPD PROBLEMS

DW121422 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1800 GMT 1 Feb 81

[Reporter Hans-Joachim Reiche interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, is there an SPD crisis or are there just some excited officials?

[Answer] I do not want to offend anybody and I do not want to make headlines or affix labels with regard to fellow party members. I have maintained great restraint in past weeks in this almost public debate in my own party. But at some point, the time will come when one must give up restraint.

[Question] Tonight?

[Answer] No, only with regard to persons, dear Mr Reiche, I would not like to make any statements.

[Question] I understand that. But will the time come tonight when the federal chancellor, the deputy chairman, will speak up?

[Answer] The federal chancellor the week before last in the Bundestag at the end of the budget debate loudly and clearly voiced his opinion on all problems presently being disputed. He does not intend to deviate from any of these points. He does not intend to deviate from the government statement that was given after the convocation of the current Bundestag.

[Question] Regarding the matter itself, Mr Federal Chancellor, is this a crisis or just excitement?

[Answer] Well, at any rate much excitement, at least that.

[Question] A bit of a crisis?

[Answer] A bit more, at least with regard to individual persons.

[Question] And how do you think you will leave this building tonight? Will clarification have been achieved?

[Answer] Well, that will not take place quite that fast. Some serious criticism is involved in part. There have been some faux pas. They have not affected me at all although I find them unpleasant, but I will not comment on that at all. Regarding the matter itself, there will certainly be different opinions. But, dear Mr Reiche, the Federal Government has its opinion and the leeway the Federal Government has is outlined by the basis law.

[Question] What does the party say to that?

[Answer] It is outlined by the government statement. The party accepts the basic law. It accepts the government statement. For individual persons in the party to be of a different opinion on individual points than the Federal Government is something I consider normal. One must live with it. But at any rate, the Federal Government does not depend on that.

[Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, this matter is of relevance, of significance for the coalition. Do you see a danger?

[Answer] I see no danger at all for the coalition. On the contrary, quarrels in one party or the other have so far not touched off quarrels between both partners, let alone in the Federal Government.

GENSCHER NOTES NEED FOR INCREASED DEFENSE EFFORTS

DEFENSE COMMITTEE MEMBER DISCUSSES NEUTRON WEAPON

DW131054 Saarbruecken Saarlaendischer Rundfunk Network in German 0715 GMT 12 Feb 81

[Correspondent Bucholz interview with Werner Marx, CDU Bundestag deputy and first deputy chairman of the Bundestag Defense Committee, in Bonn--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] Is what Caspar Weinberger said [about the neutron weapon] his private opinion or does this represent official U.S. policy?

[Answer] I assume that it is intended to prepare the way for official policies.

[Question] Do you think it is appropriate for the Americans to return to this topic?

[Answer] It is necessary, considering that the entire strategic balance has come unhinged and that U.S. policy proposes to restore it to the advantage of the West and its freedom. It is also necessary to bring the weapons to Europe which are suited for [balancing] the enormous superiority of the Soviets--in this particular case, the superiority of the armor. After all, the neutron weapon is a defense weapon against massed armor. Therefore, it is appropriate not only to think along these lines, but also to make decisions following European-U.S. consultations.

[Question] Do you think it would have been better had they consulted the allies before broaching the subject in public?

[Answer] I do not intend to criticize the incumbent U.S. administration, but I do think that in addition to the method of interviews, there is the method of diplomatic preparation and it might proceed a bit better in undisturbed calm. I repeat, the Soviet superiority is a vital threat. It is actually comforting for the Europeans to say that their own security is being taken much more seriously by the Americans again than has been the case lately.

[Question] If the Americans eventually came to the conclusion that the neutron weapon should be stationed in Europe--also in the Federal Republic--should we in the Federal Republic say yes, we agree, or should we turn it down? What do you think?

[Answer] I do not believe the Americans will make a unilateral decision. That is absolutely clear. The alliance demands that this sort of thing has to be discussed with one another and joint decisions made. The federal chancellor and the foreign minister said 2 and 1/2 years ago that they were in favor of such stationing. They were right. We, the opposition, supported them. I can imagine that such arms will be stationed only if both sides agree. I have no doubts with regard to a final agreement.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ON SPD 5-POINT PROGRAM

[Commentary signed FK: "The All-Round Program"]

[Text] The 5-point program presented by Willy Brandt and adopted by the SPD Federal Executive Board looks like a crisis protocol. With the exception of arms exports, not one of the disputed issues was clarified or decided. The text repeats the old formulaic compromises, refers to them repeatedly and does not comment on earlier party congress decisions which have caused the quarrel, and is full of senseless slogans such as "challenge" (1981, for example, is special for the Social Democrats). [It is] a document of helplessness, with regard to what there is to read about nuclear energy, for example, and the executive board reference to "the Hamburg and Berlin party congresses and the possibilities for solutions contained therein." What is meant are the ominous options in every direction. There is really no need for a 5-point program to come to such realizations.

Some people may maintain that people's parties with their divergent factions find it hard to help themselves in tough tests in any other way than by publishing such platitudes, trying artfully to hold on to the smallest common denominator. That may be true to a certain degree, but it is equally correct that the members of a party in a deadlocked situation hope for a guiding word, spoken with authority, which they could then make the guideline of their own action, with due respect and the necessary solidarity, even if they do so reluctantly. It is no coincidence, however, that this word was not spoken: The SPD leadership itself is in absolute discord with regard to core problems.

Yet, it would be erroneous to assume that fear of a party split brought forth this general statement. Determined support of the government position on security and on energy policy would have been at the expense of the left, which, however, has frequently demonstrated its toughness in absorbing blows and its determination to have the party continue its missionary activities. This has always paid off and has strengthened the left's reputation as a group able to prevail. It is unlikely that the chairman did not know about this political mechanism. So, the explanation remains that he has nothing against the strengthening of positions which are far from those of the government.

GOVERNMENT TO SUPPLY EGYPT WITH NUCLEAR STATIONS

[Text] Paris, 12 Feb (AFP)--France will supply Egypt with to nuclear power stations, together with fuel and technical staff, under an agreement signed here today.

The cooperation protocol, coinciding with the private visit to France of Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat, was signed by Foreign Ministers Jean Francois-Poncent and Kamal Hasan 'Ali.

Egyptian sources meanwhile said that Egypt will shortly sign an agreement with the United States for another three nuclear stations. This would follow Egypt's ratification, expected next week, of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr 'Ali said Egypt hoped to have eight nuclear power plants, each with a capacity of 1,000 megawatts, in operation by the year 2000.

Meanwhile As-Sadat, who customarily meets Jewish representatives when he visits foreign countries, this morning met a French Jewish delegation led by the grand rabbi of France, Rene Samuel Sirat, and Baron Alain de Rothschild.

This afternoon As-Sadat, met a delegation of French Moslems led by the rector of the Moslem Institute of the Mosque of Paris, Si Hamza Boubakeur.

IRAN'S AZIZI RULES OUT MEETING WITH OFFICIALS

[Text] Paris, 12 Feb (AFP)--Ahmad Azizi, an assistant to Iranian Prime Minister Mohammad 'Ali Raja'i, said here today that he would not meet with French officials during his visit because of France's "hostile attitude" toward Iran.

Mr Azizi told a press conference that France had shown its hostility by delivering Mirage fighter planes to Iraq and supporting officials of the ousted regime of the late shah.

Citing the detention here Sunday for several hours of about 15 supporters of Iranian religious leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeyni, Mr Azizi accused French authorities of "mistreating Moslem students."

He also said that the French Foreign Ministry had sought to prevent him from going yesterday to Neauphle-le-Chateau, were Ayatollah Khomeyni resided during his years of exile.

Mr Azizi said that he was visiting France in order to meet with non-governmental French and foreign personalities, whose identities he refused to reveal. He expressed thanks for the hospitality extended to Ayatollah Khomeyni during his exile, adding that "the Iranian people know how to distinguish between the French people and the government."

LIBYAN HELICOPTER PILOTS TRAINING AT AIRFIELD

[Jean-Pierre Chanal report: "Libyan Helicopter Pilots Training in France"]

[Excerpts] Libyan helicopter pilots are training regularly at a French Air Force airfield (Salon-de-Provence has been rumored as the site). These men are coming here not merely for training but also to take delivery of the helicopters, manufactured by the National Aerospace Industry Company, which France is selling to Libya.

This is surprising information since following the raid on the French Embassy in Tripoli some 15 months ago, French-Libyan relations were considered to be decidely cool, icy, even, following last month's intervention in Chad by Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's men and the shelving of the ELF-Aquitaine oil prospecting projects.

None of this, however, seems to have affected France's delivery of helicopters to the Libyan Armed Forces. Every 2-3 weeks, in fact, a group of 3-6 pilots arrives in Marseilles and checks into one of the city's most luxurious hotels at the mouth of the old harbor.

One thing is certain: The groups of soldiers arriving in Marseilles come here primarily to familiarize themselves with new equipment and second, to take delivery of it. Delivery is subsequently completed by cargo ships to Libya.

MARCHAIS VIEWS ELECTION, FOREIGN POLICY ISSUES

[Excerpts] [PCF Secretary General] Georges Marchais was the guest of French television channel one's "Great Debate" program on Tuesday evening [3 February] when he was questioned by Jean-Marie Cavada, Patrice Duhamel and newscasters Yves Mourousi, Jean Lefevre and Jean-Claude Bourret.

The Communist candidate was questioned by Jean-Marie Cavada on the Socialists' veto on Communist ministers.

Georges Marchais, who said he thinks that this question is "important," then specified the "three conditions which must be met to defeat Giscard, to introduce change and to achieve a new policy."

"First is to move toward a great policy of far-reaching democratic and anticapitalist reforms, capable, as I have said, of steering the country out of the crisis, changing society and meeting the French people's aspirations.

Second, on the basis of this policy, we must achieve a broad majority movement of French men and women, which should be the foundation of the left union. This must of course be extended to the country and the government. That means that this government must include Communists and Socialists.

"Third, we must struggle. The workers must lead the struggle at all stages. The French bourgeoisie has never met any demand, conceded any advantage or any right. It has always been necessary to win them by struggle. We must, therefore, struggle before, during and after. [as published]

"These are the three conditions. It is to this context that the problem of Communist ministers belongs."

From this viewpoint, Georges Marchais said he thinks that "No, there will be no Communist ministers."--a remark made by [PS First Secretary] Jospin on Sunday evening [1 February]--as "noteworthy throughout the country and a kind of revelation" for the French people. "Nobody believed us in 1977 when we said that the PS had changed," Georges Marchais remarked. But now the French people are bound to say: "So, the Communists were right."

Indeed, the Communist candidate demonstrated, "No party in this country can aspire to run the country alone. A coalition is necessary. Therefore, if the PS does not want--and it does not--Communist ministers, the following question must necessarily be answered: With whom will it govern? The point which is clear is that, in the final analysis, the PS does not want change, because, I will say it again, change presupposes a new policy and a coalition and, without the Communists, nobody can claim to implement a new policy. I even wonder whether the PS wants to defeat Giscard."

On this point, Georges Marchais demonstrated that Francois Mitterrand has changed since, in 1974, he "publicly advocated Communist participation in the government before the presidential election."

Patrice Duhamel then asked the Communist candidate whether our party is prepared to "change its line to bring about a coalition with the Socialists," as the PS is demanding.

"Everybody knows," Georges Marchais replied, "that there is a fundamental difference between the PCF and the PS. We think that those who made the Tours decision in 1920 made the right choice. I am not asking the Socialists to become Communists. There is a Socialist Party--a reformist social democratic party--and there is a Communist Party--a revolutionary party. We have different policies. We differ in our opinions. There is no question of asking us to stop being Communists just as there is no question of asking the PS to stop being Socialist."

As for the demand formulated by Jospin for the PCF to alter its policy, notably on the immigrant workers' issue, Georges Marchais replied clearly after explaining the significance of Communists' action in that sphere: "We will not change because we think it is a policy and a stance in keeping with the French and immigrant workers' interests."

Will there be negotiations between the two rounds [of the presidential election], Jean Lefevre asked. "What negotiations?" Georges Marchais replied. "There will be no negotiations. Why should there be? Francois Mitterrand is asking people to vote for him without knowing for what policy they are voting and then he says: Not with the Communists....I say: We want to defeat Giscard to implement a new policy." Patrice Duhamel then asked: "Will you have Socialist ministers if you are elected? Georges Marchais replied: "Of course, if I am elected, there will be a government with Socialist and Communist ministers."

From this viewpoint, the Communist candidate demonstrated that this request for Communist ministers is not new. He cited as evidence the report which he submitted to our party's 23d congress in May 1979: "To obtain the changes they want, the workers need the PCF to take part in governing the country. It is in the country's interests for Communist ministers to play a full part in running France's affairs at the earliest opportunity."

Georges Marchais added: "The PCF has been struggling for leftwing union for more than 50 years. We have never abandoned the union. We do not withdraw any of the criticism which we leveled at the PS when it broke the leftwing union in 1977. Nonetheless, we are not giving up. We have learned from our experience with the joint program, hence the three conditions which I have just discussed and which constitute the only way of making progress."

Turning to foreign policy questions, Georges Marchais stressed that he is not afraid of Reagan because "the balance of forces in the world is irreversible; it is tipped in favor of the forces of peace, progress and socialism." Questioned by Jean-Marie Cavada, he indicated that the French proposal on Afghanistan is not satisfactory and that Giscard d'Estaing would have done better to support the current initiative involving Pakistan, Iran and Afghanistan. "France ought to behave like a nonaligned country and plan an active role in promoting international detente and peace. It is not playing that role," he asserted, taking disarmament as an example.

With regard to Poland, the Communist candidate reaffirmed the PCF stance according to which "the Poles must settle their own affairs." Having said that and noted the considerable progress made by socialist Poland, Georges Marchais reaffirmed that our party advocates "trade unions independent of parties and the government, trade unions which uphold the workers' demands." He welcomed the CGT stance which takes the same line.

Nonetheless, the Communist candidate thinks that "even settling the trade union problem will not settle everything" in Poalnd. There are "imbalances" in that country and therefore there must be "efforts for a new economic policy suited to present-day Poland, a corresponding social policy and increased socialist democracy." Georges Marchais recalled the disagreement between the CPSU and our party on this last point.

Finally, regarding the campaign over Soviet "intervention" in Poland, the PCF secretary general, who recalled our party's disagreement with the intervention in Czechoslovakia and its stance on Afghanistan, revealed that he had had discussions with Carter's former adviser Brzezinski in Africa 2 years ago. "Now," Georges Marchais noted, "he is saying that it was Carter who prevented a Soviet intervention in Poland. That's ridiculous because, as I have said from the start, it is unthinkable that anybody but the Poles themselves should find a solution to their crisis."

Finally, in reply to a question on the level he considers desirable for his election result, the Communist candidate said he wants to rally "as many people as possible." In view of Giscard d'Estaing's desire to win the PS' support to expand his political base, "the only bastion, the only force on which the workers can rely is the PCF."

"I say to the French men and women: If the PCF unfortunately emerged from his campaign weakened, you could expect more unemployment, more inflation, more poverty and difficulties. It is possible to uphold your demands and bring about changes provided the PCF is strengthened since it is now the only force which is saying clearly and plainly: "We must defeat Giscard, change society and realize the aspirations of this country's workers, peasants and intellectuals."

GOVERNMENT REPLIES TO SOVIET NOTE ON TERRORISM

[Text] The Italian Government has replied to the Soviet note on the references made by the president of the republic to the international connections of terrorism. It was presented to the Soviet ambassador in Rome by Eduardo Speranza, under secretary for foreign affairs.

The Italian reply refers to the joint note issued by the Guirinale and the government on 27 January which stressed that Pertini had made an objective observation, namely that two countries on the edge of the Atlantic area, Italy and Turkey, were the object of an intensive terrorist offensive, without making reference to precise responsibilities or any particular country.

The Italian position on the problem of terrorism was subsequently outlined by Prime Minister Forlani in the Chamber of Deputies on 3 February.

The reply to Moscow concludes that Italy takes note of the confirmed condemnation of terrorism expressed by the Soviet Union.

COLOMBO REPORTS ON MEETINGS WITH U.S. LEADERS

LD122350 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2130 GMT 12 Feb 81

[Text] Foreign Affairs Minister Emilio Colombo in Washington today first met Secretary of State Alexander Haig, then Vice President Bush, and, finally this evening, President Reagan. On this last meeting let us listen to the report from our correspondent, Gastone Ortona:

The minister of foreign affairs, Emilio Colombo, had a long and detailed meeting with President Reagan, which was also attended by Vice President Bush and Secretary of State Alexander Haig, with whom Colombo had earlier had a long conversation at the State Department.

Colombo indicated immediately afterward that they had spoken at length of the solidarity of the Atlantic alliance, and in particular the [word indistinct] relations between the United States and Italy. We conducted, he said, an assessment of the international situation, the crisis which exists in various points of the world, and East-West relations: a world which demands, said Colombo, a [word indistinct] closer collaboration between the United States and Western Europe.

For his part, Secretary of State Alexander Haig said that the outcome of these conversations, which he personally considered useful and interesting, confirms the determination of the United States to intensify and extend consultations between the United States and its Western allies within the framework of the Atlantic treaty and within the European Community. Haig said that the United States attaches great significance to the need to rectify the present imbalance of the military situation in Europe and this precisely will be taken care of in cooperation with the Atlantic allies.

Colombo, for his part, indicated that the Polish situation was considered in the course of these talks to be one of the gravest preoccupations, which requires even greater consultations and the need to make the Soviet Union clearly understand that the Polish problem must be solved inside Poland, and that any Soviet intervention would be extremely grave and would prejudice the development of a harmonious coexistence in the world.

BUDGET MINISTER COMMENTS ON DISPUTE WITH TREASURY

[Eraldo Gaffino interview with Budget Minister Giorgio La Malfa: "Budget Minister Explains Decisions of Party Leaders' Summit: 'They Said "Yes" to the Plan and "No" to Andreatta's Squeeze, Which Must Be Modified'"]

[Text] Rome--[Question] Minister La Malfa, the opposition to the credit squeeze decided on last Saturday by your colleague at the Treasury, Nino Andreatta, implied the risk of a government crisis. On Wednesday evening you revealed to us, in a laconic communique, that the disagreement on economic policy had been resolved. But nobody knows either how the disagreement between you and Andreatta was resolved or what this government's future approach to economic policy will be.

[Answer] Yesterday's summit meeting at the Camilluccia [DC Rome Secretariat] opened with an introductory statement from [Prime Minister] Forlani, who asked me to explain my position. I explained that the Budget Ministry had worked for several months to draw up a far-reaching economic policy capable of restoring a balance between the need for development and the need to avoid encouraging inflation.

[Answer] Just a minute; first let me explain to you the basic linchpins of the plan that I have drawn up and which I presented at yesterday's meeting: 1. Backing for public investments, especially in the sectors most dependent on other countries; 2. A progressive reduction of the current public deficit; 3. A rather strict credit policy accompanied, however, by these public investments to support income; 4. A stable exchange rate throughout the period of the 3-year plan.

[Question] Minister, in recent weeks you have frequently called for realignment of the parity of the lira--so much so that you have been the target of severe criticisms for this public debate on devaluation. Have you now altered course? Do you want a stable exchange rate?

[Answer] I never asked for a devaluation of the lira; what you say is wrong. In fact, I explicitly asked Andreatta to ensure that before the introduction of the [budget] plan, a fair and advantageous exchange rate be established for us within the European Monetary System [EMS]. And as an integral part of a planning policy I asked the monetary authorities to ensure that this exchange rate, once established (but this was up to Andreatta and the Bank of Italy, not me), remain stable for 3 years.

[Answer] Look, I will not comment on timetables for implementation. I submitted a written request to the monetary authorities for the establishment of a stable and more appropriate exchange rate within the EMS, because the exchange rate is not within the Budget Ministry's sphere of competence. I only wanted some specific undertakings to be made on this matter, just as they have been made on the other major economic issues. And it is not a matter of whether or not to remain within the EMS, because I am totally in line with my party's policy, which has always been to participate fully in the EMS.

[Question] Your reply is clear. However, even authoritative foreign newspapers such as the FINANCIAL TIMES have enrolled you in the devaluation party.

[Answer] The anti-inflation struggle is not to be waged with generic announcements of reduced inflation levels, still less by undertaking not to devalue and subsequently being forced by circumstances to do so.

[Question] Has Andreatta committed himself to not devaluing by adopting these credit measures?

[Answer] I only became acquainted with the technical details of Andreatta's measures at yesterday evening's meeting. Because of the reception they have received, they have marked a sudden break in relations with the social forces which contributed to the plan. Indeed, in recent months we have established a constructive dialogue not only with employers and trade union forces, but also with the opposition, ranging from the Italian Liberal Party to the PCI. As even Colajannai and Napoleoni have acknowledged, the 3-year plan transcends the narrow limits of the government. Subsequently, four formal meetings of the inter-ministerial committee for economic planning imparted a collegial character to the document, which was unanimously approved in January.

[Question] So has everything been suddenly reversed since Saturday without your knowing anything about it?

[Answer] Andreatta's strict credit restrictions have been judged a very dangerous change of direction, full of heavily recessive consequences, centered on the production sector, on which the restrictions bear, while the public deficit remained unchanged.

[Question] How was the government's meeting with party secretaries able to remedy such a substantial conflict between two economic ministers?

[Answer] In my address I presented the government and party secretaries with two options: A. To regard Andreatta's measures as due to the new international dollar situation, to deal with which an extraordinarily restrictive policy was needed, in which case the medium-term plan would have to be suspended for an adequate period, namely, until this turbulence was surmounted;

B. To regard the 1,000 lire exchange rate--and I cited in this connection the opinion of former Governor Guido Carli, expressed in his interview with LA REPUBBLICA--as a reflection of the dollar's pressure on the EMS as a whole and on the deutschmark in particular. As part of this hypothesis I said that there is a more pressing need than ever to strengthen the role of the plan as a tool for surmounting a crisis involving us from abroad. I said that it was therefore necessary to remedy the negative impact caused by the Treasury's statements, thus lessening the restrictive effect and healing relations with the social forces.

[Question] What did the summit decide?

[Answer] It opted for the latter path, confirming what the governing parties see as the only possible path for our economy, namely, action aimed at remedying the imbalances, not at successive announcements which destabilize instead of correcting.

[Question] Were the four party secretaries in agreement too?

[Answer] They all maintained that the limits on the expansion of credit announced by Andreatta are too restrictive and likely to seriously threaten employment levels. [DC Secretary] Piccoli even ventured to make a quantitative assessment: Unless we modify the squeeze there will be several tens of thousands more unemployed this year.

[Question] Mr Minister, it is not important to know only who--you or Andreatta--emerged victorious from this conflict between two economic policies. It is also necessary to know whether this squeeze will be modified and integrated (as your communique implies) or whether nothing will happen.

[Answer] Bear in mind that at the meeting, Andreatta's measures were presented as expansive compared to the guidelines envisaged in the forecast and program report. The problem in fact is that these measures were announced by the treasury minister last Saturday as very restrictive and have had a negative impact on the social forces.

[Question] We would like to keep this interview lucid, though the subject matter is difficult.

[Answer] So follow my argument. There was a substantial difference between the political message and the technical announcement of the squeeze. Andreatta presented it as restrictive, on account of pressing currency necessities. It is sufficient to read the communique issued by the Bank of Italy to realize that the bank maintains that the measures are due solely to the need to contain credit within the limits of expansion that have been established. I am telling you this partly to stress that I noted a full similarity of viewpoints between the guidelines of the medium-term plan and the opinion of the Bank of Italy. And the same also applies to Ciampi's recent speech at the Angera seminar.

[Question] So Wednesday's meeting was the first time that a measure decided on by the Bank of Italy was submitted to examination by the parties. And it was not fully approved.

[Answer] For months the Bank of Italy had been urging currency measures to defend our reserves. Having said that, obviously the treasury minister failed to perform one of his important functions, namely to act as ambassador between a technical body (the Bank of Italy) and the government. The Republican Party has had a tradition of great respect and protection with respect to this technical body. This is why I presented the summit with two options, ready to shelve the medium-term plan if the government parties concluded that priority in some way had to be given to the currency aspect of defending the lira. I did this to avoid running the risk of submitting to the parties' examination a number of technical decisions by the Bank of Italy, for which the treasury minister would have had to secure the government's prior collegial approval.

[Question] I still do not understand whether or not these credit squeeze measures will be modified.

[Answer] The technical elements of the decisions taken by the treasury minister were supplied to me only yesterday. Over the next few days a collegial decision will be taken on how to coordinate this squeeze with the plan, which will next week be submitted to examination by the parties.

[Question] So is the conflict between you and Andreatta resolved?

[Answer] This difference between the Treasury and Budget Ministries, which I hope the summit meeting resolved, also further highlighted the trade unions' and leftwing parties' consensus with the plan. Only now are people realizing the value of an attempt to escalate the two-stage policy (stabilization then development) that in the past has always produced negative results, because we have never reached the development stage. It is now clear that the economy needs more than squeeze, the OECD and EEC have always suggested that we use other methods of intervention instead of clinging to the old traditional path typical of Carli, Colombo and the sixties.

[Question] Be that is it may, you have received some criticisms from your party.

[Answer] I believe there is a trend in part of the financial world to regard plans as academic exercises. But we are facing problems such as energy and agriculture, which require long- and not short-term economic policy approaches. If there is any such prejudice against planning, I believe it should be discussed. The plan embodies commitments on specific issues, not macroeconomics, such as the evolution of the inflation rate. Undertakings designed to reduce inflation, which depend on complex domestic and international factors, in the past were never helped to realize their aim, but, if anything, have rendered governments' action less credible.

PCI AIDES CONFER WITH NICARAGUAN DELEGATION

[Unattributed report: "Meeting at PCI Headquarters With Two Sandinist Front Leaders"]

[Text] Rome--A Nicaraguan Sandinist Front delegation composed of Douglas Guerrero, member of the Sandinist Youth National Executive Committee, and Roberto Miranda, has been received at PCI Directorate headquarters by Comrades Antonio Rubbi and Rudolfo Mechini, foreign section chief and deputy chief, respectively.

During the cordial conversation, the Nicaraguan delegation gave a full report on the situation in Nicaragua, which is characterized by broad popular mobilization to consolidate the results achieved with the victory of the revolution 18 months ago, to ensure the conditions for economic recovery and the implementation of important social measures, and to guarantee the country's independence. Comrades Rubbi and Mechini confirmed to the Sandinist Front delegation the Italian Communists' full solidarity with the Nicaraguan revolution, and their commitment to further develop action of political mobilization and of specific aid in support of the Nicaraguan people's struggle. They also reported on the PCI's unitary initiatives for the Salvadoran people's liberation from the policy of brutal repression being pursued against them by the junta-backed reactionary forces.

PCE LEADER CARRILLO WILL NOT ATTEND CPSU CONGRESS

[Text] Madrid, 12 Feb (AFP)--Santiago Carrillo, secretary general of the PCE, will not attend the 26th Congress of the CPSU, which is scheduled to open in Moscow on February 23. This was announced at party headquarters here today.

The Spanish delegation will consist of Francisco Romero Marn and Mrs Leonor Bornao, both members of the party Central Committee, the announcement added.

Mr Carrillo is the second European Communist party leader to decide against attending the congress. PCI leader Enrico Berlinguer was the first.

The reasons behind Mr Carrillo's decision were not immediately known but observers here said it was probably connected with developments in Poland. Mr Carrillo recently warned Moscow against any form of intervention in Poland, in the wake of continuing industrial unrest there, they added.

ETA/PM CONDEMNS RIVAL GROUP OVER ENGINEER'S MURDER

LD111328 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1230 GMT 11 Feb 81

[Text] The terrorist organization Basque Fatherland and Liberty-Political Military [ETA/PM] has issued a note condemning the actions of the other branch of the Basque independence organization ETA-military [ETA/M], in particular its latest bloody act in kidnapping and killing the engineer, Jose Maria Ryan, who was in charge of construction at the Lemoniz nuclear power station.

ETA/PM maintains that ETA/M and the so-called Patriotic Socialist Coordination are trying: To lead us into civil confrontation which has nothing to do with the class struggle and the Basque popular classes' confrontation with the central authorities.

We are unable, they add, to refrain from commenting on the errors which ETA/M is repeatedly committing in the name of the Basque revolution and under a banner--ETA--whose history it has ceased to represent.

In the view of ETA/PM the assassination of Sr Ryan unnecessarily reinforces the position of the Iberduero company and of the central authorities, and ETA/M is furthermore showing itself incapable of finding a political way out of its own practices, which have for too long been bound up in sectarianism.

VOTCP CONNECTS TOWER VISIT WITH NEW MILITARY PACT

[Station commentary: "U.S. Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman in Ankara"]

[Text] A U.S. delegation headed by the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Sen John Tower, arrived in Ankara. An ANATOLIA AGENCY report says that Sen Tower, who arrived in Ankara accompanied by four advisers, will be received by National Security Council President Gen Kenan Evren. The report adds that the senator from Texas will leave for other Middle East and Mediterranean countries after the concludes his visit to Ankara. Though there is no detailed information on subjects to be taken up by the senator during his visit to Ankara, certain observers believe that plans for the setting up of a new military pact among Turkey, Egypt and Israel by the Reagan-Haig administration will be discussed.

Recalling that some time ago 69 U.S. senators in a letter to the Turkish Foreign Ministry asked for Turkey's relations with Israel to be restored to its high level, the same observers say that the senator's visit to Ankara to be followed by trips to Middle East and Mediterranean countries is connected with steps to establish a new military pact in the region under U.S. control. Meanwhile, a report from Brussels says that troops of the U.S. rapid deployment force are taking part in the NATO military exercises being held in Erzurum.

LOWER CHAMBER URGES OPPOSITION TO NEUTRON BOMB

[Own correspondent report: "Chamber Against Neutron Bomb"]

Van der Klaauw Statement

[Own correspondent report: "The Netherlands Will Continue To Oppose Neutron Bomb"]

[Excerpt] The Hague--Foreign Minister van der Klaauw has delivered a message to the U.S. Government in Washington opposing the introduction of the neutron bomb. He announced this in the continuation of the NATO debate in the second chamber yesterday.

Van der Klaauw said that he had immediately informed Washington of the views expressed in the motion put forward on Wednesday by the Christian Democratic Appeal, the Labor Party and the Democrats 1966 of our concern over statements by U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger.

"The government view has always been that the introduction of the neutron bomb must be avoided. I made this clear most emphatically in Washington and this was clearly noted," Van der Klaauw said. He also said that Washington had given him "explicit assurances" that there is no question of a decision for the introduction of the controversial weapon, the production of which was shelved by President Carter.

NRC HANDELSBLAD Editorial

[Editorial: "Neutron Bomb"]

[Text] Even before its first talks with European leaders the new U.S. Government has placed the question of the neutron bomb on the international agenda again. The swiftness with which this happened came as a surprise. For this weapon is principally intended as a weapon for battlefield use in Europe. The decision to use it as such must be a collective decision, a decision for the whole of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The announcement that the United States is considering whether to resume the neutron bomb program comes at a politically very sensitive moment for the German Government. Its major partner, the SPD, is having difficulty enough in preserving unity in the party on such important matters as the use of nuclear power for civilian purposes and the NATO decision to modernize the medium-range missiles stationed in Europe. Indeed, one of the German opposition's defense specialists, Woerner, in his initial comments expressed the fear that the modernization program could suffer because of Secretary Weinberger's announcement.

It can also be noted that the most important questions arising out of the discussion on neutron weapons have still not been adequately dealt with. Here we are primarily dealing with the fact that a nuclear weapon would be used to ward off conventional weapons (a tank column), and through such action the danger of a general nuclear war would be increased. And this while it is still not settled whether the neutron bomb is so essential for combatting Russian tank columns, for there are experts who assert that most modern conventional precision munitions are no less effective. This means that the real problem of the modernization of the medium-range missiles threatens to be scuttled by a program which is much less urgent.

Then there is the consideration that the timing and manner of the announcement of this U.S. change of course must be seen as less than fortunate. There is in Europe an understandable fear that in its behavior toward the Soviet Union the new U.S. Government is not allowing itself to be guided by justifiable pragmatic considerations but by an ideological anticommunism which does not rule out the notion that a final military confrontation between the two opposing weltanschaungs is unavoidable.

Comments from various of the new President's advisers provide evidence of this view. It is unavoidable that this European fear will be stirred up by Secretary Weinberger's announcement, and this will further burden U.S.-European relations.

At the same time as his announcement Weinberger reminded his audience of the dissatisfaction that President Carter had caused in various European governments by his sudden decision to postpone the production of neutron weapons. The first reactions from Europe to his own announcement, including that of The Netherlands Government, should have made it clear to him that he had been mistaken in thinking that the reversal of Carter's decision would be met with greater support in Europe.

Meanwhile, it remains very possible that Weinberger's statements were not intended as a conscious feeler but were simply a clumsily worded answer to an unexpected question. The fact that he was not able to remember the correct formal name for the weapon indicates that this is probable.

The announcement from the U.S. State Department could also point in this direction and show that Weinberger's statements were no reflection of official U.S. policy and that Secretary Haig has informed the U.S. allies of this. This would then happily mean that here for the present at least, we are only dealing with a tempest in a teacup.

TAIWAN PREPARED TO PAY CASH FOR SUBMARINES

[Own correspondent report: "Taiwan Will Pay Cash"]

[Excerpt] Rotterdam--Taiwan is prepared to pay cash for the two submarines which it wants to order from Rijn-Schelde-Verolme, [RSV], and credit guarantees for the rest of the order (totalling 1.2 billion guilders) will not be needed from the Netherland's authorities. The matter will now stand or fall on the decision of the cabinet on an export license.

Representatives of the Rotterdam Chamber of Commerce learned this in Taiwan, where the chamber was taking part in Holland Expo II. a travelling exhibition of Dutch industrial life. Taiwan has so great an export surplus that it would have no difficulty in financing the RSV order.

SCHMIDT COMMENTS ON SALE OF TANKS TO SAUDI ARABIA

[Text] Hamburg, 15 Feb (DPA)--According to Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, it does not appear in the discussion about German arms exports that "there is going to be an overwhelming majority for arms exports to Saudi Arabia."

In an interview for HAMBURGER ABANDBLATT (Monday's edition), Schmidt stated that the Federal Republic could not have primary interest in supplying arms to states which are not members of NATO. Bonn is certainly interested, however, in further intensifying the already good relations with Saudi Arabia (which is interested in purchasing German Leopard II tanks). Saudi Arabia is one of the most important oil supplying countries and one of Europe's most important creditor countries. Furthermore, consideration must be shown "to the entire Middle East region, particularly Israel," stressed the chancellor. There remains, anyway, a very great deal to be thought over this issue.

An edited version of the interview was prereleased to DPA.

CHANCELLOR DISCUSSES DOMESTIC, FOREIGN AFFAIRS

DW161040 Cologne ARD Television Network in German 2130 GMT 13 Feb 81

[Friedrich Nowottny interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Chancellor, the 5-point paper of the SPD looks as though it was adopted solely for your sake. Was that necessary?

[Answer] What do you mean, necessary?

[Question] Did the chancellor expressly have to obtain confirmation as to what he may do and within which limits of action he may be moving?

[Answer] Well, the leeway of action of neither the chancellor nor the Federal Government had been impaired or even jeopardized in any way. But it is true that there were some people in the Social Democratic Party who offered their criticism of dissatisfaction with ample volume and with ample publicity, therefore it was desirable indeed to discuss the issue and to ascertain where the majority of the party actually stands. And this has been done with extremely desirable clarity.

[Question] With the majority of the party executive board, is this identical with the majority of the party, do you think?

[Answer] Definitely, I believe that the closer we approach the basis of the SPD members and in particular of the voters who appointed this party to the government again jointly with the FDP in October 1980, the clearer we will see that the voters and the members of the party agree with the policy of the government. No doubt about that at all.

[Question] You would say, then, that the 5-point paper covers the government statement, the SPD party congress in Berlin 1979 as well as the coalition paper. If this is so, doesn't it constitute also a restriction of your political freedom of movement?

[Answer] No, it is not, but to begin with, I would like to make it quite plain: If anybody in the German press would go to the trouble...

[Question] ...no chiding of journalists...

[Answer] ...just wait, what I mean to say, would go to the trouble to compare this 5-point paper with my debate speech 10 or 14 days ago nearly at the end of the Bundestag budget debate, he would see that this paper largely is congruent with the contents of my speech. And if this gentleman then would also write about it in his newspaper, then many an artificial excitement probably would soon collapse. As for the freedom of action of the Federal Government, this freedom must go beyond decisions of earlier party congresses. This has always been so, this was true in the Adenauer era just as it was true in the Brandt era. The chancellor and the Federal Government have a mandate under the basic law. They must ponder it in their conscience. To the greatest extent possible, they will, naturally, abide by the political opinion of the respective party as expressed at party congresses; but their mandate continues. And it may well happen that a government or a chancellor sometime must do something differently than decided by a party congress 1 or 2 years ago. So far, this has not happened to me. It was not necessary for me as yet, but it may happen indeed.

[Question] A new discussion is reaching over from the other side of the Atlantic, from the United States, the question namely whether the allies in West Europe, the NATO allies, should station neutron weapons in their area. Would that be a question you would have to decide as the responsible federal chancellor?

[Answer] That is a rather hypothetical question at the moment and I do not like to answer hypothetical questions such as: what would be if? American Secretary of Defense Weinberger, who has brought up the whole affair, said yesterday that it was his private opinion and that so far, no opinion of the American President exists on this matter. The secretary of state voiced a similar opinion. We will deal with this problem if the American Government will introduce this issue in the bodies of the North Atlantic alliance. At present, I see no reason to deal with it.

Let me add that the famous so-called double decision of the Atlantic alliance of late 1979 is a typical example of what the Europeans want, namely firmness, reestablishment of the balance, if need be through their counterarmament vis-a-vis the armament lead of the Eastern side. With the same energy, one must simultaneously press for negotiations between both nuclear powers so that this [armament] will not go on forever, that it will be limited. Both things are necessary. Therefore, there is the double decision. The double decision involving the European missiles is typical of the basic approach of the European states, the European governments, including the Federal Government, typical of the strategic situation between the West and the East.

[Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, I would like to mention again the document of the SPD. I am asking you whether the critical developments in your party in past weeks have endangered your ability to make decisions so much that you are considering resigning?

[Answer] No. First, it was not endangered. On the contrary, I was absolutely certain that most of the German women and men who voted for another SPD and FDP government in October want us to rule. They do not want us to have permanent public discussions and quarrels with others. The Federal Government's power of authority was not endangered, but one can never rule out difficulties in the Bundestag. That happened in earlier years as well.

[Question] What would you do then?

[Answer] I have no intention of resigning--I still owe you that answer--but I was toying with the idea of posing the question of confidence in the Bundestag. That was so in past years and it could also in the future become an idea worth being examined.

[Question] Is the formulation "federal chancellor until called off" a sharp term not permissible in this connection?

[Answer] Actually, that makes me just grin. I don't think I look as if somebody could call me off. I have to perform a duty imposed by the voters. The vast majority of the German people expects us to do our duty and we will do it.

Radio Interview

[Reporter Guendler interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The executive board of your party has assured you this week of the full SPD support on the most important issues of government policy. Do you feel dependent on such backing, or are you content with the backing of most voters, confirmed by the Bundestag elections and opinion polls?

[Answer] Naturally, one needs both. A coalition government needs the agreement of both coalition parties; a one-party government also needs the agreement of the one party. I have never doubted the support of the wide, wide majority of the Social Democratic voters and the Free Democratic voters and I have also not doubted the support of the wide, wide majority of the Bundestag deputies of both factions. But there were some Social Democrats who have most thoroughly criticized this or that in public. It was good that an interim balance was made, which showed very definite results.

[Question] Has the crisis come to an end that way?

[Answer] The pondering certainly has not come to an end due to this decision. The involved persons themselves must know about the results of their pondering. Some of them have made headlines with their interviews in past days and weeks. I am curious what consequences they will draw once their thinking process has come to an end.

[Question] Do you feel handicapped in making decisions by the resistance of some PSD groups against your economic and energy policy or against NATO's missile decision.

[Answer] No, I never felt handicapped by that. I was pleased to see in past weeks that the Social Democratic Bundestag faction has very clearly supported the policy in the fields you just mentioned.

[Question] You have pointed out that you have warned recently, together with the French state president, against striving for military superiority, urging moderation in political actions. Was that addressed only to Moscow or was it also a description of the position of the West European allies vis-a-vis the new American Government?

[Answer] It was a description of the positions of France and of Germany to everybody's address, including the remark that one cannot accept a position of inferiority, of military weakness, and that one must not strive for a policy of superiority or military strength. That goes also to everybody's address. And I am very happy that the Social Democratic Bundestag faction early this week at its Berlin session unanimously and adopted this common German-French statement without any doubts.

[Questtion] This common Paris statement mentions the stabilization of East-West relations instead of detente. The word detente appears in the decision of the party executive board actually only in retrospect to 1969. One must conclude that you also no longer consider the word detente as a term that makes sense.

[Answer] It would make more sense if the word detente were mentioned by the Soviet leadership in a statement to the world, saying that it will withdraw its troops from Afghanistan in the interest of detente. That would be an excellent use of this word which would please all of us.

The French president and I indeed, used that word last week in Paris. We recalled a joint statement published just 1 year ago, shortly after the Afghanistan invasion. We said that detente policy will not stand one more such blow. We recalled it this time and we naturally looked with special concern at a part of Europe which is by far not as far away from us as Afghanistan.

[Question] Even in the event of amended principles for arms exports, it is intended to keep export policies restrictive. What you said during the Bundestag debate on the budget was that in this respect employment policy must not play any role. Could this widely discussed tank deal with Saudi Arabia really be called restrictive? Won't a working man's party like the SPD be forced ultimately by at least local job interests at the locations of our shipyards and tank factories continuously to relax the export restrictions?

[Answer] In this field, I have always been a harbinger of care and reserve, or of a restrictive stance on the part of the Federal Government. There may be exceptions in specific cases. These are subject to the approval by the Federal Government, for instance because a shipyard in Emden or Bremen, or Kiel or elsewhere otherwise cannot be fully utilized, provided no foreign policy reservations exist. In the case of the submarine deliveries to Chile, in which the entire Social Democratic Party has a very strictly negative stance, this shipyard job situation aspect did play a role. And in this connection, people probably did not take properly into account what the psychological effect of the matter would be. But generally speaking, I continue advocating the view that employment policy aspects should not play a role.

[Question] In the quarrel over the Brokdorf nuclear powerplant on the lower course of the Elbe River, most north Germany Social Democrats are at variance with Bonn's government policy. At the Berlin party congress a year ago, it had still been uniform SPD policy to keep the option open for withdrawing from nuclear energy. Do you consider the Berlin energy decision obsolete in this point?

[Answer] The Berlin party congress decision says, among other things, that nuclear powerplants under construction will be completed. And this also referred to Brokdorf. So if anybody advocates the completion of Brokdorf, he is quite in harmony with the Berlin party congress decision. There are quite a few north German Social Democrats who view the matter this way and advocate it accordingly. They are not bad Social Democrats because of that. The Social Democrats in Lower Saxony--which is the largest land in northern Germany--so far have not been asked about this issue. Therefore, let us not exaggerate this majority of the north German Social Democrats. But by the same token, it is in harmony with decisions of Social Democratic party congresses that new coal-fed powerplants are built. Had anybody wanted to build a coal-fed power station in Brokdorf, the Federal Government likewise would have said that this is in keeping with our plans. It would be at odds with them if an oil-fed power station were built. I cannot but point out that in northern Germany in general and in Hamburg in particular, there are yet quite a few oil-fed power stations left that need to be replaced. We must get away from oil. By its national energy concept, the Federal Government has proved that the construction of a nuclear powerplant at Brokdrof would be within the framework of this concept. Had the Federal Government been asked: We plan to build a coal-fed power station, is this within your concept? Then we would have replied in the affirmative as well.

[Question] The impression prevails in public that the government and the coalition after the past elections had a particularly bad start. Will the social-liberal coalition last until 1984?

[Answer] As for the latter part of your question, I am convinced it will. As far as the poor start is concerned, such poor starts are practically traditional. I can well remember how things were in 1976 after the Bundestag elections, nor was the start particularly billiant after the 1972 Bundestag elections. After the great effort of the election campaign, we are not going so fast. But by now, I think, we are well underway and there is not the least doubt in my mind that most voters, who after all voted for the SPD and the FDP so that this government could stay at the helm of the ship, want a tested team in the government specially now when times become difficult with respect to both world economy and world politics, and not some people who first would have to learn the government business.

FRG, UK, FRENCH FOREIGN MINISTERS MEET IN BONN

[Text] London, 13 Feb (DPA)--The foreign ministers of Great Britain, France and the Federal Republic, during a secret meeting in Bonn on Thursday, conferred on international topics. The British Foreign Office said on Friday that the meeting had been "a useful opportunity to discuss topical themes." Lord Carrington (Great Britain), FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Jean Andre Francois-Poncet (France) also met on account of their impending trips. Tagesschau [German television news program] reported on Friday evening that the objective of the meeting was to discuss the attitude of the three powers vis-a-vis the new American Government.

FOREIGN MINISTER SEES USSR SETBACKS IN THIRD WORLD

[Text] Bonn, 13 Feb (DPA)--In the opinion of Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the Soviet Union is about to face further setbacks in its attempts at gaining influence in the Third World. In an interview with Deutschlandfunk on Friday, Genscher referred to Moscow's past failures in a number of countries such as the Sudan, Somalia or Egypt and said: "I have indications that similar developments will take place in other states. We must not fail to note that the Soviet Union's policy of hegemony is meeting increasingly with opposition from Third World countries striving for self-determination and independence."

In this, the foreign minister also sees a reason for increasing tension between Moscow and a great number of nonaligned states. Above all, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has sobered quite a few countries who refused to admit that the Soviet Union is pursuing a policy of hegemony.

REPORTAGE ON CYPRUS PRESIDENT KIPRIANOU'S VISIT

Meeting With Carstens, Schmidt

[Excerpt] Bonn, 13 Feb (DPA)--During a 1-day visit to the Federal Republic, the president of Cyprus Spiros Kiprianou met in Bonn on Friday with President Karl Carstens and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. The latter underlined the great German interest in a peaceful solution to the Cyprus conflict.

According to a government spokesman, the chancellor and the president of Cyprus agreed that "early and tangible progress" should be made in the talks between the Greeks and Turks of Cyprus. According to another report, Kiprianou expressed a wish for the Federal Government to induce the Turkish Government to be more accommodating in the Cyprus talks.

NC131946 Nicosia PUBLIC INFORMATION OFFICE in English 13 Feb 81

Text] The president of the Republic of Cyprus, Mr Spiros Kiprianou, met with the federal chancellor, Mr Helmut Schmidt, on Friday, February 13. They were accompanied by the foreign ministers, Mr Nikos Rolandhis and Mr Hans-Dietrich Genscher, and by the ambassadors in Bonn and Nicosia, Mr Yeoryios Iakovou, and Mr Gerhard Soehnke.

The talks covered international and European questions of mutual interest. The president briefed Chancellor Schmidt on recent developments in the Cyprus problem and the intercommunal talks conducted under the auspices of the secretary-general of the United Nations. The president explained all aspects of the problem and also explained the hitherto unresolved problem of missing persons. The chancellor reiterated the Federal Government's interest in the problems and their peaceful solution.

Both sides agreed on the need for making speedy, tangible progress within the framework of the intercommunal talks in the interest of peace and stability in Cyprus and in the region.

BAHR COMMENTS ON TORNADO PLANE, SPD PROGRAM

[Reporter Limberg interview with Egon Bahr, federal manager of the SPD; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] New difficulties seem to be in the offing for Defense Minister Apel. A shortage of hundreds of millions of deutsche mark will exist in the coming years for the Tornado fighter plane. FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG reports today that the shortage amounts to DM800 million. This has become known at a time when the defense ministers still has difficulties justifying himself for the finance gap of DM1.3 billion involving last year and this year. If the report of FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG is correct, one has obviously made absolutely wrong calculations, not figuring in time with the inflation rate and other cost-increasing factors. Is there any other explanation for this except the one for which Minister Apel has not watched out?

[Answer] If the press reports are correct, they indicate that the air force inspector pointed out to the defense minister that the calculations must be made one more. They indicate that the minister just now has been informed about it. But speaking frankly, I consider the whole affair not so much a problem of the defense minister. I consider it much rather as an extremely clear example illustrating that modern arms systems have reached a category where their financing creates problems even for such countries as the Federal Republic of Germany. And all know that we are not particularly poor.

[Question] So you do not consider this something where the defense minister would be personally responsible, possibly entailing his resignation?

[Answer] The CDU/CSU complained particularly that the minister has known all that, or that he must have known about it beforehand. The new version, or the new gaps which should come about or which seemed to come about mathematically, are obviously not the fault of the minister.

[Question] The 5-point program clearly contains support of the chancellor, the coalition and the coalition agreements. Can one conclude that the position of the chancellor has been strengthened vis-a-vis his party on Thursday?

[Answer] I did not have the feeling that the chancellor's position vis-a-vis his party has been weak. We, as the party, had to eliminate the doubts which have come about in the public. We had to correct the impression that we were tired of the coalition. I believe that this has been clearly corrected. One must simply state, despite all the excitement of these weeks, that there will be always a certain state of tension between the government chief and his party, because the government chief can never fulfill all demands of the party. If the government could do this, it would be just a sign that the party did not set it aims high enough. That is a normal state of tension.

It is equally clear--and I therefore believe that this night of very frank discussions has led not only to clearness but also to firmness--that the party as a whole and without exceptions approves of the coalition and thus of the government.

[Question] Mr Jansen, the land organization chairman of Sohleswig-Holstein, takes a critical view of these 5 points. He says it is an ambiguous interpretation of party decisions which have been known for a long time. Does it mean in other words that everybody can pick for himself the interpretation he likes and isn't a new quarrel programmed in advance that way?

[Answer] No, I know only as much of Guenther Jansen's statement as I have read today in the papers available in Bonn. If I have read them correctly, he just points out that some of the tensions result from the fact that we have a coalition of two parties with one of them advocating more social commitments and the other advocating more commitments vis-a-vis the business world. That is certainly a simplification, but Jansen is right in saying that this produced some of the tensions. The chancellor is not merely the SPD chancellor, he is the chanellor of a coalition, he is the chancellor of this country. He is committed to neither the program of one party or the other. He implements the program on which both coalition partners have agreed.

[Question] These decisions must be passed on to the party foundation. How can that take place? Do you think it can? Do you believe that both sides will feel represented by these points of the program, those who are strictly against nuclear energy, for example, and those who support it?

[Answer] First, I would like to say: I believe that regarding nuclear energy, the party decision does not show wonderful obviousness and the desired simplicity. It cannot show it because we are dealing with an issue where we would have liked to give preference to coal, where we would have liked to have substitute energy, alternative energy and measures to save energy, but where we need nuclear energy because it seems indispensable. It means that the decision just reflects the complicated and ambiguous situation. One could say that the SPD is more honest there than other parties.

Regarding the other point, however, there exists great ambiguity and clearness on the principle of an approximate balance in the alliance, the policy of an approximate balance in the alliance. This has been decided without restrictions, abstentions and opposing votes. I think it will contribute to a clarification of the discussion. We will try our best, we will practically supply every member with these decisions. If need be, we will explain it in discussion and meetings.

[Question] Weren't some of the difficulties created by disputes among the Schmidt/Brandt/Wehner leadership team?

[Answer] I would not say that. It has been said that one ought to talk more with other than about each other. This is certainly a reminder whose correctness cannot be contested.

GOVERNMENT INSISTING ON GDR CURRENCY REVISIONS

[Excerpt] Bonn, 16 Feb (DPA)--The Federal Government is insisting on a definite revision by the GDR of the minimum currency exchange requirement for Western visitors to the GDR, doubled last autumn, as a precondition for negotiations with East Berlin on important joint projects. This was stated today in Bonn government circles in reference to GDR Council of State Chairman and SED chief Erich Honecker's affirmation of willingness to make possible a further normalization of relations in negotiations with the Federal Republic.

Government circles stated that, as long as East Berlin does not make any "drastic" change in the minimum currency exchange requirement, the preconditions for negotiations on large-scale projects under consideration in the field of energy and transport will not exist. The Federal Government apparently is assuming that the GDR scarcely manage to withdraw completely the increase in the currency exchange requirement. According to the same sources, however, if there were an approximate withdrawal, the "working basis" for negotiations would, in Bonn's view, again exist.

Although Honecker's restatement of readiness for talks basically got a positive reception in Bonn, it was also pointed out that the GDR could not at present put this into practice, apparently because of the situation in the Eastern alliance, against the background of the Polish crisis.

FOREIGN MINISTER GENSCHER LEAVES FOR PAKISTAN

[Excerpt] Bonn, 15 Feb (DPA)--Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher left by air for Pakistan this morning. Genscher will have talks in Islamabad with the Pakistani leadership and attend a conference of German ambassadors from the Near East and Southwest Asian countries. On his return, the minister is to spend 2 days in Cairo.

Bonn expects that the 2-week trip by the foreign minister will lead to a reorientation of German Middle East policy against the background of the continuing Afghanistan conflict, the Iran-Iraq war and the closer relations between important Arab Gulf countries.

FOREIGN MINISTRY RECALLS ENVOYS FROM PRAGUE

[Text] Paris, 16 Feb (AFP)--The Foreign Ministry said here today that it had decided to recall two members of the French military mission in Prague "following incidents of which they were the victims." The French Government further instructed the Czechoslovaks to recall two members of their military mission at their embassy here.

The four diplomats have already returned to their respective capital, the Foreign Ministry said.

According to the Czechoslovak news agency CTK, Prague had ordered the two French diplomats to leave the country for "espionage activities."

CTK added that the Czechoslovak Foreign Ministry had also "vigorously protested to French authorities" Paris's demand that Prague recall two of its diplomats "without reasons."

The news agency said that the two French envoys had "entered a forbidden area in central Bohemia." They were arrested and detained for a time, CTK said.

LE MONDE: EEC, EGYPT DRAW CLOSER ON MIDDLE EAST

[Maurice Delaure report: "Mr as-Sadat's Visit to France: Paris Believes Egyptian, European Positions Much Closer"]

[Text] President as-Sadat, who will give a press conference on Friday, 13 February, before leaving France, received on Thursday a delegation of the Jewish community in France, headed by chief Rabbi Rene Sirat and Mr Alaian de Rothschild, president of the council representing Jewish organizations in France.

Neither the Israelis nor the Palestinians, who see it as an "aberration" and "another attempt" to salvage the Camp David agreements (according to the Palestinian agency WAFA), are satisfied with the Egyptian president's stance adopted Tuesday before the European Parliament, on which he commented on Wednesday in a conversation lasting over 2 hours. This was preceded by a luncheon with President Giscard d'Estaing.

The Europeans, however, are not concealing their satisfaction. The Foreign Ministry spokesman stressed that Egypt's position on the Near East is "fully in agreement" with the EEC's (as reflected in the Venice and Luxembourg declarations--the latter, dated 2 December 1980, having received express approval from Mr as-Sadat).

Paris, which is content to stress that the conversation between the two heads of state was "far-reaching" and "very substantial," is clearly equally satisfied. The Egyptian president's "pragmatism" which prompted him to sign the Camp David agreements, is now prompting him, according to circles close to the Elysee, to draw closer to a European stance largely inspired by France. Of course, he has been persuaded to take this course by circumstances (the lull imposed by the imminent Israeli election and the transfer of power in the United States), but also by the fundamental difficulties created by the implementation of the Camp David agreements on the "automony" of the West Bank.

The Palestinians' "self-determination," a Palestinian "entity" and above all the "mutual and simultaneous recognition" of the Israelis and Palestinians were the formulas introduced last year, particularly by Mr Giscard d'Estaing during his visit to the Gulf area. The importance of Mr as-Sadat's acceptance of "simultaneous recognition" (which constitutes the very essence of Europe's position) was stressed by the Foreign Ministry spokesman.

The matter of who has drawn closer to whom is relatively unimportant. The Egyptian side stressed that the statement issued by the Nine in Luxembourg is more flexible than the Venice statement. Indeed, in Luxembourg, the Nine adopted a "range of options," of formulas translating the Venice principles into specific form, while undertaking to submit them to the assessment of the parties concerned. Thus, the Egyptians believe that the European effort does not conflict with the Camp David agreements but "adds to them," as Mr as-Sadat said on Wednesday at his meeting with Egyptian students. The clearest point of divergence between Egypt and the Nine concerns the PLO's involvement in negotiating a settlement, which the Europeans consider necessary, whereas Mr as-Sadat, as he confirmed to newsmen before leaving Luxembourg, considers it inopportune "in the immediate term."

The French and Egyptian presidents also discussed Chad. in which connection, since they share the same fears over the presence of Libyan troops, they could not fail to be in agreement, at least in their analysis of the situation.

As for bilateral relations, Messrs Giscard d'Estaing and As-Sadat noted "the very satisfactory character of their development" and expressed their "shared desire to continue along this path."

According to MENA, at his meeting with the Egyptian students, Mr as-Sadat announced a French-Egyptian nuclear cooperation agreement. In this connection, he pointed out that Egypt plans to build eight nuclear powerplants. For the time being, it does not seem that any agreement has been formally concluded, but one was probably discussed at Wednesday's meeting between French Industry Minister Mr Giraud and Eyptian Energy Minister Mr Hilal.

LE MONDE COMMENTS ON FRENCH-TURKISH TALKS

[Editorial: "Isolated Turkey"]

[Text] Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has left Paris after 2 days of talks which did not lead to any conclusions, still less official agreements. There was no final communique and the two sides each used the most hackneyed diplomatic language to keep up appearances.

In the economic sphere, French financial aid was reaffirmed within the framework of the international consortium set up by the OECD. Although Mr Turkmen had talks with a representative of Renault's management and with the director of the AEC [Atomic Energy Commission] programs, he went no further, at least so he said, than the factfinding level.

The question of the status of Turkish workers, which relates to the economy and also to human problems, was only raised with regard to the recent requirement for entry visas into France, which is to be adjusted. Although the case of Francis Lamaignere, sentenced to 30 years' imprisonment 3 years ago for possessing a few grams of hashish, was raised twice by Mr Francois-Poncet, the only comment made was that France "ardently hopes" for clemency.

Cultural cooperation, to which Mr Turkmen paid tribute at his press conference, was only really featured in a request for more aid for the two schools which teach French in Turkey. Finally, the two ministers condemned "any form of terrorism" and asserted the desire to "introduce the most energetic measures" to tackle it.

In short, while this visit cannot be summed up entirely as wasted effort, it gives the impression that Mr Turkmen perhaps did not ask questions in full and that Jean Francois-Poncet for his part could not give clear answers. The ulterior motives were known and did not come out into the open.

Turkey's aim was probably to establish clearly what store France sets in present circumstances by strengthening the military power of a country which seems to be a particularly sensitive point of contact between the theater covered by the Atlantic alliance and the Near East theater. How far could France have gone in financial aid and cooperation for Turkish national rearmament? Could it contemplate urging West Europe to balance U.S. influence in Ankara? These were the fundamental questions. The atmosphere did not encourage Mr Turkmen to ask them.

Was it timidity, indecisiveness or a concern not to annoy Mr Karamanlis? French diplomacy apparently refuses to heed any approach in that direction. The emphasis placed on the multilateral nature of any aid to Turkey is largely inspired by the gamble taken on preferential friendship with Greece which clearly involves reservations toward Turkey which are likely to be far-reaching.

Does a choice necessarily have to made between the concern which the repression of political opponents by the military regime justifiably raises and the analysis of the major role which Turkey should play in the Western military network? Only the Soviet press links the two and makes the former the consequence of the latter. In fact, it is only if Turkey is welcomed, heeded and really aided that its leaders would accept its allies' approaches on the liberalization of its regime without irritation. There is reason to wonder whether French diplomacy has ever seriously envisaged things from this viewpoint.

LE FIGARO REPORTS GISCARD LOSING GROUND

LD161459 Paris LE FIGARO Magazine 7-13 Feb 81 p 50

[Charles Rebois report: "The Big Problem: How To Persuade 7 Million Young People"]

[Text] Now 44 percent of French citizens trust Valery Giscard d'Estaing to resolve the problems facing France, as against 47 percent in January (minus 3 percent). Thus, the head of state's share of the vote, which reached 53 percent in December, is still falling on our monthly barometer. At the same time, Francois Mitterrand is regaining lost ground month by month. No less than 40 percent want to see him playing an important role in the months and years ahead, as against 35 percent in January (plus 5 percent).

Nevertheless, these figures should not be regarded as an indication of intended votes. In any case, Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand were not assessed by the same yardstick. The people consulted answered two different questions. The question with regard to the former concerned the problems of the moment, and everyone knows that the economic crisis is making their solution difficult. The Socialist leader benefits from the prominence confered on him by his role as challenger in the contest for the Elysee Palace.

Having made these reservations, the fact remains that the president of the Republic's percentage is falling as the 26 April and 10 May elections approach. Opinions are already forming with a view to these elections. Even before Giscard d'Estaing had made his intentions know, the image of head of state progressively is giving way to that of presumed candidate. Splits are becoming more political and as they become accentuated, they are tending progressively to reduce the president's percentage to the level of his position for the first round.

A more detailed analysis of these replies shows that it is mainly young people that the Elysee strategists need to win over to their cause. This necessity is all the more imperative since 7 million new voters will be taking part in a presidential election for the first time.

One noteworthy difference from the January results is that Valery Giscard d'Estaing's major losses are within the majority, and more so in the UDF (minus 7 percent) than in the RPR (minus 5 percent), as if the "revelation" that the president's reelection was not a foregone conclusion caused a major impact. A calmer attitude was reflected by the 27 percent of Socialists who expressed their confidence in the head of state in January and who are still loyal to him in February.

Though this barometer does not directly indicate the temperature of the presidential election, on the other hand, it does accurately indicate the reaction of social and professional sectors to government policy. They can be assessed through the opinions expressed on the head of state, now that the premier, who is content to conduct routine administration, is no longer acting as a shield. Thus, some sectors, whose living standards have been affected, have been lost (minus 7 percent). These losses have been counterbalanced, however, by increased support from farmers (plus 8 percent), who are pleased with the measures favorable to them that have been taken.

We would also point out that the 27 January television address had no significant influence on the president's support. It is true that our poll ended on 29 January. Moreover, it does not seem that foreign policy issues have any major influence on opinion, except at times of serious world crisis. Unemployment and inflation are the most directly reflected concerns.

Compared to Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand, Jacques Chirac, while maintaining a good position, nevertheless loses one point (32 as against 33 percent). This figure, which preceded the announcement of his candidacy, is not very significant. It simply indicates that Chirac's dynamic as candidate has not yet had its effect. There is more significance in the 3-point RPR loss. It must be regarded as a result of the Gaullists' splits since Michel Debre put himself forward as a rival to the party chairman.

As for Georges Marchais, he remains stable. His percentage is now 17 percent (minus 1 percent). If his result on 26 April is no better than this, the Communist Party will have suffered a 3-percent loss against its previous results. It would be a bitter failure.

MITTERRAND INTERVIEWED ON ELECTION ISSUES

[Interview with PS presidential candidate Francois Mitterrand: "If I Am Elected the Planned Nationalizations Will Be Among the First Measures Taken"]

[Text] In an interview published by SUD-OUEST on Friday 6 February, Mr Francois Mitterrand states that if he is elected president, "the nationalizations envisaged in the socialist manifesto will be among the first "measures to be taken by his government. "As for the 35-hour week, a date for the start of negotiations among the social partners will also be immediately determined," he adds.

Asked about the PCF's behavior, the PS presidential candidate states among other things: "It is not a question of knowing what the intentions of the Communist Party leaders are. It is a question of assessing their sphere of action. Will they be able to opt in the second ballot for the candidate of the right, social injustice and antiworker struggle and against the candidate of the left and socialism? To most Communists, the answer is obvious."

Mr Mitterrand also reaffirms his concepts of the functioning of institutions: "The 1958 constitution," he states, "is a parliamentary constitution. General de Gaulle himself made a point of stating this and what I am asking now is that the document in whose favor the people voted be again strictly implemented. The constitution of the Fifth Republic requires that the government not be the emanation but the expression of the majority in the National Assembly....Any other interpretation of the constitution would lead to the creation of an American-type presidential regime and would, therefore, entail the creation of a Sixth Republic. Are Mr Giscard d'Estaing and Mr Marchais contemplating this possibility? In fact, it is mainly against the way in which the documents have been used that I protest since this has led to the creation of a de facto monarchy in disguise."

CPSU CRITICIZES PCI FOR POSITION ON POLAND

Soviet Letter Published

LD132321 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 13 Feb 81

[Text] In a letter sent last December, and kept secret until now, the CPSU Central Committee criticizes the position of Italian Communists on the Polish crisis. The letter, which is to be published in the next issue of the weekly PANORAMA, asserts, among other things, that the objective significance of the position adopted by the PCI resides, according to Moscow, not in support for the socialism which really exists in Poland, but solidarity with those forces which in Poland have unleashed a veritable offensive against socialism.

[Excerpt] Rome, 16 Feb (ANSA)--Speculation on relations between the Soviet and Italian Communist Parties has cornered political debate in Italy following the weekend publication of a Soviet letter accusing the Italian party, the largest in the West, of supporting antisocialist forces in Poland. Pre-publication release of the letter, which appears in the new issue of the Italian weekly, "PANORAMA", on news stands today, came against the background of a confirmation from the Italian party (PCI) that Secretary Enrico Berlinguer will not travel to Moscow next Monday for the Soviet party congress. A PCI note released last week explained that the Italian delegation will be led by Gian Carlo Pajetta because the seriousness of the domestic political situation will keep Berlinguer at home.

The Soviet letter was thought to have been delivered personally to the secretary of the Italian party shortly before Christmas to respond to a PCI statement on Poland made December 8. Thus far, the authenticity of the document has been neither confirmed nor denied in Rome or Moscow. Both sides have, however, denied responsibility for putting it into the public domain.

According to the pre-publication release, the Soviet Central Committee accused the Italian Central Committee of drafting "recommendations (which) differ from the positions of the Polish comrades themselves." The letter also asked: "Could this not be interpreted as PCI interference in Poland's internal affairs?"

In reply, the document said that, "The objective meaning of the PCI position is, according to us, not in support of the socialism which really exists in Poland but solidarity with those forces which have unleashed a true offensive against socialism in Poland."

The Italian party also stood accused of having, "in recent times", developed "concentrated attacks against the foundations of socialism in Poland themselves."

Berlinguer, speaking in Turin Sunday, reiterated his party's position on the situation in Poland without referring to the Soviet Union or the letter. "The PCI has voiced a judgment and taken initiatives consistent with the principles in which we believe", he declared and listed: "First among them, the inadmissibility of any violation of the sovereign right of all peoples to freely chose their own way to development and progress....Repressive measures would be that much more absurd and unacceptable in the midst of a movement which arose from within the Polish working class and from its protest against errors of direction and method."

The secretary of the Italian party concluded with the pointed statement, "whatever the initiatives and incomprehensives of other communist parties, we will continue on our path."

Berlinguer Comments on Poland

LD152200 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1830 GMT 15 Feb 81

[Text] The closing speech at the National Assembly of the Fiat group of communists provided the opportunity for Berlinguer to reply, albeit indirectly, to the Soviet accusations against the PCI attitude on the Polish question. Whatever the initiatives or lack of understanding on the part of the other communist parties, Berlinguer said, we will continue on our way in full autonomy for our activity, both internal and international. The Communist secretary maintained that repressive measures in Poland would be all the more absurd in the face of a protest which was born from the midst of the working class, and that any violation of a people's sovereignty is inadmissible.

PCI Official Views Conflict

[Roberto (Viraino) interview with Luciano Barca, member of the PCI Secretariat--live]

[Question] Berlinguer decides not to go to the CPSU Congress in Moscow, and someone leaks what we may call a Soviet reprimand on the Polish question. Are you then at daggers drawn with the Soviet party?

[Answer] I do not believe that "daggers drawn" is the right expression. Undoubtedly, on the Polish question, we have had, and did not conceal it, some differences both with the CPSU and with some other communist parties. We have our own stance on the Polish question, we have held a discussion, a debate on it in our party, and we also stated publicly that we informed the other communist parties of our party's operation. It is nothing new that we have, as I have previously said, at least four points of dissension: We believe that at the root of the Polish question there is the fact that a vast section of the working class no longer recognises itself in the trade union and not in the party either which reveals a deep-seated social, economic and political crisis; second, in our opinion the leadership role of a party is not gained once and for all but must be constantly regained by proving the ability to select the main problems of a nation, the third point is that everything cannot be reduced to hostile thrusts against socialism: the thrusts are there, the maneuvers are there; the problem is to isolate them, and to do that it is necessary to respond positively to the problems through profound renewal: and finally there is the crucial point that there must be no outside interference and that any military intervention would have been and would be unacceptable. These are the points which we have made known to the others and about which we made no mystery.

[Question] I will not mention excommunication because whenever anyone does so you communists say at once: but there is no mother church which must be honored. But one question remains: what is the meaning of the Moscow Communists charge of antisocialism against you?

[Answer] I would not say that the Moscow communists charge us with antisocialism. There is the statement saying that we have given support to antisocialist forces. To this, I have already replied. In my opinion, there are antisocialist forces in Poland, and it would be absurd to believe that, on top of everything even after the mistakes which have been made, a 100 percent lineup [words indistinct] and to give up through fear of these forces or because of the area they might gain, undertaking the job of renewal. These forces will gain more ground if this work is not undertaken.

[Question] It is said that Romania is already feeling the contagion from Poland.

[Answer] I believe that to a different extent certain problems relating to trade unions, to political rights and to participation exist in all the countries of socialism [word indistinct].

[Question] There is one ever-recurring question: the problem of the political legitimacy of the communist party in relation to what it does or does not do in agreement with or in dissent from Moscow. Is the case of Poland an element of this age-old question or is it marginal?

[Answer] Well, obviously for the others it is not a marginal matter and it is an element of what you call an age-old question. I believe that our legitimacy comes from what we have done in Italy, from the answers we have given to [words indistinct] which confirm that we are keeping to a consistent line.

PAPER REPORTS ON EXPULSION OF SOVIET DIPLOMATS

[Text] Rome, 14 Feb (ANSA)--Six Soviet diplomats were expelled from Italy in a period of two years, according to the Roman newsweekly L'ESPRESSO. The weekly reported in its edition due on newstands Monday, particularly on one of the Soviet diplomats uncovered as a spy by the Italian military counter-espionage service.

L'ESPRESSO identified the diplomat as Anatoly Zazouline, who arrived in Rome at the beginning of 1979 with the rank of military attache at the Soviet Embassy. He was replaced by Boris Ossikine who was also later expelled when it was discovered that he was an agent of CRU, the Soviet counter-espionage service.

Zazouline made contact with employees of Selenia, the radar equipment industry, and Ottico Meccanica Italiana, an electronic company. The Soviet diplomat was caught by Italian military counter-espionage agents while he was searching for drawings which, according to agreements made with employees of the two companies, were supposed to be hidden in an area on the outskirts of Rome.

NEWSPAPER REPORTS 'ARAFAT DENIAL OF TERRORISM AID

[Text] Rome, 14 Feb (ANSA)--Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) leader Yasir 'Arafat denied any relationship between the PLO and Italian political terrorists in a recent meeting with a Rome magistrate, according to the Rome newsweekly, L'ESPRESSO.

The weekly said in its edition due on the newsstands Monday that 'Arafat issued the denial when investigating Judge Domenico Sica went to Beirut recently to interview the PLO chief in connection with his ongoing enquiries into Italian terrorism.

According to L'ESPRESSO, 'Arafat condemned Italian urban guerrillas such as the Red Brigades and made a sharp distinction between European terrorists and movements fighting for national liberation. 'Arafat admitted helping the latter, L'ESPRESSO said. But he did not rule out that Italians may have joined other Europeans at Palestinian camps open to volunteers for the battle against Israel.

The weekly said, however, that 'Arafat voiced the conviction they were not terrorists, also specifying that the last Europeans attended PLO camps in 1970. L'ESPRESSO said that in his meeting with the magistrate, 'Arafat "categorically denied" that the PLO had ever supplied arms to Italian urban guerrillas.

Charges to this effect have been advanced by some "repentant" Italian terrorists who decided to turn state evidence and reported arms purchases in Beirut from Palestinian organizations. But, as 'Arafat pointed out, "Beirut is an open arms market the PLO has nothing to do with it."

PLO Terrorism Links Checked

[Text] Beirut, 14 Feb (ANSA)--Italian investigating magistrate Domenico Sica has been in Beirut for the last four days for a complex investigation on international terrorism, focusing in particular on the mysterious disappearance of the Shiite religious leader Imam Moussa Sadr and hypothetical links between Palestinian guerrillas and Italian political terrorists. Sica arrived here in secrecy Tuesday and has already questioned Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) leader Yasir 'Arafat and the last persons who saw Moussa Sadr alive.

The magistrate told ANSA today that he is in Lebanon to gather information on the Moussa Sadr affair. "I questioned several witnesses and received documentation from Lebanese authorities. The trip has been useful. Certain details of a rather complicated picture are clearer".

Sica has been following the investigation into Moussa Sadr's dissappearance from the beginning. The Lebanese Shiite imam disappeared from Tripoli in September 1978.

The Libyan Government said that he had departed for Rome, but the investigation in Italy ascertained that another person arrived in the imam's place. The Lebanese Shiite community has repeatedly explicitly charged that Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi ordered the imam kidnapped.

ANSA has learned from authoritative sources that there are two aspects to Sica's trip to Lebanon. In addition to the Moussa Sadr affair, Sica made "informal" conflict with 'Arafat and other PLO officials to gather information on terroroism in Italy and particularly on the Red Brigades urban guerrilla organization. Sica did not admit or deny that he met the PLO leader.

Well-informed Palestinian sources, however, report that they had a long talk in which 'Arafat reiterated that the Palestinian organziation has never backed terrorism in Italy.

According to the sources, 'Arafat added that it cannot be ruled out that some Italians who in the past had joined Palestinian guerrillas as "volunteers", later joined the Red Brigades. For the future, however, the PLO leader assured his support in preventing that weapons or aid for Italian terrorists leave Lebanon. Other PLO leaders also were said to have made the same assurances.

With respect to Moussa Sadr, leaders of the Lebanese Shiite community requested the meeting with Sica. The Shiites claim they can prove the imam was kidnapped by the Libyan secret service and wanted to make available the results of their investigations to the Italian magistrate.

Well-informed Lebanese sources report that Sica had a "private" encounter with the vice president of the Shiite Superior Council, Mohammad Shams-ad-Din. On the basis of the information he received, the Italian investigator then officially questioned several witnesses who saw the imam in Beirut and in Tripoli before his disappearance.

Sica will depart for Rome this afternoon. While in Beirut he moved around in utmost secrecy, even changing hotel to avoid newsmen who were able to track him down only this morning.

UCD CHAIRMAN SUPPORTS CALVO SOTELO CANDIDACY

LD162330 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 16 Feb 81

[Excerpts] The UCD [Union of the Democratic Center] Executive Committee met today, and held a press conference afterwards. Here is Juan Jose Campos with a report: At the end of its meeting at noon today, the UCD Executive Committee gave its unanimous support to Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo, the party's candidate for prime minister. This was announced by party Chairman Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun at the press conference.

Further in the press conference, Rodriguez Sahagun said this unanimous support by the Executive Committee for Calvo Sotelo's program demonstrates that the necessary levels of integration have been achieved within the UCD. Replying subsequently to another question, Rodriguez Sahagun added that for him the "officialist" and "critical" dialectic ceased to exist with the end of the UCD second congress.

The centrist party chairman also said he will represent the party at the investiture debate and vote. This, he said, should not be interpreted as a loss of confidence in the centrist group spokesman Herrero de Minon who, he said, continues to enjoy my full confidence.

Rodriguez Sahagun also said the party will grant what he called an internal amnesty in connection with all the unresolved disputes within the UCD, including the disupte concerning the Badajoz deputy Sanchez de Leon who was recently expelled from the party.

Asked what repercussions the death of alleged ETA member Jose Arregue might have on the investiture vote, Rodriguez Sahagun said the matter might well be cleared up before the investiture debate, because probably tomorrow--if the officials of congress agree to it--there will be a debate in the chamber on an interpellation in connection with this event.

PSUC GIVEN GUIDELINES FOR EUROCOMMUNISM DEBATE

LD161439 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 10 Feb 81 p 12

[Unattributed report: "Central Committee Tones Down Congress Resolutions"]

[Text] The Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC] Central Committee, meeting over the weekend, has approved a report which will serve as a basis for the debate initiated in this party as a result of its last congress. In fact the document drafted to contribute to the debate constitutes an attempt to tone down and supplement the contradictory points approved at the fifth congress.

Together with the points of reference which the Catalonian Communists' Central Committee provides for guiding the debate, the report also indicates the channels through which it should proceed until the end of April, when a synthesis of the conclusions which are reached will begin to be effected.

This report, drafted by the Communists' Executive Committee, was approved by the Central Committee in the early hours of Monday morning with 78 votes in favor, 18 against and 4 abstentions. Contrary to what might have been expected, it was not the "hardliners" or "pro-Soviets" who voted against, despite the fact that the policy which emerges from the report tones down many of their proposals and substantially restricts the blueprints underlying several of their proposals.

Only a section of the Eurocommunist current opposed the report because it believed that the document did not dispel the confusion and that the party's Eurocommunist nature was not fully restored. It may be emphasized that this did not include Antonio Gutierrez Diaz, who voted in favor, or Jordi Sole Tura or Jordi Borja, who were unable to attend.

Democratic Centralism

In addition, the meeting of the PSUC Central Committee represents an important milestone with respect to its internal dynamic. As Secretary General Francisco Frutos stated at a press conference, "Organizational work and democratic centralism have been fully restored." In line with the statements embodied in the above-mentioned document, "the debate must proceed in the party's associations and committees," without, however, ruling out the holding of public meetings. The results of the debate "will follow the path running from the associations to the Central Committee, within the party's regular structure," as will be recalled, these channels were not totally adhered to prior to the congress.

The approved report links many of the fifth congress decisions with previous theoretical formulations, to some of which Lopez Raimundo and Gutierrez Díaz made an important contribution, as is recalled. The document also specifies that, together with "internal democratization, which has been taken to its final conclusions," there has been a certain distancing between the leadership and the party grassroots, "which have expressed themselves in the form of rejection of our policy." The ability to decide and to change displaced by the delegates to the congress is positively assessed.

Theoretical Links

With respect to the term "Eurocommunism," it is emphasized that at the third PSUC national conference in December 1979, "there was talk of Eurocommunism, and it was given a communist class content," at all events, while recognizing the semantic imprecision of this word, it is asserted "that it has an unequivocal interpretation with respect to strategy... and at this level it is accepted everywhere as a description revealing a policy within the framework of the revolution of the majority." Since the term "Eurocommunism" does not appear in the program approved at the fifth congress, the report specifies "that its use is not compulsory," adding next "that the party should not fear its use as a description of political activities which may help to define and disseminate the blueprint for a revolution of the majority."

International Policy

The amendment concerning international policy approved at the fifth congress, which defines "confrontation between the socialist countries and imperialism as one of the principal manifestations of the class struggle at the international level," should be clarified "by an unambiguous statement which could be summarized as advocating a struggle for peace, against world bipolarization and for the party's independence in its stances and formulations."

The PCE Executive Committee plenum statement listing the essential elements of "what is known as Eurocommunist policy" will also be the subject of deliberation in the debates. Nevertheless, the PCE is reminded of "the difficulties and confusions created by the various alarmist statements of some of the PCE leaders and the Executive Committee resolution itself."

Kiprianou Remarks

[Excerpts] President Kiprianou has expressed full satisfaction with his talks in Bonn. The talks, Kiprianou said, were a total success. They were useful and fundamental in content.

The president of the republic, who returned yesterday from the FRG, stated today that during his talks with Chancellor Schmidt, which covered all aspects of the Cyprus problem, he fully briefed the FRG leader on latest developments and on the fact that dailogue has not progressed to fruitful results due to the Turkish position. International issues were also discussed together with the question of bilateral relations. The two leaders agreed on the further development of these relations.

In reference to the negotiation of the new agreement within the framework of the second phase of Cyprus' attachment to the European Community, Kiprianou said he received a tacit promise for FRG support on Cyprus' request for better conditions for Cypriot agrarian products exports. Kiprianou added that Schmidt and other interlocutors demonstrated a strong interest on the specific question of the missing persons as well as on the Cyprus issue in general.

Referring to reports about an FRG initiative on the Cyprus issue, President Kiprianou said no of intervention outside UN limits. We asked, he added, the FRG Government to contribute toward the proper direction to aid progress within the framework of the talks being conducted under UN auspices.

In conclusion, the president of the republic expressed the belief that there will be a sequel to the contacts with the FRG and with its leaders on whatever affects the Cyprus problem.

O AGON REPORTS FRG INTEREST IN CYPRUS ISSUE

NC150842 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 15 Feb 81 p 2

[From the "Our Positions" column: "Interest but to What Degree?"]

[Text] The joint communique on the Kiprianou-Schmidt talks held in Bonn speaks of the interest demonstrated by the West German leader in the peaceful solution of the Cyprus issues.

Naturally, it is good that West Germany should be interested in the solution of the Cyprus issue. The question, however, is how far does this interest stretch. If this is the kind of interest which we also have in the solution of various problems--as for example the Kampuchea and Afghan problems--in which we cannot intervene, then this is not enough.

What is needed is an active interest and the implementation of the influence which West Germany has upon Turkey, should it want to and has the ability to implement. The joint communique makes no mention of this.

What the communique fails to mention, however, was touched upon by the president of the republic in his statements. Deviating from previous positions, that is that the grant of aid to Turkey increases its intransigence, Kiprianou stated that the provision of such aid does give West Germany both the opportunity and the right to exercize its influence. This is a clear contradiction to our previous positions but this is not the issue at this moment.

What we must try to establish is the point to which this German interest will reach. We hope it will not be an academic interest. We also hope that we will also contribute toward making this interest not merely an academic interest with our own policy. An active interest was demonstrated by West Germany in the past in a very specific way, but various acts on our part turned this interest into a lack of interest. Let us hope that this renewed interest, if it truly does exist, will not have the same fate.

KIPRIANOU WARNS AGAINST DOMESTIC INSTABILITY

NC160852 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 16 Feb 81 p 8

[Excerpts] Speaking yesterday at the second pan-Cyprian regular congress of the youth of the Democratic Party, President of the Republic Spiros Kiprianou warned that unless trends toward instability which have appeared recently stop, they could lead to calamity.

In reference to the matter, Kiprianou stated: "Certain trends toward instability have appeared recently. We will make every necessary effort to protect stability. I am not meting out responsibilities at this moment. I am simply making a warning that unless this trend toward instability stops, this country could be destroyed and the responsibility will rest with its liberty, with 40 percent of its territory still under foreign occupation, and which has 200,000 refugees.

"It is imperative that smooth labor and industrial relations prevail so that we can salvage our economy, guaranteeing its stability. This is an imperative and basic factor not only for the social elevation of the people but also for the continuation of the Cypriot struggle for liberty. All of us must work hard, the government and the interested organizations, in an effort to end the current situation which, if continued, could complete the calamity thus completing the work of the enemies of Cyprus. We must all understand our responsibilities toward the people and to the future of our country. We will protect democracy and the democratic process, through which all problems must be solved, as we would protect our very eyes. For this reason I appeal to everyone to cooperate with sincerity, calm and a sense of responsibility with the government so that we may be able to cope with the situation.

"Whatever depends upon the state will be undertaken, bearing in mind the interests of the people. I hope that we will soon be able to solve the various problems so that the normal rhythm of life returns to the free regions of Cyprus. Naturally, it would be utopian for us to expect that there be no tension in the situation at this time in view of the coming elections. This, however, is a different thing altogether.

"Tension during the preelection period can be confined to democratic limits, acceptable from the viewpoint of political morality.

"There is a tendency toward easy slander which varies in accordance to its origins.

"The government and the president are always the targets. We have a simple answer: The slanderers and the underminers will fail."

IOANNIDHIS CALLS ON TURKISH SIDE FOR FIRST STEP

NC161006 Nicosia DHIMOKRATIA in Greek 16 Feb 81 pp 1,8

"It is expected that Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot side, who hold the key which can open the door leading to conciliation and to an acceptable compromise, will take the first satisfactory steps towards the resettlement of Varosha, always in accordance with the Kiprianou-Denktas summit agreement. This would also test their desire for a logical and viable solution for both communities.

"If there are to be steps toward conciliation on our party," Ioannidhis stated, "It will be necessary to have collective study, collective responsibility and a collective decision. The cause of Cyprus is a cause which affects all the people and their survival. This is a national cause which transcends the responsibility of individual persons and becomes the responsibility and the cause of the nation and is the responsibility of all people."

DENKTAS CRITICIZES ROLANDHIS' CONFERENCE SPEECH

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the speech delivered by the minister of foreign affairs of the Greek Cypriot administration, Nikolaos Rolandhis, at the nonaligned countries conference, is another example showing that the promises made to continue the intercommunal talks in a positive atmosphere are not being kept.

Noting that in his speech Rolandhis continued his immoral attack against the Turkish Cypriot community, Denktas said: We shall not forget this. We chose not to address the Islamic Conference summit because we could not have addressed it without criticizing the attitude and policy of the Greek Cypriots and we thus demonstrated our good will. We implemented an agreement which we thought existed. However, as soon as the Islamic Conference was over, Rolandhis chose to forget this agreement and resumed his attacks.

DENKTAS: NONALIGNED RESOLUTION NOT BINDING

TA161735 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 16 Feb 81

[Text] The president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Rauf Denktas, has said that the resolution on Cyprus adopted by the nonaligned foreign ministers conference is not binding on the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. Commenting on the resolution, Denktas said: Resolutions that do not recognize the equality of the two peoples of Cyprus or their partnership rights in the founding of the sovereignty of Cyprus are bound to remain ineffective.

President Denktas stressed that the efforts made by the Greek Cypriot administration to have such a resolution passed by the Nonaligned Conference further exacerbated the lack of trust between the two communities--the basis of the Cyprus problem. He added that the resolution (?destroyed) the atmosphere of good will necessary for the success of the intercommunal talks.

Denktas expressed the hope that several Islamic countries would announce their opposition to the resolution. Denktas noted that Algeria voted in favor of the resolution and that the vote was incompatible with the spirit of Islam or the Islamic Conference.

[Statement by President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus Rauf Denktas to the Turkish Radio Television on occasion of the sixth anniversary of the establishment of the Federated State--date and place not given; recorded]

[Text] On this historic anniversary, I believe it is beneficial to briefly state how the Turkish Cypriot community has become a federated state. The word "federated" gives one the impression that there is a federation in Cyprus. However, such a federation has not yet been established. Efforts are being exerted for the future formation of such a federation. We do not know whether these efforts will be successful; it is also beneficial to look at the reasons on this day.

Above all, we should know this fact: When the Republic of Cyprus was established in 1960, the Turkish Cypriots had inalienable rights in the sovereignty and independence of this republic. We call these rights "the cofounder partnership rights." The 1960 agreements were signed in line with these rights and no one has the right or the authority--legally or from the viewpoint of realities--to refer to a minority community and a majority Greek Cypriot community in Cyprus.

Two national communities, through agreements, established a partnership system based on two national communities. We were hoping that the guarantees stipulated in the agreements that brought about this partnership system and in the constitution would enable the Turkish Cypriot community to lead a happy life and would secure its freedom. As you know, the Greek Cypriots had a completely different view. They viewed the 1960 republic as a transitory stage and wanted to use it as a spring board to enosis. They prepared the Akritas plan according to these views. They set up their secret armies. They created trouble and disturbances for 3 years in order not to grant the Turkish Cypriots the rights stipulated by the constitution.

Following a signal from Makarios, attacks against the Turkish Cypriots started in 1963. The aim of these attacks was to eliminate the partnership republic and to establish a Greek Cypriot republic. Consequently, the road to enosis would be opened.

These attacks lasted 11 years, during which, on various occasions, Makarios proposed to grant minority rights to our community, thus revealing his real intentions. If the minority rights were accepted, the partnership system would be destroyed, there would be no need to guarantee and the road to enosis would be opened.

The Turkish Cypriot community--relying on the motherland--defended with sacrifice these inalienable rights. We have suffered much, we have lost much. We lost our brothers, our villages. Thousands of Turkish Cypriots lived as refugees for years. However, we continued to defend our rights. Not a single Turkish Cypriot accepted the rights and authority of the Greek Cypriot administration which Makarios formed and named "the Cyprus Government." These rights and authorities did not affect the Turkish Cypriots who were resisting in the Turkish Cypriot regions.

When there was a last attempt to achieve enosis through a coup in 1974, Turkey rightly intervened and saved us, together with our freedom and rights, which we had defended with our life and blood for 11 years. Turkey saved the independence of Cyrpus. Guarantees were important to us. We had a right to live freely and independently. Based on these rights we formed a state in the north. In other words, we established an administration by concentrating, in the north, our rights within the Republic of Cyprus, the Turkish Cypriot rights within a state that was based on two communities.

With a referendum, we called this administration "The Turkish Federated State of Cyprus". We used the word "federated" with good intentions because there could be no other safe solution but a bizonal and bicommunal federation.

MINISTER DENIES REPORTS ON TELEPHONE TAPPING

[Text] In reference to yesterday's report in the morning newspaper (not ELEVTHERI KIPROS) on the tapping of private telephones by the Central Intelligence Service, KYP, Interior Minister Veniamin made the following statement.

"Today's reports about KYP's alleged tapping of private telephones are completely devoid of truth. As stated in the past, the service limits itself to executing its duties, which are related to the state's security. The service is under the control of the interior minister and its officers and members enjoy the absolute confidence of the government."

I KATHIMERINI ON MILITARY BASES NEGOTIATIONS

[Editorial: "It Does Not Flatter Them!"]

[Text] It seems that our U.S. friends continue to commit critical error concerning our foreign policy. They believe, because this is what happened in the past, that everything can be imposed upon us by third parties, that it is easy for those third parties to make us believe their interests are also our own, even though these may be blatantly opposed to our national rights. One cannot explain differently why the Americans, arguing that the broader interests of the Atlantic alliance will be better served, are so obstinate in insisting that we concede to the Turks our national responsibilities that are inseparably linked with the concept of sovereignty over our national area.

However, if there is some limitation to our initiatives for charting and exercising foreign policy, this limitation emanates solely from the European Community, unconventionally, of course, but no less substantively, because it is inconceivable for Greece, as for any EEC member country, to establish relations outside the community, even within the NATO framework, that would bind or hinder it from conducting with the other Nine a common European policy. As time passes, "Europe" tries harder to chart its own international policy which many times is contrary to that of the United States. "Nonalignment," in this sense, is absolutely valid for the kind of military bases which the Americans want to establish on Greek soil. This is another aspect of our foreign policy which Washington apparently has not understood or does not want to understand.

No compulsion springs from the official position: "We belong to the West." It is the will of the overwhelming majority of the Greek people not to "belong to the East." Should this will change--when the party or parties which are working so that we may "belong to the East" win the majority of the Greek people over to their viewpoint--then and only then will persistence to the contrary mean compulsion. Only then will third parties be able to extort so that the "compellers" can remain in power!

Neither participation in NATO nor the goal for the return to its military wing, following the 5-year withdrawal, leave margin for considering it as our "weak side," which can also afford opportunities for blackmail. The character of postwar Europe has been strictly determined. It has been separated into three groups of states: those states that belong to NATO, those that belong to the Warsaw Pact and those which, through the agreement of the superpowers, enjoy neutrality. It is the "fait accompli" of the European division that has given birth to the policy of detente, of peaceful coexistence.

"Detente" is threatened only when the USSR's good relations with the industrial West are interrupted, and "peaceful coexistence" is not respected in any part of the world except Europe. In the rest of the world, the policy of expansion, of the effort for influence, is the rule.

Should a European country seek to change this acknowledged European political character it will appear as though it were seeking to disturb detente, and deny "peaceful coexistence" in Europe. This is logical since the country that may attempt to place itself outside the "category" into which it has been placed, despite its will, would appear to be provoking the two blocs into a confrontation over which bloc finally will attract the "nonaligned" state. It is precisely this refusal by Europe to involve itself in the policy of "expansion," which is valid for the rest of the world and the "nonaligned," that allows Europeans to refuse their being used by the Americans as a weapon for the success of U.S. aims in other parts of the world. Greece has neither the will nor the "guts" to create problems for Europe by abandoning NATO.

This does not mean that Greece has some special trust and respect for NATO beyond its specific use. Proof of this is that Greece is asking that the balance of firepower between itself and Turkey should not be disturbed, since it is sure that it is not NATO which will discourage the aggressive intentions of its allied neighbors but its own readiness. The same thought dictates the demand for American guarantees for the territorial integrity of Greece as a prerequisite for the negotiation of the status of Greek bases, bases which, after all, should have a purely defensive purpose in order to safeguard peaceful coexistence and at the same time be linked with the defensive protection of the recipient country. Otherwise, what meaning would there be in offering ourselves to the Western world's defense organization and not be included, defensively, in the same world?

The above truths are too simple, too visible to leave margins for misinterpretations or to be ignored. Therefore, what do our friends in Washington think they will gain by insisting on arrangements concerning the bases and the operational control [of the Aegean] which blatantly oppose these truths? Do they think that we will return to the era when others, foreigners, dictated our foreign policy, a policy that usually ran contrary to our national interests and to peace in the area in which we live? Let us not believe this. It does not flatter them.

NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL AMENDS CITIZENSHIP LAW

[Text] The National Security Council has adopted a bill amending the Turkish citizenship law. According to the bill, children born to a Turkish mother or father whether in Turkey or abroad will be considered Turkish citizens from birth. Requests to renounce Turkish citizenship or to acquire the citizenship of another country will be submitted to the nearest administrative governor's office or to Turkish consulates abroad. The application will be sent to the Interior Ministry after completion. If the person wishing to renounce Turkish citizenship is already the citizen of another country his denaturalization document will be granted immediately. If this person is not the citizen of another state he will first be granted a permit [to attain another citizenship] and the denaturalization document will be granted after he has submitted a document showing that he has acquired the citizenship of another state. The Interior Ministry may grant a permit prepared in line with the regulations determined by the Council of Ministers, to persons who wish to acquire the citizenship of another state. Those who have received such a document will have to submit the necessary information and documents to the Interior Ministry within 3 years.

Persons who have received a denaturalization document will no longer be considered Turkish citizens. Those who have willingly acquired the citizenship of a foreign state and those who have acquired the citizenship of another state through any other way, who have resided abroad uninterruptedly for 7 years, who have made no official contacts or undertaken any official procedures showing that they would like to preserve their Turkish citizenship and who have severed their ties with Turkey during that time may be denaturalized.

If persons who have engaged, outside Turkey, in activities undermining the domestic and foreign economic and financial security of the Turkish Republic, and if persons who have engaged in similar activities in Turkey and who have subsequently left the country and who cannot be prosecuted or who cannot serve their sentences do not return to Turkey within 3 months of a call to return they may also be denaturalized. The 3-month period will be reduced to 1 month in case of war, martial law or emergency situations.

The minor children of denaturalized fathers will also be denaturalized if the mother is deceased, is a foreigner or if the father has custody. If persons who have been denaturalized or who have lost their Turkish citizenship for any reason apply for citizenship within 2 years of their denaturalization they may be granted citizenship by the Council of Ministers in the event there are no complications. Minors who were born to Turkish mothers between the time the citizenship law was adopted in 1964 and the time the law was amended, but who have not yet acquired Turkish citizenship will be considered Turkish citizens from the time of their birth if their mothers, fathers or guardians make the necessary applications. Those whose mothers, fathers or guardians have not made an application for Turkish citizenship will be granted Turkish citizenship if they apply for it within 3 years of having attained majority.

The law will go into effect after having been published in the Official Gazette.

OZAL ON JAPAN TRIP RESULTS, U.S. TRIP PLANS

TA131523 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 13 Feb 81

[Statement by State and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal on the telephone from Tokyo--recorded]

[Text] We arrived in Tokyo on Sunday and started our contacts on Monday. During these contacts, we met with certain Japanese ministers; the ministers of planning and foreign trade and industry as well as the foreign minister. We also visited the prime minister today.

Tomorrow, I am scheduled to meet with the finance minister. We also held contacts with the Overseas Economic Cooperation Fund of Japan--which extends loans to Turkey--and the [word indistinct] bank. In addition, we held contacts with the Economic Federation of Japan together with the private sector delegation which is accompanying me. We signed the agreements concerning the loans extended by the Overseas Economic Cooperation Fund to Turkey during 1979 and 1980. Meanwhile, we reached an agreement on principle regarding the use of the 1979 and 1980 loans with the [word indistinct] bank. We tried to explain our foreign [word indistinct] for 1981 during our meetings with the relevant ministers and organizations.

We believe that the private sector delegation accompanying us also held contacts. One of the most important contacts with Japan since 1970 has thus been concluded. I am hopeful about receiving a significant amount of aid from Japan during 1981.

We leave Japan for the United States tomorrow night. I will hold contacts in Los Angeles on Monday. On Tuesday I will arrive in Washington. I will meet with U.S. ministers as well as with World Bank and IMF officials on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

IRANIAN CHARGE ASSURES GOVERNMENT OF OIL SUPPLY

TA151601 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1535 GMT 15 Feb 81

[Text] Ankara 15 Feb (AA)--Iran has no territorial claims on other countries but will fight Iraq to the very end until she recaptures the lost land, Iran's new charge d'affairs in Ankara, Professor Ebul Kassem Ejdehati told the ANATOLIA NEWS AGENCY.

He said Iran was aware of Turkey's difficult position in the Iran-Iraq war and merely wished the Turkish public to acknowledge the fact that it was Iraq who attacked Iran in the first place.

On the recent Islamic summit held in At-Ta'if, Saudi Arabia, the Iranian envoy said it was strange to note that no government condemned Saddam Husayn at the meeting though the entire world knows that Iraq is the aggressor. He made it clear that Iran would never attend these Islamic conferences as long as "people like Saddam Husayn, who are the real enemies of Islam," take part.

Mr Ejdehati noted that Iran wished to improve her commercial and economic ties with Turkey and was ready to provide as much oil as Turkey requested. He denied press reports that Turkish was banned in Iran.

"This is absolutely not true. In Tabriz, the Friday prayers are read in Turkish. Such reports are being fabricated to disturb the friendly relations between Turkey and Iran," he said.

INVESTMENT PROJECTS, TRADE WITH LIBYA DISCUSSED

TA140643 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0500 GMT 14 Feb 81

[Text] Turkish firms will carry out a significant portion of the $55 billion worth of investments envisaged by Libya for the duration of the next 5 years. This was announced by the secretary of the Libyan People's Committee in Ankara, (Imran Sikuri), at a meeting in Istanbul where the various problems of the 30 Turkish firms working in Libya were discussed. (Sikuri) also said that the trade volume between the two countries would reach $500 million by the end of the year. He added that certain countries were making intensive efforts to prevent Turkey from marketing their goods in the Islamic countries which were turned into traditional markets of the Western countries.

Addressing the meeting, PLO representatives in Turkey Abu Firas stressed that Turkey had a great potential for exporting water to the Gulf countries.

Abu Firas stated that the Palestinians were fighting not only to liberate the Holy Land but to bring stability to the region. The Turkish contractors working in Libya discussed their various problems and decided to set up a Turkish contractors association.

SCHMIDT SENDS BEST WISHES TO NEW POLISH PREMIER

[Text] Bonn, 17 Feb (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has emphasized his "firm conviction" that the Polish People's Republic will peacefully solve its current problems itself. This was stated by Schmidt in a telegram conveying his best wishes to the new Polish premier, Wojciech Jaruzelski, on his "exceptionally important and responsible tasks."

The chancellor stresses in the telegram published by the Federal Press Office on Tuesday that the further development of relations between the Federal Republic and Poland on the basis of the progress achieved remains an important goal for those in charge in both states. "In this way, we are at the same time making an essential contribution to preserving peace and the well-being of the people of Europe."

CHANCELLOR TO EXPLAIN ARMS SALE POLICY TO SAUDIS

[Text] Bonn, 17 Feb (DPA)--During his visit to Saudi Arabia in the next 6 months, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will explain the Federal Government's attitude with regard to the desired arms deliveries. In an interview in Wednesday's edition of KOELNER STADT-ANZEIGER, the chancellor also said he hopes there will be a second round of negotiations between the United States and the USSR on limiting nuclear medium-range weapons in central Europe.

Schmidt also came out against renewed discussion on the deployment of American neutron weapons in Europe and said he is convinced the Federal Government's ability to act has not been impaired by recent tensions within the SPD and its Bundestag group.

The chancellor said he wanted to clarify in Saudi Arabia Bonn's foreign and domestic political considerations "which urge us to exercise great care and restraint." Any rejection of the wish for German arms supplies would not be regarded by Saudi Arabia as an "unfriendly act." The result of a rejection could, however, be that Saudi Arabia's relations with Great Britain and Paris could develop more positively than relations with the Federal Republic. Moreover, Schmidt's impression at the moment is that Saudi Arabia is more likely to receive weapons from the United States or France than from the Federal Republic.

The chancellor again expressed Bonn's interest in stabilizing Saudi Arabia's external security, to whom there is cause "to be grateful" for its policy within OPEC on the development of the oil market. The question of supplying German arms, however, requires consideration of the interests of Bonn's other partners and friends in that region and worldwide, particularly the interests of Israel and Egypt, the EEC and the United States.

Against the background of the NATO decision to arm the West with medium-range weapons as a response to the USSR's arming in this sector while offering negotiations on arms limitation, Schmidt has no doubt there will be a second round of negotiations after the first round between Washington and Moscow in Geneva last year. The chancellor said: "I have no reason at all to assume that this time the Americans will refuse to continue the negotiations; quite the opposite." He said to assume the Russians want to negotiate and the Americans do not is "nonsense."

Schmidt declined to participate in a discussion on the deployment of American neutron weapons by saying: One should not cross bridges before coming to them. New U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger explicitly stated his private opinion on this. Bonn had not been consulted or informed at all by the American Government on this question. Referring to earlier statements by SPD arms expert Egon Bahr, who described the neutron bomb as a "perversion of thinking," Schmidt spoke of "astonishing one-sidedness" without objective analysis if this weapon--because of its effect only on people and not on objects--is classed as a "perverse development."

In view of recent disputes within the SPD, Schmidt admitted that in the new legislative period it will not always be easy to get the full number of coalition deputies to vote for the government's plans every time. At the moment, this applies in particular to the SPD parliamentary group. Behavior of this kind is, however, completely normal. "It is not the job of parliamentary majorities to eat out of the government's hand." He does not, however, believe "governing will be made increasingly difficult for me." Schmidt also regards submission to a vote of confidence in parliament as "a quite normal instrument" to which he had alluded occasionally in past years. In this respect, there is, at present, "no new situation."

ISRAELI GROUP OPPOSES ARMS DEAL WITH SAUDI ARABIA

[Excerpt] Bonn, 17 Feb (DPA)--An Israeli parliamentary delegation in Bonn today objected strongly to a possible arms deal between the Federal Republic and Saudi Arabia. The six deputies led by Knesset Deputy Speaker Moshe Meron said in a talk with Bundestag President Richard Stuecklen that the delivery of German Leopard II tanks to the Saudis would be felt as a threat in Israel.

According to the Bundestag press office, the Israeli deputies did not accept Stuecklen's argument that Saudi Arabia might make its export of oil to the Federal Republic dependent on arms deliveries. They stressed that Bonn must not let itself be blackmailed. The Federal Republic has, since the time of Adenauer, always put Israel's security to the fore. Moreover, the Saudis are so dependent on the United States that they are unlikely to blackmail the Federal Republic.

The Israeli parliamentarians are at present on a 4-day visit to Bonn and intend to discuss, among other things, current political developments in the Middle and Near East and the state of relations between the United States and Europe, including the Federal Republic and Israel.

SPD'S WEHNER VIEWS PARTY PROBLEMS, ARMS POLICY

[Excerpts] Bonn, 17 Feb (DPA)--The chairman of the SPD parliamentary group in the lower house, Herbert Wehner, warned his party against making the Federal Government's policies more difficult as a result of its conflicts regarding nuclear energy policy and the NATO decision on medium-range missiles. In an interview with North German Radio (NDR) today, Wehner warned at the same time that the SPD through its action should not jeopardize the reliability of the Free Democrats as coalition partners and he called on his party to remain open to compromise toward the FDP.

The SPD politician said that his concern about the danger of a split in his party or of splinter groups, splitting or paralyzing the government had not yet been removed. The five-point program, however, adopted by the party executive to overcome internal party tensions can, according to Wehner, put discussion on the SPD's tasks in the difficult international and economic situation on a practical footing.

With regard to NATO's decision, Wehner stressed his view that the need to counterarm as a result of the superiority of Soviet arms "must be inseparably linked with efforts for negotiations" between the United States and the Soviet Union. It was politically "almost stupid" particularly at the present time when it was not yet known how relations with the Soviet Union would begin or develop further under the new leadership, to start a quarrel within the SPD "as if the decision could now be reversed."

Noting the growing concern, Wehner said that discussion in Europe and Germany will be more difficult if the United States does not follow through on its expressed readiness for serious negotiations with the Soviet Union.

"On the other hand, I do not expect U.S. policy to pay very much attention to either intra-German or West European opinion makers." The Federal Republic should do everything in its power to achieve a balance by arms limitations. "One cannot turn this around at will," Wehner said. First, limiting arms in the West in the expectation that the other side also will do so is a very difficult situation for the Federal Government, chancellor and foreign minister "and we should not make it more difficult."

Wehner reaffirmed his view that the SPD parliamentary group will not approve the export of tanks to Saudi Arabia, presently under consideration by the Federal Government. He said he understood the motives and reasons for this. However, it is important to consider how the government should free itself of obligations which exist in relations with countries like Saudi Arabia on whose oil, for example, the Federal Government is dependent.

On the whole, Wehner does not expect the "large majority" of his parliamentary group to support the export of weapons and arms to countries outside NATO unless every deputy could be absolutely sure that these arms would not be used in places the parliamentary group would not like. The group's negative attitude also applied, as Wehner underlined, to the Federal Government's originally-planned export of two submarines to Chile.

REPORTAGE ON EAGLEBURGER'S MISSION TO BONN

[Excerpt] Bonn, 17 Feb (DPA)--Following his talks in Bonn on the situation in El Salvador and Nicaragua, the special envoy of the new U.S. President, Lawrence Eagleburger, has gone on to Brussels to continue his mission. No details were known today about the talks in the chancellor's office and Foreign Ministry, during which Eagleburger, according to reports from Washington, intended to present secret service documents relating to massive Soviet influence in El Salvador. The Federal Government has so far refrained from commenting on El Salvador.

Meanwhile, Bonn has endorsed its view that a lasting solution in El Salvador can only be found as a result of understanding between all democratic forces in this Central American country. In a letter to CSU Deputy Josef Linsmeier today, Minister of State in the Foreign Ministry Hildegard Hamm-Bruecher stated among other things: "The Federal Government regards the only justifiable and promising course as being in agreement between the democratic forces wanting reform in El Salvador and support for these forces from abroad."

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE

[Commentary signed R.H.: "Enlightenment About Salvador"]

[Text] Lawrence Eagleburger, President Reagan's special envoy, was visiting in Bonn on Monday. It was already known what he wanted to do there, namely to present documents in the possession of the El Salvador Government to support recent realizations that Cuba is supporting the El Salvador revolt with arms. Eagleburger was commissioned by Secretary of State Haig to inform the European allies about the motives of the American El Salvador policy. He also will meet with Wischnewski, who in January outlined SPD solidarity with the guerrillas, as well as with Foreign Minister Genscher. The American information initiative is called for, particularly in Bonn. But retrospectively, it offers reason to feel puzzled. One must ask oneself why the Americans have waited so long, although they knew last summer what was going on there. Washington's El Salvador policy--to support a center government--was outlined in principle by people who were active prior to the Carter government and who have therefore survived the recent change in the State Department. The old fault of looking down at sensible European cooperation is being corrected with some delay.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU

[Hans-Herbert Gaebel editorial: "Approaching a Hard Test"]

[Text] The chancellor this time is making every effort to avoid the mistake made in 1977. At that time, he criticized the new U.S. President Carter directly at the beginning, nonchalantly and openly. Reagan, in contrast, is protected by law, as it were. And besides, the leadership team in Bonn does not tire of pointing out that good friends, intimate experts on Europe, are members of the new U.S. Government. Hence, everything ought to work better this time indeed.

Isn't this a case of losing one's nerve? A further argument in consolation is that the policy of the new administration in Washington cannot as yet be clearly determined. But not for long anymore, for some things have become quite conspicuous by now, for instance, the European tour by the head of the Europe division in the U.S. State Department, Eagleburger. What he is doing just now is letting the allies know that his government considers Christian Democrat Duarte and his military junta in El Salvador the right people. In Bonn, it isn't just leftwing Social Democrats who regard the Central American Napoleon as a puppet of the rightist military men.

Politicians, however, always manage to perform the trick of taking the edge off even entirely divergent views by means of well-sounding platitudes, and this may well happen in this particular case. In any event, the new, hard man in the U.S. State Department demonstrated to friend and foe alike that he can make short work of it. As far as he is concerned, European support in the campaign against terrorism, as he sees it, obviously is a test of the reliability of the allies.

El Salvador is far away. What concerns the Europeans, and particularly the Germans who are directly affected more than anybody else, is what directly happens between East and West. In this respect, too, clear statements have already been made. The spokesman of the U.S. State Department on 12 February: "There cannot be any question at all that what has priority for the Reagan administration above everything else is that America become strong again before it will talk with the Soviet Union on arms control."

This is unequivocal. And it allows the conclusion that the time for still living up to the 1979 dual decision on counterarming by the North Atlantic pact in both parts (decision on new medium-range weapons and simultaneous negotiations on them), which was very short from the outset, actually already has passed. In this connection, the outgoing SPD federal manager, Egon Bahr, thundered: "Anyone foiling one part of the dual decision will foil the negotiations. And anyone in the United States foiling the negotiations will foil the decision on the deployment. This works both ways."

Without wanting directly to predict the great conflict, one must say nevertheless that this does not herald any brilliant prospects for an untroubled cooperation between Washington and Bonn. The quarrel might be restrained if it were possible to put the blame on the Soviets that negotiations on the new medium-range weapons will not materialize in time. The so-called realists who have always considered the second (negotiation) part of the dual decision nonsense or dangerous indeed will do everything they can. Yet, doubts will remain, and not only among the notorious left SPD dissidents. After all, the new U.S. administration does not make any bones about the fact that it has an entirely different schedule.

However, well or badly, the Federal Government may succeed in adapting its own schedule to it. It cannot, for the sake of peace or because of alliance loyalty alone, or because this would be much easier to do, waive Washington's respect for specific special interests of the central European state, the Federal Republic, interests which Bonn must defend lest it give itself up. This just about worked with the Carter government, albeit with a great deal of difficulty. It will perhaps soon be the hardest test of the art of Bonn's foreign policy makers to find at least equal understanding on the part of the Reagan government and to convert this understanding into practical politics.

PAPER ON 'SECRET' FOREIGN MINISTERS' MEETING

[Commentary signed Dr.: "Genscher's Secret Meeting"]

[Text] Obviously, the European allies have a harder time adapting to the new U.S. administration than they had imagined before or shortly after the presidential elections. In part, this is the fault of the Americans themselves whose concepts of security and foreign policies are contradictory and rather unfermented to date. On the other hand, the Europeans are far away from their goal of pursuing a coordinated foreign policy if they cannot accomplish a common foreign policy. Presumably, this worried the federal foreign minister to the point that he invited his counterparts from Paris and London to a confidential meeting at his home near Bonn.

This even did not proceed without any embarrassments, however. First, news on this meeting leaked through, then this was turned into a "secret meeting." When the fact of it was finally confirmed, the Foreign Office disseminated "strict silence," but subsequently it became known after all that the three foreign ministers had intended to coordinate their separate visits to Washington scheduled for the near future. Not a thing to be said against that. But why did they fail to include their Italian colleague who had just concluded a visit across the Atlantic and surely could have given firsthand information to Genscher, Francois-Poncet, and Lord Carrington?

The "smaller" partners in the European Community are watching such activities with suspicion anyway. For the Americans, too, it probably did not come easier to assess more reliably the attitude of the Europeans. The confusion is bound to be all the greater since a broad discussion has been started in the SPD on the decision on counterarmament whereas the chancellor remains silent about it. SPD Chairman Willy Brandt even suggests a "pause" until April, and his manager Bahr lists the conditions under which the Americans should negotiate with the Soviets. All this cannot evoke any particular confidence.

CDU DEFENSE EXPERT SEES U.S. 'DEMANDS' AS JUSTIFIED

DW161218 Frankfurt Hessischer Rundfunk Network in German 1030 GMT 15 Feb 81

[Correspondents Denzer and Hoech interview with Manfred Woerner, deputy chairman of the CDU/CSU Bundestag faction place not given--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] Suppose the United States seeks to reclaim its world power position, will it suffice to aspire to military balance alone or is a policy of superiority required?

[Answer] To begin with, I do not believe that it is necessary to establish military preponderance. To me, it seems to be sufficient, or even imperative, to seek balance. Naturally, it is very difficult in each individual case to establish exactly what balance is and what preponderance is. There will always be a grey zone left where quarrels may occur. A policy of preponderance would lead to what is conventionally referred to as the arms race. This definitely would drive the Soviets into even more hardness and conjure up unnecessary confrontations. But I do not think that this is what the Americans are after.

If people everywhere talk about the arms race, by the way, then this is simply bypassing the facts. What we had in the past decade was a systematic buildup of the Soviet military power, a neglect of military strength on the part of the Americans as well as on the part of the Europeans. Considering that in 1979 the Americans had a defense budget which even nominally was lower than that of 1960, meaning prior to Vietnam, considering that they have about 20 army divisions as against about 157 of the Soviets, considering that the U.S. Army no longer has even half the strength of the Soviet Army, considering that it is lagging far behind in shipbuilding, tank production and in the expenditures for research and development, then I fail to see why one can talk of an arms race with a clear conscience. The picture is entirely different. The Soviets are running away at a speed of a mile a minute. The distance to the West is growing wider.

At the moment, there is no arms race, at least not in the form some people believe, but neither must the arms race constitute on objective. The objective must be balance, preferably through reasonable arms limitation and disarmament. But I predict here and now--and this is provable to boot--that the Soviets will be interested in that only if they see that the West is serious about its own defense.

[Question] You mean to say that the additional burdens asked of the Federal Republic, demands of the Americans that will be forthcoming, will not increase the degree of tension in Europe and in the Federal Republic nor start the spiral of the arms race turning?

[Answer] I do not see that at all. For the Soviet Union in the past 10 years has carried out in central Europe a veritably fantastic arms program. Nobody can say that we had particularly amplified our arms efforts. If we take a look, say, at our figures then we will see that the defense budget of 1980, measured by the gross national product or by the budget in general, was the lowest in the past 20 to 25 years. And you can also check year after year the decline in our defense efforts measured by our gross national product. No doubt about that.

And I repeat: Looking at the Soviet Union, what has it done? Where we have no medium-range missiles at all, barring the 18 French missiles, it deployed medium-range missiles targeted on us at breath-taking speed. By the end of the year, it will have 200 positions with 3 missiles each. This adds up to 600 medium-range missiles with 3 warheads each, 2/3 of which are targeted in Europe. I wonder why the Soviets are doing this.

Therefore, all I can tell you is that if we do more to ensure at least some balance, to prevent, at least, our defense and deterrence doctrines from being totally invalidated, you just cannot speak of provocation nor equate this with an arms race.

Granted, the Americans demand more of the Europeans. Yet, this is not an American interest. I do not want a false tone to come in here, as it occasionally happens, for instance, after the motto: Oh well, the Americans demand it, so we have to do it. We must do it because it serves our own security, that's why.

At the moment, the Americans drastically are cutting their budget to size, cutting down in all fields including the social sector, which is highly unpopular in the United States. They are in a far worse situation than we are. They have 8 million unemployed people. They have an inflation rate of 13 percent. And yet, they are cutting down. And while they do that, they are intensifing their defense efforts. And naturally, they will be telling us: If we do so in the common interest and to protect you Europeans, then you just cannot believe that you will get off cheaply, letting us do all the dirty work in this world. You should have heard that! Just imagine yourself a U.S. senator who has to justify to the U.S. taxpayer what he is doing. They will ask most likely: What are our dear allies doing anyway? After all, they are the ones located at the border between East and West. And primarily, they will be looking at the Germans.

And I can tell you that we will support U.S. demands in the Federal Republic of Germany whenever they serve our own interests, not otherwise. And it is true that we are located on a certain border. Nobody in our country is talking of a real increase by 8, 9 or 10 percent, which the Americans are visualizing.

At the moment, this simply cannot be done in the Federal Republic of Germany, either by the Social Democrats or by a government led by us. But compared with the American potential, it is simply inadequate that we cannot work up to a real 3 percent, let alone talk about 4 percent.

[Question] How do you assess the discussion on the introduction of the neutron weapon?

[Answer] I am afraid that a discussion on the neutron weapon at the wrong time could well jeopardize the implementation of the counterarming decision. This is why I do not want this discussion. At the moment, there is no U.S. Government decision on the production of the neutron weapon or its deployment in Europe. But I do reckon, of course, that the Americans will come up with that decision some day because they deem the neutron weapon appropriate and important as a deterrent weapon against the crushing armor superiority of the Warsaw Pact here in Europe, a conviction which I by the way, fully share, as does Chancellor Schmidt and the Federal Government. For, as Chancellor Schmidt said in the Bundestag, the Federal Government had advocated this production and its deployment in Europe. Surely nothing has changed in this respect, especially to keep the risk high enough for a Soviet aggression.

[Question] When will we have to reckon with such a decision?

[Answer] I cannot tell you that nor can anybody else, I believe. In any event, we are not under a deadline.

[Question] Next week the Bundestag Defense Committee will be dealing once again with the Tornado affair and with Defense Minister Apel. Is the union heading for the appointment of an investigating committee?

[Answer] I will be quite frank with you. To prevent an investigating committee, I wanted us simply to seek another way for bringing the truth to light. But the attitude of the defense minister, who constantly gets entangled in contradictions and obviously is not showing his hand clearly enough, probably forces us to take a different course. The last word has not yet been spoken. We will make it dependent on the meeting scheduled for next week. But I will not make a secret of my view that as matters stand, all indications say that we will have an investigating committee.

SPD'S BAHR INTERVIEWED ON PARTY DIFFICULTIES

DW170949 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 16 Feb 31 pp 20-23

[Interview by editors Klaus Wirtgen and Richard Kiessler with SPD Federal Manager Egon Bahr in Bonn]

[Text] SPIEGEL: Mr Bahr, after more than 4 years in the position of SPD federal manager, you will quit in a few days. When you began with your work, you created the thesis: "The party lives longer than the government." Both are still alive, but they are probably worse off than ever?

Bahr: I am still saying what I have said at that time, completely aside from all the excitement of these weeks. A natural state of tension exists between a party supporting the government, and the government itself.

SPIEGEL: The current developments within the SPD, culminating last week in a crisis session of the Executive Board, cannot be termed a "natural state of tension."

Bahr: I hope that the Executive Board discussion lasting for more than 7 hours was a real clarification process. I think you are right inasfar as the SPD finds it more difficult than other parties to act in a situation where the leeway and the means are limited. But I see neither in our country, in the government and the party, nor in other states the great way to solve the problems of the industrial society of the eighties.

SPIEGEL: That is no argument. You said 3 years ago: "The SPD must prove in the next year or two that it will find the strength in the government to make a sensible conception for the eighties and nineties. If it will not achieve that, it will be historically ripe to be replaced, even if we can demonstrate that other parties cannot offer more." Has the time passed? Must the Social Democrats be replaced?

Bahr: I think that we have made at least a beginning. It will turn out whether it will be effective. The regeneration ability of a party will not be guaranteed when it forms the opposition. One can see that in looking at the CDU in Berlin, which has not "generated" a Berlin top candidate in 18 years.

I believe that we still have a few years time to ponder on the developing problems of this society and to offer possibilities for a solution. It is correct that we will need more time for it than I wished and than I thought we would. The judgment, of whether we were historically ripe to be replaced will be made later on.

SPIEGEL: At the next Bundestag election?

Bahr: No, please do not talk about Bundestag elections in such a dimension.

SPIEGEL: Why not?

Bahr: "Regeneration ability" is the problem of whether a party or a political force can compress questions and problems to become programs. We will need 2 or 3 or 5 or 7 years for that. That is a historical dimension. "Ripe to be replaced," means whether a party will remain able to act for and with the government. That will be decided in this legislative period.

SPIEGEL: Does it mean for the party that it must develop programs without any "as well as?" An associate said once mockingly: "With Schmidt and Eppler for and against nuclear energy."

Bahr: That is a simplification of a complicated situation. Regarding nuclear technology, policy is lagging behind science. The tragedy of the situation consists in the fact that today, nuclear energy is absolutely necessary, but that its dangers are unpredictable. In view of such technological developments, we cannot say in idiotic simplicity: We will decide on something that will be valid until the year 2000.

SPIEGEL: Did'nt you and the party make it too easy for yourselves in past years...

Bahr: ...if at all, too difficult...

SPIEGEL: ...because the SPD avoided clearly formulating the will of majorities, aside from the fact whether such decisions would have been implemented by the government?

Bahr: Give me an example.

SPIEGEL: You yourself agreed only reluctantly at the 1979 Berlin congress to the decision to close the arms gap.

Bahr: Yes. I agreed only with reluctance, but I was convinced that this decision was necessary because I see no other way to bring about negotiations between the superpowers.

SPIEGEL: Where you as the SPD federal manager not very willing to cope with the needs of the government--at the expense of the party?

Bahr: The party must have its right and it must support the government. Under certain conditions, it must accompany it critically.

SPIEGEL: Has the SPD top echelon failed?

Bahr: Regarding the chairman, I experienced in these 4 years how extremely loyal Willy Brandt was in supporting the federal chancellor.

SPIEGEL: Not because he agrees with him, but only because of reasons of discipline.

Bahr: I do not want to do any research work with regard to motives. But you see, the federal manager must see to it that business will run as smoothly as possible. On the other hand, however, I have done quite a bit in the past years for the organization and for inner party life.

SPIEGEL: But you have not been credited with that. Otherwise one would not have placed Vice Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski at your side as a man to fill organizational gaps.

Bahr: "Ben Wisch" did not come as an organizational stopgap. But his experience and his particular organizational talent have helped me too.

SPIEGEL: Was it a fortunate solution that the SPD in past years had such people as Brandt, Wischenwski and Bahr in its top echelon, all who were passionate foreign politicians?

Bahr: I was abroad less than anybody else of the leadership floor. Wischnewski attended many meetings of Bezirk organizations and Bezirk party conferences. Just look at his appointment book.

SPIEGEL: Baden-Wuerttemberg's SPD Chief Erhard Eppler stated last week that "there is not one big issue that would integrate the party, creating a contrast to the CDU. He named the decision to close the arms gap, the arms exports and the Brokdorf nuclear powerplant. Why do you ridicule Eppler's analysis as being "political diarrhea?"

Bahr: I have said that the things one sees these days are spiritual diarrhea, disseminated in many papers. I should have used the German word "durchfall" for diarrhea. Moreover, I did not refer to a person.

Take the decision to close the arms gap. One of the results of last week's session was the fact that the Executive Board agreed on two statements: The Berlin party congress decision is valid, and NATO's double decision is unavoidable if one wants to have negotiations. It means that we had an interesting discussion on it which was really not necessary, I would say.

SPIEGEL: And yet, where are the integrating issues for the future?

Bahr: I see three of them. The first one is: Do we have any ideas how one can achieve any further agreements via arms limitation to safeguard peace in Europe and beyond Europe? That is for me the issue of issues.

Second: I am convinced that in view of the anonymity of the apparatuses, the loneliness of people, the problem of clear decisions and the participation of people in decisions will become, or actually already has become an important issue of this society. That does not only refer to codetermination within the narrow framework of a draft for a bill.

SPIEGEL: And your third issue?

Bahr: The third issue is for me subordinate to the second. It is, if one may use a slogan, the "housing" of man. How do we live together and where is the sense of this life? What do we do all this for?

SPIEGEL: Spiritual leadership which the federal chancellor rejects...

Bahr: There is no need to repeat the discussion on spiritual leadership. I respect the approach of the federal chancellor...

SPIEGEL: ...but you do not share it.

Bahr: ...and his respectable puritanism, his concern about poor leadership. I believe that political, not spiritual, leadership has its effect through a model, through a picture of how the society should be. And that does not mean for Helmut Schmidt to outline visions of the future.

SPIEGEL: Who will take over the task of bringing visions to the homes of people?

Bahr: We shall see whether some people will be able to do that. Discuss housing, the occupiers of houses and those who look for the meaning of life, discuss it with Hans-Jochen Vogel in the light of his Berlin experiences.

SPIEGEL: What kept you in past years from starting this discussion?

Bahr: I must admit that we simply failed to find the strength and the time in the party for a series of options or necessities. There was the sickness of the chairman, the quarrel over former Juso Chairman Uwe Benneter, the multitude of land-diet elections.

SPIEGEL: After all, the SPD is not a fair weather party.

Bahr: Good heavens, no, but in effect there was a shortage of time. During these 4 years, I have had a 90-hour work week practically throughout.

SPIEGEL: So you feel impeded in doing what you planned on doing?

Bahr: Yes. In retrospect I see quite a lot that I have done--even though this has not become so evident to the outside--and I also see quite a few points which I had wanted to do but did not manage to accomplish.

SPIEGEL: Soon you will have ample time to concentrate on your pet subject: disarmament. Do the two superpowers actually want to negotiate in earnest at all?

Bahr: The new U.S. administration needs a breaking in period. It is only fair to grant that. What so far has come from the United States in the way of utterances...

SPIEGEL: ...does not allow hope.

Bahr: There I disagree with you. There are a few hard statements, verbal radicalism. This also happened in the initial period of Nixon's presidential term, which did not prevent him from achieving important agreements later on. On the other hand, there is the intention of the new U.S. administration to continue the SALT process...

SPIEGEL: ...when the United States will be superior to the Russians again.

Bahr: The attempt by one side to be superior to the other cannot get us anywhere. It is also under this aspect that we advocate balance.

SPIEGEL: New, Western satellite pictures allegedly show that the Soviet Union is installing far more SS-20 missiles than had been hitherto assumed.

Bahr: There are no options other than negotiations. Everything else will end up in the abyss.

SPIEGEL: You must proceed from the premise that the United States will deploy some 572 medium-range weapons in Europe in 1983 and thereafter. Does this mean that the second part of the NATO decision was mere show?

Bahr: Anyone foiling one part of the dual decision will foil the negotiations. And anyone in the United States foiling the negotiations will foil the decision on the deployment. This works both ways.

SPIEGEL: But it looks as though the Russians, too, are foiling the negotiations.

Bahr: At the moment, after all, the Russians can do as they please in this field because there are no agreements to which they would be committed. One may say that the Soviet Union is foolish, simply continuing to produce and deploy. But in doing so, it does not violate any treaty.

SPIEGEL: But Leonid Brezhnev did agree with Schmidt in Bonn in 1978 that neither side will aspire to superiority.

Bahr: By that, the Soviet Union for the first time accepted the goal of establishing an approximate balance through negotiations. But as long as the Soviet Union has not made any binding promises as a result of negotiations, it is politically free to do as it deems appropriate.

SPIEGEL: Can the Europeans force the two superpowers to negotiate?

Bahr: We cannot force the Soviet Union to do anything. All we can do is say: We want to tie the Soviet Union down to the promise made to the chancellor. Nor can we force the Americans. All we can do is hold them by the only string there is for that purpose, namely, the dual decision.

SPIEGEL: And what if the negotiations fail or do not even materialize? Will the Europeans then be forced to reconsider their role in the alliance?

Bahr: I cannot recommend cackling over eggs that have not even been laid. Why do we not wait and see for the next year and half where the negotiations will take us. Then we will have an idea. Time is extremely short. I can see that myself.

SPIEGEL: The chancellor's friend Valery Giscard d'Estaing has deleted the term detente from his vocabulary. Is France approaching the American line?

Bahr: Definitely the concern about the Soviet Union's arms efforts is growing in Paris. No doubt about it: The option of movement of all other states decreases to the same degree as the tensions between the two superpowers increase. As we can see, this also holds true for France.

SPIEGEL: In the meantime, some Western partners have been seeing some neutrality lust in Bonn's detente policy.

Bahr: Ridiculous, we need not talk about it. Others may talk about it as they please. It is simply nonsense. We will adhere to the direction of our policy as pursued since 1969 even if and when others believe that they cannot follow it any longer. But this does not depend on us along, but also on the deportment and the readiness of the Soviet Union or the GDR, or also on developments in Poland.

SPIEGEL: Can the Europeans represent their security interests even when the Americans thereby feel antagonized?

Bahr: We are no satellites but allies. The pursuit of our own interests and mulling over them is the most natural thing in the world. All states are doing that. It would be bad if the Federal Republic would not do so as well. Yet, I fail to see any option for solo actions on the part of the Federal Republic.

SPIEGEL: A matter that is being debated also is whether Bonn should deliver arms to all the world--submarines to Chile and tanks to the Saudis.

Bahr: Let me explain two points of reference. To begin with, the restrictive export policy will remain in effect. Secondly, I am convinced that the definition of "areas of tension" is no longer suited to the decisions we need to make because everything simply is interlinked.

SPIEGEL: This sounds like the statement by U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig that the whole world is NATO's concern.

Bahr: Had Haig said that the area of NATO's competence is the whole world, then this would have been simply wrong. Had he said that NATO must take an interest in what is happening in the rest of the world, then this would be correct. The question is whether NATO as an alliance system, as an organization, will assume commitments which will go beyond its present area. There, I am quite skeptical.

SPIEGEL: Should NATO be enlarged, by Saudi Arabia, for instance?

Bahr: I have thought about it. And I arrived at a negative conclusion. In that case, we could not rule out the possibility that the area of competence of the Warsaw Pact would be expanded as well. I fail to see any advantage to that.

SPIEGEL: The chancellor says that some day Bonn may well be facing the decision of either delivering arms to Saudi Arabia or, upon pressure by the United States, sending German soldiers to the Persian Gulf.

Bahr: This is one of the arguments that need to be examined in earnest. I think it is entirely out of the question, by the way, that we should review the criteria of German arms exports solely with respect to one country, namely, Saudi Arabia. This review may result in their being affirmed, intensified or alleviated. In any event, I do not rule out an alleviation.

SPIEGEL: The Americans have lately dished out a ticklish subject again: reportedly the neutron weapon will be stationed in Europe after all.

Bahr: It was with utmost approval that I acknowledged the statement by the U.S. secretary of state that we need not worry about that.

SPIEGEL: Yet, Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger just a few days ago repeated this demand in the WASHINGTON POST.

Bahr: So he did. But we should discuss problems when they need to be discussed.

SPIEGEL: Some 3 1/2 years ago, you said the neutron weapon is a "perversion of thinking." Is this still valid?

Bahr: I am no weather vane. My conviction of that time has not changed. But apart from the ethical position which recognizes that others may exist as well, there are military and security policy arguments which would have to be taken into consideration if the need arose.

SPIEGEL: With your opinion about the neutron weapon, you are at odds with Helmut Schmidt.

Bahr: The position of a member of parliament offers more leeway than does the post of SPD federal manager. I will be making use of that in my remaining loyalties. But I do not consider myself to be at variance with the government.

SPIEGEL: Mr Bahr, thank you for this interview.

LE MONDE DISCUSSES MITTERRAND VISIT TO PRC, DPRK

LD171523 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Feb 81 p 7

[Jean-Marie Colombani dispatch: "Ending His Visit to Beijing, Mitterrand States That France 'Should Not Arm China'"]

[Text] Beijing--The quality of the welcome given to Mr Mitterrand during his visit to China undoubtedly bears witness to the importance which the PRC attaches to the contacts which it has established with the European left's main components. Indeed, PCI and PCE officials as well as officials from the Portuguese, Italian and British socialist parties had preceeded the Socialist International's vice president to Beijing. The reason the PCF is excluded from these meetings is that its stances on international questions are deemed by Beijing to be too close to Moscow's stances. In China, the attitude which should be adopted in the face of "Soviet hegemonism" is the main concern in the foreign policy sphere. It was, therefore, a focal point of the talks between the French Socialists and Chinese Communists. For the two sides which were inaugurating official relations, the aim was to inform each other and not to negotiate. Moreover, no joint declaration lent authority to these talks.

Mr Mitterrand observed, on the one hand, that the PS delegation had not come to China for anti-Soviet purposes and, on the other hand, that France and Europe must maintain the right conditions for fruitful dialogue with the USSR. After specifying that the Chinese interlocutors had "at no time" asked him to "choose" between China and the USSR, Mr Mitterrand indicated on Sunday evening: "France must pay careful attention to European balance. France and China are two factors contributing to balance in the world. They should therefore maintain fruitful relations. However, it is not for France to arm China. It must not meddle in something which might encourage war." Mr Mitterrand was particularly cautious on this subject since he considers the hypothesis of a reconciliation between the two giants in the communist world to be plausible.

In this connection, he explained: "As long as the present generation of Chinese and USSR leaders is at the helm, it will be difficult to overcome the disputes between these two countries. However, as far as the future is concerned, it is important to remember that they follow the same ideology. It would be wrong, therefore, to rely indefinitely on this context of two great empires opposing each other."

Regarding North Korean policy, Mr Mitterrand said he thinks the "rapprochement" between this country and China "seems obvious without there being any break with the USSR."

Although the meeting between Mr Mitterrand and Kim Il-song lasted 3 hours on Sunday morning, there was not really any dialogue but merely an exchange of monologues.

The PS candidate spoke first, outlining his analysis of the international situation and indicating to the "great leader" the international reasons which he thinks explain the collapse of the leftwing union between the PS and PCF in France. For his part, the North Korean president explained the significance of his invitation. The aim for him is to have an interlocutor in France, who could be "vigilant" on the Korean question. Indeed, Mr Kim Il-song considers that it is "a much more serious problem and threat of war than that which exists in the Near East." "I ask you," he said several times, "never to stop showing interest in the Korean problem." In keeping with that thinking, the man who has called himself the "great leader" is trying to move closer to the Socialist International and the PCI and PCE.

Mr Kim Il-song explained that he is trying not only to maintain good relations with both China and the USSR but that he is also prepared to "work" for a reconciliation between the two countries. In no circumstances, he added in substance, does North Korea intend to fall into either of these great powers' sphere of influence. After outlining Korea's history, Kim Il-song denounced Japan as the U.S. "vanguard." Finally, he strongly condemned the Vietnamese intervention in Kampuchea.

LE MATIN VIEWS RAMIFICATIONS OF POLISH CRISIS

LD171447 Paris LE MATIN in French 13 Feb 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Poland" Western Resignation"]

[Text] The Soviet intervention in Afghanistan broadly demonstrates the permanence of the Yalta agreements: The Kremlin leaders can act with impunity and without any brutal reaction from the Western countries provided they operate in their "sphere of influence." The blunder which the U.S. State Department spokesman made on Tuesday [10 February] also demonstrates that the Yalta philosophy would work in the same way if Moscow were to make a military intervention into Warsaw. Indeed, the United States would consider that the use of "Polish forces to apply Polish laws: would be "an internal Polish affair." Although the spokesman's words officially have been denied, they reveal a certain state of mind: Nobody has ever doubted that the Western nations would take a resigned attitude to any attempt to restore control in Poland. Furthermore, Jimmy Carter's former adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski said last December that the United States would not call the East-West balance into question, which is an indirect way of explaining that his country would do nothing if faced with the use of Soviet force in Poland. In this sphere, there will undoubtedly be a remarkable continuity between the Reagan and Carter administrations.

Nonetheless, after the Afghan affair and especially after the hopes raised in Poland through the Solidarity movement, one might at one point have thought that the Western leaders were seeking a second wind in face of Moscow's challenges. There was talk of a "diplomacy of harassment," and it is true that Washington, Bonn, London and Paris frequently adopted a firm tone toward Moscow and did not hesitate to take economic sanctions. In the past 10 years, a relatively strong web of political and economic interests has been woven between the USSR and the Western countries--a fact which should generate some caution in the Kremlin. In other words, it is thought in several capitals that, although the intervention weapon has not lost its edge, even the strongest advocates of a tough line in Moscow will have to think twice. This seems to be Valery Giscard d'Estaing's analysis in particular.

However, there is reason to believe that the actual nature of the Soviet Government has not changed one jot and that the principles which maintain its coherence, from Vladivostok to the banks of the Elbe, have not evolved. The Russians' only recourse is to force when a crisis over which they lose control breaks out at some point in their empire.

Is this the situation in which Poland might find itself in the future? At present, both General Jaruzelski, the new prime minister, and Solidarity seem to be seeking a resumption of dialogue and not confrontation. Indeed, for the past 6 months, the dialogue between the government and solidarity has never been broken. We have witnessed a series of discussions which have always ended in ambiguous, last-minute compromises. How long can this go on?

RPR'S PONS COMMENTS ON PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

[Excerpt] RPR Secretary General Bernard Pons, who was the guest of the Radio Luxembourg program "The World" on Monday, 9 February, stated in particular: "The RPR ministers belonging to a government presided over by the president of the Republic who chose them at the premier's suggestion may feel loyal. It may therefore seem normal that they should support the outgoing president of the Republic if he is a candidate. If they do not wish to do so, I believe that they ought to resign from the government. But if they support the president of the Republic, they are making another choice and at that point, they must resign from the RPR...."

As far as a possible candidacy on the part of Valery Giscard d'Estaing is concerned, I am convinced that he will be a candidate. Even before the kickoff of this presidential election, I am sure of one thing: If the outgoing president of the Republic is a candidate, he is virtually certain to be defeated."

Referring to Mr Mitterrand's candidacy, he stated: "Francois Mitterrand is a man of talent who will undoubtedly attempt to renew his language, but he will be a candidate for the third time. He will still appear to voters as being immured in a system in which he has placed himself. He has a great deal of skill, intelligence and talent, and he will therefore attempt to renew himself. Nevertheless, he bears many political scars."

He added: "As to reconciling the Gaullists and the Socialists, I must say that there are many Gaullists and Socialists who have never quarreled."

RED BRIGADES TEAM ASSASSINATES HOSPITAL CHIEF

NC171309 Paris AFP in English 1303 GMT 17 Feb 81

[Text] Milan, northern Italy, 17 Feb (AFP)--The Italian Red Brigades urban guerrilla group struck again today when they gunned down the head of Milan's general hospital, Professor Luigi Marangoni.

The three or four gunmen escaped in a hijacked car after an exchange of fire with two policemen alerted by the noise of the shots which killed Professor Marangoni. One of the gunmen was said to have been wounded.

Shortly afterwards a telephone call to the daily CORRIERE D'INFORMAZIONE claimed responsibility for killing on behalf of the Walter Alasia column of the Red Brigades--considered a more hard-line militarist group than the Rome-based section which kidnapped and then released Magistrate Giovanni D'Urso recently after 33 days.

No reason was given for the murder, which occurred five days after a statement by three generals of the Carabinieri (Italy's paramilitary national police force) that terrorism would be beaten within two years.

Professor Marangoni did not belong to one of the usual categories of Red Brigades targets, such as magistrates, politicians, or policemen. Doctors murdered proviously usually had some connection with the authorities, such as the health administrator of the Rome prison killed last December.

The professor, who died of wounds to the head within half an hour of the attack--mounted as he got into his car to go to the hospital--had received a series of threats by telephone and later, after changing his number, by letter, family sources said.

The 1979 three senior male nurses at the Milan hospital were shot in the legs, and today Health Minister Aldo Aniasi, a former Socialist Mayor of Milan, said his ministry had received a number of reports from Professor Marangoni on "dangerous situations in the hospital."

Mr Aniasi said that the hospital had also been threatened on a clandestine Milan radio station and he added that Professor Marangoni "paid for his courage with his life."

The minister also commented that today's attack, despite the statements by the Carabinieri generals, "shows that terrorism is far from being beaten."

PCI DECLINES TO COMMENT FURTHER ON POLAND

[Unattributed report: "Divergences Between PCI and CPSU Over Events in Poland; Concerning a Document Published by PANORAMA]

[Text] ANSA announced yesterday that the weekly PANORAMA will publish in its next issue the text of a document attributed to the CPSU Central Committee addressed to the PCI Directorate in reply to previous demarches in which the PCI expressed its alarm at the situation taking shape in connection with Poland. The agency cites parts of the Soviet document, which asserts that the Solidarity trade unions and the "forces supporting them" are accused of waging "concentrated attacks on the very foundations of socialism" and that the PCI shows sympathy only with the forces in Poland opposed to socialism. These assertions, which paint a clearly distorted picture of the position expressed by the PCI, were previously reported by organs of the Soviet press, as our readers know from the reports that we have published regularly. We have already issued repeated replies to them.

The divergences of assessment between us and the CPSU concerning the Polish crisis and the opportunities for resolving it are, of course, no surprise to our readers, since they are clearly outlined in everything that both parties' press has published almost daily for the past several months.

The PCI Press Bureau has issued the following communique on the matter:

"We announced at the time and on several occasions subsequently that the PCI Directorate carried out official demarches with respect to the communist parties most directly concerned to express its assessments and stances concerning the situation in Poland and the prospects which it afforded. These assessments and stances are well known because they have been discussed by our Central Committee too and published in the party press. The reporting and discussion and respective viewpoints between the PCI and other communist parties have taken place in various ways and in confidential forms, which we have not failed to observe. Moreover, the political substance of the debate between the PCI and CPSU is also well known."

FOREIGN MINISTER RECEIVES USSR AMBASSADOR

LD180409 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1930 GMT 17 Feb 81

[Text] In Lisbon today the Portuguese foreign minister received in his office the Soviet ambassador to the Portuguese capital. A Foreign Ministry spokesman later provided the ANOP news agency with some details of the meeting, described as a courtesy call.

During the meeting Arnold Kalinin said that the relations between Portugal and the Soviet Union had been normal until December 1979 after which they had undergone a split. The Portuguese minister, Goncalves Pereira, told the Soviet diplomat that this was due to the Soviet Union's armed intervention in Afghanistan and that Portugal together with 117 countries had condemned this intervention at the United Nations.

The foreign minister also told Kalinin that relations between Portugal and the USSR in the economic sphere should run normally although there could not be a higher level of cooperation as long as the situation in Afghanistan remained unchanged.

The Soviet ambassador presented to the minister a number of documents outlining Moscow's stance on European security. Goncalves Pereira told the ambassador that he is already familiar with the Soviet stand, pointing out that the Portuguese Government has a different view on the issue, the Foreign Ministry spokesman added.

PSP'S SOARES EXPLAINS VISIT TO SPAIN, FRANCE, FRG

LD141632 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1300 GMT 14 Feb 81

[Text] Mario Soares, secretary general of the Portuguese Socialist Party [PSP], left Lisbon yesterday for a visit to Spain, France and West Germany during which he will have talks with his Spanish, French and West German counterparts.

In a statement to ANOP yesterday in Madrid, Mario Soares spoke of his party's forthcoming congress 8-10 May and reiterated his intention to present a political strategy motion and draft amendments to the party's statutes to the congress. He also expressed his intention to step down as PSP secretary general and become an ordinary militant should his strategy motion fail to win a clear majority at the congress.

[Words indistinct] defined the main guidelines governing his party's strategy as based on a stand of responsible opposition, clearly distanced from the Communist Party and the utopian left. This stand of responsible opposition, he added, must be translated into action at political and parliamentary levels and in closer contact between the party and its supporting social organizations.

In this context of party infighting, the PSP secretary general denied any connection between this situation and his visit to Spain, France and the FRG. He further denied any connection between his visit and a possible search for international support for his stand within the party. In this connection he said: I do not require such support. Apart from anything else, I am deputy chairman of the Socialist International and my standing at international level is not in any doubt.

Mario Soares said that his visit is exclusively aimed at holding talks with Felipe Gonzalez, Francois Mitterrand and Helmut Schmidt in light of Adolfo Suarez' resignation in Spain, the forthcoming presidential elections in France and the party infighting within the West German Social Democratic Party.

DEMONSTRATORS PROTEST DEATH OF ETA MEMBER

LD162136 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 16 Feb 81

[Text] Demonstrations in the Basque capitals as well as in Pamplona have protested the death in Madrid of alleged Basque Fatherland and Liberty Group [ETA] member Jose Arregui. We now offer you the following roundup:

In Bilbao, some 70,000 people demonstrated in protest over the death of Arregui, who died after 10 days of police interrogation. Two demonstrators made their way through the main streets of Bilbao. One of these was organized by the Abertixale--patriotic--leftwing; the other by the same political forces which last week called the demonstration in protest over the killing of Jose Maria Ryan. According to EFE, 10,000 more people took part in the Abertxale demonstration than in the other. According to EUROPA PRESS, in San Sebastian some 60,000 people responded to the call by the Abertxale parties. The demonstration began at 1700 and made its way through the main streets of the city. Those taking part in the demonstration organized by the Basque Nationalist Party [PNV], the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party [PSOE], the Communist Party of Euskadi, Euskadiko Ezkerra and the main trade unions dispersed soon after the march began, in view of the fact that the other demonstration had also been called.

A demonstration had also been called for in Vitoria for 1700 which, according to EUROPA PRESS, involved some 30,000 people. The agency reports some 12,000 people took part in the demonstration which had been called by the PNV, the PSOE, the Communist Party, Euskadiko Ezkerra and the main trade unions. The demonstration called by the Abertxale leftwing was supported by some 18,000 people. At the end of the demonstration, some of those making up the second group made their way towards the office of the civil governor and ended up at the Plaza de los Fueros.

Finally, in Pamplona, too, two parallel demonstrations took place, called by the same groups of political forces as in the Basque capitals. At the Plaza del Castillo, the national police dispersed members of the Abertxale demonstration who were shouting slogans against the police and in support of ETA.

Interior Ministry Statement

[Text] Reports were released this evening referring to resignations by high-ranking police officials. The Ministry of the Interior has issued an official note on the matter which says:

This evening, numerous contradictory reports have been circulated relating to resignations by high-ranking officials at the Ministry of the Interior and the Directorate of State Security. In the face of the confusion which might have been created by the circulation of these reports the Ministry of the Interior wishes to point out first, that resignations have been submitted by the director general of police, the secretary general of the Directorate and the commissioner general of intelligence. Two commissioner generals and two division chiefs have expressed their desire to be relieved of their posts. Second, the resignations of the director of state security, of the under secretary and director generals of the ministry are categorically denied and apart from those given, there has been no other resignation by people in charge of the state security forces and corps nor by any of the superior police chiefs such as might have been deduced from the reports which have been circulated.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA BLAMES TURKS FOR TALKS' STAGNATION

[Text] The inter-Cypriot talks are in a state of complete stagnation because of the inflexible and coercive stand of the Turkish side at the negotiations table in that it insists that the Greek Cypriot side should lift the so-called political and economic embargo prior to dealing with the actual aspects of the Cyprus problem, such as the territorial and constitutional aspects and the question of Varosha.

This was stated by authoritative political circles, who referred to Mr Gobbi's meetings with Ioannidhis and Onan yesterday. They also referred to reports, which are intentionally conveyed to the Turkish Cypriot press by the Turkish side, that the UN special envoy in the island has been exerting desperate efforts in order to overcome the deadlock in the talks, a deadlock for which the Greek Cypriot side is allegedly responsible.

After making it clear that we cannot say yet that the talks "are in a deadlock. Although no progress has been made," the same authoritative circles stressed that the policy, followed during the talks by the Turkish side, shows that it considers lifting the so-called embargo as the final solution of the problem.

These circles stressed that "from the beginning the object of the talks has been the final solution of the Cyprus problem and not a recognition of the faits accomplis of the invasion, as obviously favored by the Turkish side in using the term 'political and economic embargo.'" The same circles added that Mr Gobbi's contacts are within his regular weekly contacts with the representatives of the two sides at the talks, and that there are no prospects for early submission by the Turkish Cypriot side of concrete proposals on the territorial question which the Greek Cypriot side considers--along with the constitutional question--as the most important aspect of the Cyprus problem.

The same circles said that the Turkish side has hinted at the negotiations table that it would be inclined to reconsider its proposals on Famagusta if the Cyprus Government decided to lift the so-called embargo earlier. However, these circles have clarified that the other side did not hint to what extent it would be prepared to reexamine its proposals. In conclusion, the authoritative political circles said that there has been no progress in the question of the Nicosia airport since the Turkish Cypriot side does not appear to be pleased with the "ideas" submitted by Waldheim to the two sides.

PAPAIOANNOU GIVES SPEECH AT AKEL CONFERENCE

NC171250 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 17 Feb 81 pp 1, 5

["Text" of 15 February speech by AKEL Secretary General E. Papaioannou at the party organizational conference in Nicosia]

[Excerpts] We are coming to a period that could be described as the most crucial since the end of World War II. On the international horizon the clouds of the cold war are becoming heavier and threaten mankind with a thermonuclear calamity.

The international political developments remind us of the restless days of the cold war. The new U.S. President began his term in office with insults and threats against the Soviet Union. The Soviet leadership said, among other things, that Reagan supports terrorism!

History has proved that wherever there has been violent organized anticommunism and anti-Sovietism, there have been measures against people, oppression, fascism and war. For years, Hitler waged a strong anticommunist and anti-Soviet campaign. What was its aim? To justify the arms race, and the outcome was war.

There is no fascist dictatorship regime in the world whose leadership has not applied a strong anticommunist anti-Soviet campaign before overthrowing democracy and taking power by force. Anticommunism and anti-Sovietism are pretexts for fascism, oppression, anti-people measures and war. Anticommunism and anti-Sovietism is the registered trademark of fascism and imperialism.

Communism and the Soviet Union are the scapegoats for fascists and imperialists. They are blamed for everything; even for the air pollution we inhale.

The Reagan-Haig anti-Soviet and anticommunist campaign augurs indescribable evil to humanity. As was the case with Hitler, if it is not checked it will lead with a mathematical exactitude to a third world war, which this time will be a thermonuclear one. Haig spoke with unreserved cynicism about a thermonuclear war which only 5 percent of the countries at war will survive!

This is the future which Reagan and Haig--the cowboys of politics--describe in their sick anticommunist and anti-Soviet campaign. However, they delude themselves if they think that mankind wants to commit suicide. If they cannot visualize or promise a better future for the U.S. and other peoples, because their anticommunist, anti-Soviet attitude is in the service of big industrialists that trade with death, the people in their determined struggle will cut the criminal hand that intends to press the button for a thermonuclear war.

War is not unavoidable. It can and must be averted. Mankind wants to live and create. The indescribable abhorrent crime that is being prepared by the U.S. imperialists for mankind will only be averted if all peoples move now and make the Reagan-Haig team understand that they are not prepared to accept the macabre destructive future that is in store for them; and if all peoples demand that the Soviet Union's proposals on strategic arms limitation, disarmament and peace are accepted.

With regard to the numerically small but great in spirit, hard-suffering Cypriot people, Reagan and Haig must know that they face the prowar exacerbation of U.S. imperialism with rage and indignation, and blame it for their tragedy and disaster. The Cypriot people, who are struggling for their salvation and freedom, demand and struggle for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from their territory, the dissolution of all the bases and the U.S. spy stations and a fully demilitarized Cyprus. And we will not stop our struggle until our goal is achieved.

The U.S. imperialist policy regarding Cyprus continues to be based on the renowned "Acheson" plan. This plan provides for Cyprus' partition through AKEL's nullification. The fundamental, main reason for the lack of progress in the intercommunal talks should be sought in the imperialist encouragement of the Turkish leadership's intransigence.

PAPER RAPS TURKISH OBJECTIONS TO U.S. GUARANTEES

NC121846 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 12 Feb 81 p 2

[From the "Laconic" column: "Eloquent Reaction"]

[Text] Of course Ankara's provocative reaction to the Greek Government's talks with the Supreme Commander of NATO Military Forces General Rogers on the responsibilities of the alliance's new headquarters in Larisa, Aegean operational control, the bases and so forth did not surprise us. We expected them and they were timely because they confirmed two things: first, that Turkey has not given up its absurd designs on our national area; second, that the Greek Government is on the right road by firmly insisting on completely safeguarding our national interests through additional guarantees and rejecting any settlement that would give even in the long term, strategic advantages to Turkey. If Ankara had no designs against us it would not be annoyed at all by a Greek agreement with the United States which would aim at strengthening the West's defense system and increasing our country's security. On the contrary, its reactions have shown that it is not placing the alliance's interests, uppermost but, above all, it is aiming at serving its selfish goals. After all, had Turkey not created the Aegean crisis and had it not grabbed 40 percent of Cyprus, we would not need to insist on securing our national area through additional guarantees. Let our Western allies see these things. One more opportunity is being given to them to ascertain whether they can rely on the "trustworthiness" of the country which, through bad fate, has become our neighbor.

PAPANDREOU OUTLINES PASOK'S ELECTION OBJECTIVES

[Excerpts] PASOK will not have any form of cooperation with any party or political "personalities" that have not identified themselves with its struggles; PASOK also rules out any postelection cooperation in a coalition government with the participation of the rightwing.

These categorical clarifications have been given by PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou in his exclusive interview with KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA, in which the majority opposition leader also:

--Foresees that PASOK will attain an unprecedented majority, the highest any party has achieved in past decades--that is, even more than the 53 percent attained by Y. Papandreou in 1964 or the 54 percent attained by Karamanlis under the special circumstances of 1974.

Mr Papandreou has characteristically stressed: "It is wrong to believe that the battle is being waged 'hand to hand' between PASOK and the New Democracy."

--He rules out any coalition government since such a government would not be in a position to adopt the measures to open the road to change; recalling the negative background of coalition governments in Greece, Mr Papandreou emphasized: "This is not Italy."

--He rejects the allegations by Mr Rallis that PASOK has identified itself with the KKE and stressed how the visions of the communist parties are the opposite of those of PASOK. "If not crafty, at least it is funny to talk about a PASOK-KKE identity when the communists cannot have identity among themselves."

--He charts the basic axis on which PASOK's preelection campaign, as well as its policy as a government, will move; democratization of the state, decentralization, facing the economy's downhill course, restoration of higher education, which is disintegrating, and the restoration of national dignity.

—He states that the establishment of the simple proportional representation [electoral system] will be one of his government's primary concerns.

—He accuses the rightwing of always being attached to the denounced monarchy and to decisions taken at foreign centers. He also reveals that the rightwing's so-called "modernization" is an imposture that has been necessary for its survival until now.

—He warns that the rightwing this time does not have the possibility of repeating old methods--force and rigging--and, particularly, it cannot use the armed forces which have now been reconciled with the people.

—He points out the rapid devaluation of the drachma, the deterioration of the balance of payments, the zero "increase" in the national product and the 50 percent increase in tax evasion.

—He condemns the rightwing's attempt to close, with nationally unacceptable terms, the question of the [U.S.] bases before the elections. He stated: "They are handling the issue in a naive and erroneous manner."

—He abhors as "janissaries" those who at times deserted the center and joined the rightwing where they behave in a manner "more royal than the king."

—He appraises the government's attitude on the issue of Frederika as evidence of New Democracy's confusion and inability to rule the country.

Mr Papandreou is severly critical of the question of the bases and of the negotiations the government is conducting with the United States on this issue. He specifically points out that the U.S. secretary of state has told the Greek ambassador in Washington, Mr Tzounis, that NATO could not protect Greece in the event of an attack from Turkey.

Government Statement

[Text of government spokesman statement on A. Papandreou's 15 February interview--date not given]

[Text] We note that, in his interview with a morning daily, the PASOK chairman has once again insulted the political faction of "New Democracy" since he alleged that this large faction "serves the economic oligarchy and the foreign element." It is obvious that with such expressions there cannot be a democratic political dialogue.

RIZOSPASTIS Reaction

NC172009 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 17 Feb 81 pp 1,9

[Excerpts] Mr Papandreou's interview carried by a Sunday newspaper contains many interesting points on positive positions toward the unpopular policy of the rightwing, the joint action within the mass movement and so forth, as well as contradictory positions that give rise to many questions.

One. Mr Papandreou, referring to Mr Rallis' well-known speech at Tripolis, in which he called upon PASOK to change its stand and to confront the communist movement, stressed that PASOK and the KKE "usually have completely opposite programs" and for this reason he is opposed to political cooperation, which he identifies with cooperation in the elections.

To start with, the fact that PASOK does not seek cooperation in the elections--irrespective of our own position--is something understandable. However, general political cooperation on joint goals is definitely an imperative need and any other stand is inconceivable.

Of course, the KKE and PASOK are not identical, they have divergent ideology, tradition, cohesion, structure and organization, as well as programs of socialism. However, in connection with the immediate, urgent and burning problem of change, they [the two parties] had put forward somewhat similar and even joint positions toward basic goals--such as the taking of power from the rightwing, the question of NATO, the [U.S.] bases, the EEC, the immunity enjoyed by monopolies, democratization and so forth. All these questions are still occupying the people today, while they are annoying the oligarchy, the rightwing, and their foreign patrons. As is well known, the KKE has not changed even by one iota these antiimperialist, democratic positions. In such a case, where are the completely opposite positions between the KKE and PASOK that do not allow for the carrying out of the change which is needed by the country?

Two. If PASOK's ambition is to receive a certain percentage of votes during the elections that will also give to PASOK the so-called self-sufficiency, this is understandable and legitimate. The negative element would be to let this ambition oppose the imperative need for joint action by the forces of change in the Parliament and among the people for the election and the backing of a democratic government.

We point out as positive the stand that any cooperation by PASOK and the rightwing to form a government is ruled out. But this is not enough because a government that would be dependent upon its own forces might be compelled to submit to the rightwing, in the case of basic authorities (president-state machinery of the rightwing), if it does not possess the necessary power to resist rightwing pressure--resistance which is secured by the backing of all the forces of change and from the organized and united struggle of the people.

Three. It is stressed that if PASOK does not receive the necessary majority, it will resort to fresh elections. But in such a case, seeking a sufficient majority becomes an end in itself. Then the question is why should PASOK embark on an adventure of successive elections since it could seek the election of a democratic government in cooperation with the parties that belong to the democratic opposition? Recourse to fresh, unjustified elections, instead of rallying together the forces of change, would disrupt them and in the end this would not bring any gain to anyone, and not to PASOK either.

In his interview, Mr Papandreou does not rule out--if he does not receive the necessary majority as he said--cooperation with the opposition parties on the basis of a joint program. The problem, however, is that the cooperation of all the forces of change is imperatively necessary not only for the election but also for the backing of a democratic government; regardless of whether or not PASOK receives the necessary majority, regardless of the percentage of votes that each party will receive during the elections, regardless of which parties will participate in a democratic government, and regardless of the concrete nature of backing such a government.

[Reporter E. Antonaros interview with Turkish Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal; date and place not given]

[Text] WELT: You were trying for some weeks to organize new help for Turkey in 1981. What expectations do you have with regard to the West?

Ozal: Roughly estimated we expect help amounting to $1.5 billion. The composition of this help should be concluded by the end of April or in early May, at the latest. Federal Finance Minister Matthoefer continues for me to be the coordinator of Western help for Turkey. Nothing is known to me officially of an intention of the Federal Government to give up this role. The OECD's taking over this function is out of the question.

WELT: You said recently that at least 4 to 5 years will be necessary to improve the Turkish economy. Must your statement be interpreted as indicating that prior to this period a return to democratic conditions cannot be expected?

Ozal: No, that was not meant. The generals have made the improvement of the economy from the very beginning one of the main aims of their actions. But the "National Security Council" (the junta consisting of 5 persons--insertion of the Editorial Board) does not at all link a return to democracy with an improvement of the economic situation. On the other hand, it is understandable that a stabilization of the economic situation could speed up the process of redemocratization. It would therefore also serve the interests of the West--Turkey holds in addition a strategically important position--not to abandon us just now.

WELT: You are considered an advocate of free market economy. Your opinion is rather new for Turkey with its rather great and inflexible state sector. Do you have difficulties in this respect?

Ozal: My program is indeed rather unusual for Turkey. We have, for example, eliminated control of interest rates and prices. Some circles are rather reserved, calling the meaning of this policy in question. Actually it is a plain matter of mentality: So far most Turks and the majority of businessmen were used to the state taking over most of the responsibility. That is now supposed to be radically changed. The success we have achieved so far proves me right.

WELT: One knows that you give first priority to fighting inflation. Press reports say that Turkey experienced last year a price increase rate of about 110 percent. What did you do against it?

Ozal: I must correct you. If one takes the inflation rate from January through December 1980 into consideration, it is indeed horrifying. But since my program has shown first successes in April 1980, it decreased very much. Figured on an annual basis, it amounts probably to some 35 or 45 percent. That is a considerable success. That was achieved among other things through free interest rates. It caused an increase of bank deposits and the senseless consumption was slowed down. Real estate speculation was also curtailed.

WELT: But the costs of this policy are great. Credits for the industry have become more expensive.

Ozal: That is correct, but so far the Turkish industry was used to expanding on the basis of cheap credits and to hiring new workers without concern for productivity, rationalization must set in now.

WELT: That almost sounds like a call for mass termination. How do you want to master the unemployment problem?

Ozal: First of all, the unemployment problem in Turkey is not as bad as it is being often described. Second, it is true that there are too many employees in various plants, particularly in the state sector. One cannot fire the people from one day to the next. But the economy must be improved, if need be with sacrifices.

WELT: A year ago the average Turk was confronted with several bottlenecks. The situation is much better now. How did you achieve that?

Ozal: The method was quite simple: import liberations helped to find out what was needed and what was not. Not only the state but also the consumers determine now for what imported goods Turkish foreign currency will be paid.

WELT: One last question: How about the Turkish solvency?

Ozal: It is still not the very best. But for a few months we are in a position to make several transfers. Our foreign currency amounting to somewhat more than $1 billion, has almost doubled since the beginning of this year. I am hopeful that the situation will continue to improve up to the end of 1981.

In his message, Ulusu commemorated the martyrs who sacrificed their lives for the Cyprus cause, and expressed gratitude for the veterans.

FOREIGN MINISTER DISPUTES GREEK VIEWS ON NATO AID

TA131643 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 13 Feb 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has said that it is unnecessary to recognize any relationship between the aid to be extended to Turkey and that to be extended to Greece within the framework of NATO.

In a news conference he held in Ankara today, Turkmen recalled that Greece has returned to the integrated defense of NATO and said that this is tantamount to cooperation between Turkey and Greece within the same defense system. Pointing out that the defense needs of Turkey and Greece are different, Turkmen noted that the recent changes in the world situation demonstrated this more clearly. He said, therefore, the proposal to observe fixed proportions in the aid to be extended to Turkey and Greece is not valid.

Additional Comments

NC181032 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 14 Feb 81 pp 1,7,9

[Excerpts] Ankara, (HURRIYET)--At noon yesterday, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen answered journalists' questions on Turkish-Greek relations at a press conference at the Foreign Ministry. Turkmen described as "nonsensical" Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis' argument that the military and economic aid given to both countries by the United States should be confined to a 7 to 10 ratio. Turkmen also stated that he was expecting the Greek foreign minister to make a statement on relations between both countries.

Although Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis told journalists in Brussels that he was going to make a statement in January on relations with Turkey, so far he has not done so. Criticizing Mitsotakis in this respect, Turkmen said: "My colleague Mitsotakis stated in Brussels that he was going to announce certain measures in January. No such announcement has yet been made and we are still waiting. There may be a reasonable delay, but an unnecessarily long delay mars the atmosphere of confidence and reduces mutual confidence in the future. We hope that Mitsotakis will make his statement before the secretaries general meet. We are expecting this statement."

Ilter Turkmen further stated that matters relating to Turkish-Greek authority and responsibility in the Aegean Sea were still being discussed between the military headquarters. Adding that Turkey opposed the extension of Greek territorial waters to 12 miles and that it would not change this policy.

Foreign Minister Turkmen declined to comment on a statement by NATO Mobile forces Commander General Reynolds on a probable attack by the Soviet Union, concluding: "Military exercises are based on certain hypotheses. A military operation has been carried in East Anatolia. Naturally, it was carried out on a hypothesis, and statements were made in the same vein. From a political aspect, I do not foresee the danger of an attack. I can say that this statement was made as a result of the operations and does not pursue any political aim."

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON ATLANTIC DEFENSE PRINCIPLES

DW181547 Cologne KOELNER STADT-ANZEIGER in German 18 Feb 81 pp 3-5

[Hans Schmitz and Hans Werner Kettenbach interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Hamburg on 14 February]

[Excerpt] [Question] Let us proceed to the topic of armament in general and to NATO's dual decision in particular. It looks as though, last but not least, in your party a certain irritation has emerged since the presidential change in Washington because people have gotten the impression that the new administration does not take the second part of the dual decision, that is, the negotiations with the Soviets, as seriously as the SPD has required as a precondition for its approval. Has, in this connection, a situation emerged from outside which makes it increasingly difficult, very hard, for the chancellor of the Social Democratic Party to find a majority for the policy which he must pursue out of foreign policy considerations?

[Answer] Well, I have to say for the second time that I fail to see that governing is being made increasingly difficult for me. Should you contend that for a third time, I would have to contradict you for a third time as well.

Irritations have occurred not only as a result of the U.S. election campaign, through some election campaign remarks and by the change in government, both being events which, to begin with, make it somewhat hazy to the European observers as to what the behavior of the new U.S. Government will be like on specific questions.

Irritations also occurred especially because the fighting in Afghanistan continues, with human beings losing their lives each day. Increasing irritations have also emerged because of concern about the events in a East European country. And the international deformations that could conceivably ensue in this connection play a very great role in our background of awareness, even though all of us are quite careful about expressing this since nobody wishes to make himself the herald of potential evil.

[Question] No irritation as a result of the dual decision?

[Answer] The dual decision of the North Atlantic alliance made in December 1979 is veritably symptomatic of the basic stance of the European states and governments on the military problem which the Soviet Union has increasingly created for us in Europe, symptomatic inasmuch as it proposes to accomplish two things at once. First, if the Soviet Union in one military field, in this particular case in the field of the European medium-range weapons, arms so strongly, not just modernizing or replacing obsolete arms but adding arms to a point where the balance in Europe is disturbed, then the West must be willing to do the same so that the balance will be preserved. But second, at the same time, the West must be willing and able to negotiate with the Soviets, these negotiations being aimed at concluding a treaty which will limit the extent of armament, limit it in balance.

This is now the dual decision in relation to the medium-range weapons, but this also is the fundamental philosophy in all military fields. As far as the medium-range weapons are concerned, the Soviets refused for as long as half a year to respond at all to the negotiating offer extended to them by the Americans on the basis of the NATO decision. They responded to it for the first time in connection with the visit which Genscher and I made in Moscow last summer.

[Question] But what is the situation now with regard to the negotiations?

[Answer] Thereafter, there was an initial round of negotiations between the Americans and the Russians on this subject in Geneva, a round of negotiations which need not be subjected to any fundamental criticism. I do not doubt that more rounds of negotiations will take place. This is a difficult subject. After all, it is not possible to negotiate that within a year or two. I fail to see any reason to assume that this time the Americans will refuse to continue the negotiations, quite to the contrary. Some of the West German media pretend that the Russians want to negotiate whereas the Americans do not. The facts were the other way around during the last 15 months. What does play a role indeed in this respect is the fact that some journalists in West Europe, including Germany, are becoming strongly affected by the psychological influence of Soviet propaganda.

[Question] Didn't the irritation crop up also because the Soivets are receptive to negotiations through relinquishing a restrictive position while the Americans are now reluctant to respond?

[Answer] This is nonsense. Pardon me for talking in such hard terms. I explained a while ago that the Americans have responded and that negotiations did take palce. In the meantime, a change in government occurred in the United States. It will now be up to the new government to conduct the second round of negotiations, and it will.

[Question] This means that the Soviet Union remains receptive to negotiations as stated to you...

[Answer] I do not know whether it remains so. I fail to see any reason to assume at this time that it does not. Nor do I have any reason to assume the new U.S. Government is not receptive. I have no reason to assume either. But it is necessary to add that the Soviet Union nevertheless has been continuing its SS-20 armament in the meantime at an immense speed and extent.

[Question] What is controversial in this discussion is this question: what is balance anyway?

[Answer] I fail to see that this is controversial.

[Question] Of yes, it is. What makes it so diabolical is that some people, adding up entirely different types of arms, arrive at the conclusion that balance does exist. It is not the Soviet Union alone which claims that.

[Answer] Now then, either we have a strategic interview, in which case I must line up a number of basic facts, or we do an interview on energy policy, or one that would cover a whole wide range of things. In that case, we must not go too far into detail on some specific points.

I think it is a philosophical question, of course: what is balance? If you put cabbage on the scales and weights on the opposite side and it turns out that you have to add 453 grams to balance the scales, then you can call this balance. If you have missiles on one side and soldiers on the other, then it is more difficult to do. You will get a clear balance only if you put 453 grams in weights on both sides of the scale, for in that case, you have balance in the same category. I did not say that the balance between East and West is disturbed basically in Europe. What I am saying is this: The Russians are about to disturb it in that field. This is not the first time that I have said this. I have been stating this publicly for years and I have said it to Mr Brezhnev twice. I have seen it coming for 3 years now, before my finding was not contested. Lately, it has been contested by some people.

[Question] How do you explain this change?

[Answer] There is a certain tendency which is reluctant to see the political danger inherent in the Soivet medium-range arament, the political danger, mind you. There is another tendency which has alwasy existed in the modern world, namely, believing that you serve peace best if you represent yourself as being defenseless, so that anybody can see that no dangers whatsoever emanate from you.

This is hard to put into practice. Some can do it. But I fail to see the neutral, nonaligned state of Yugoslavia doing something of the sort. I fail to see that neutral Switzerland would do it. To me, it is out of the question that the Federal Republic of Germany could adopt such a position, especially since we Germans really have seen at very close range the invasions of Czechoslovakia and Hungary.

We are living in a geographical location which prohibits such a policy for us. The Social Democratic Party, by the way, has viewed the matter this way for the past 20 years, since Fritz Erler's times, since Herbert Wehner's great speech on 30 June 1960. This will not change suddenly just because somebody comes up with new ideas. Likewise, it is wrong to think that this has a better or stronger moral basis than the view of balance advocated by the Social Democratic Party, myself and the Federal Government.

[Question] But what is it, then, that should be understood by balance?

[Answer] Military balance by and large, and only this can be at stake and not the listing of an equal number of soldiers for each soldier on the other side, and for each gun and each airplane and so forth. This approximate military balance is a necessary precondition for the preservation of peace in Europe. But it is not at all an adequate precondition. After all, the balance needs to be stabilized. If either side were allowed to add anything each year, we would soon end up in a spiral. But even a stabilized military balance is just a necessary prerequisite, not a sufficient one. In addition, there must be the will to listen to each other, to talk to each other, to conclude treaties with each other for cooperation in other fields, to settle quarrels with treaties, or if a settlement is impossible to take at least the sharpness out of them, as has been accomplished with the four-power agreement on Berlin.

[Question] You have said in the Bundestag that you could accept a formulation of the new American administration's military policy expressed in the formula "second to none," but not...

[Answer] Because it is compatible with the balance principle. "Second to none" means not being inferior to anybody, not being less strong than the other.

[Question] You have said simultaneously, and it was also noted in the communique on your visit with President Giscard d'Estaing: but no superiority in any way.

[Answer] Yes, correct.

[Question] It was revealed last week that President Reagan wants to increase the defense budget even more. It would amount, together with the new increase for 1982, to 225 billion, which would be an increase of some 25 percent compared with 1981. First, do these efforts justify the opinion that just the U.S. balance is involved, in contrast to what Reagan said in the election campaign? Second, can we cope with these efforts?

[Answer] We are not asked to cope with it. We have no reason to intrude or interfere. We also have not been asked to take part in other internal American discussions on defense problems which are being treated there with surprising frankness. It is none of our business to speak up in this area. The greatest imbalance between East and West consists in the number of soldiers. America tends to miss that point. In reality, one cannot wage war with money. One can defend oneself only with soldiers.

[Question] Regarding this discussion in the United States, do you believe that the stationing of the neutron weapon could decidedly improve the chance of defending central Europe?

[Answer] At present, I do not want to say anything on the neutron weapon issue. I have read an interview of Secretary of Defense Weinberger in the WASHINGTON POST, where he said that his public statements on this issue are his private opinion which so far has not been approved by the President.

We have not been consulted or informed by the American Government. If Mr Weinberger's statement were the official policy of the Americans, the whole North Atlantic alliance, and at any rate the NATO Council, would have to be involved. One should not continuously comment on eggs which have not been hatched.

[Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, could we use this opportunity to clarify a possible myth, namely, the so far unanswered question: How did President Carter's decision come about not to continue the production of the neutron weapon to the final stage? It is being said in the United States that something like rejection existed in Europe and last but not least in Bonn. There is also another version: No, the Europeans and the German federal chancellor had at least no objections to the neutron weapon. That is one of the arguments of Mr Weinberger who says that you were disappointed.

[Answer] I am not competent to clarify myths stemming from American domestic political disputes between two different administrations and two different parties. It is a fact that President Carter made his final decision without any consultation with the European allies.

[Question] His final decision?

[Answer] Yes. And to their surprise. This decision was a surprise for the U.S. allies.

I want to add a footnote here: I consider very doubtful the opinion voiced by some Western military and defense experts that neutron weapons are of advantage only for the defender and of disadvantage for the attacker. I consider to be surprisingly one-sided the opinion of some European discussion participants that it is an unnatural development if arms have an effect only on the soldiers of the adversary, but not simultaneously on houses, vehicles or inert material.

I find that objective analysis is missing in this entire debate. But since it is missing, since it has been missing for a long time, I can only regret it if in the current state of this discussion, new moments of irritation were to be carelessly introduced.

[Question] Let me touch on another irritation. You have said before that one should not play the role of the messenger of mischief. Reports have been heard this week, quoting sources in the U.S. State Department, according to which Soviet military action in Poland is considered "inevitable." Even the time was indicated: after the conclusion of the CPSU congress, which begins on 23 February. Do you consider such an assessment acceptable?

[Answer] I would consider it unacceptable for the federal chancellor to comment on such issues.

[Question] The key word is arms exports. Mr Federal Chancellor, you said to the Bundestag: "Basically, we do not want to pursue an arms export policy for employment reasons," However, you have mentioned simultaneously a whole series of considerations and criteria which in the case of Saudi Arabia could be considered a strong curtailment of this principle. No official request has been made by Riyadh, but the government there has clearly indicated its great interest in German arms. Why did the federal chancellor become involved that late in the public discussion on this issue and why does he not indicate his own priority more clearly?

[Answer] The word "however," contained in your question, is a wrong word. The discussion on possible supplies to Saudi Arabia does not mean a curtailment of the principle that no arms export policy will be set up for employment reasons.

The considerations involving Saudi Arabia are not employment policy considerations, they are economic strategy considerations, world policy considerations. I very much intend to indicate priorities in connection with this point in a further stage of discussions. I do not want to do so in a rash way.

I believe that in the meantime everybody can see our interest in stabilizing the external security of Saudi Arabia, our European and German interest, everybody who has observed somewhat the development of the world oil market in the last 7 years. If we have reason to be grateful to any one of the OPEC countries, it is Saudi Arabia. That will probably also be the case in the future. We cannot afford to have a public debate, such as in the last half of January, pretending that it is not a very important country. I disliked this kind of discussion on Saudi Arabia and therefore I commented on it publicly in the Bundestag. This is a question that can be answered only by considering the interests of our other partners and friends in that region and in the world as a whole, particularly the interests of Israel and Egypt, but also those of the European Community and of the United States.

[Question] When do you think a decision will be made?

[Answer] Such things need time to ripen. Talks with other friends and partners are underway. At present, I am under the impression, however, that Saudi Arabia, if it needed more Western arms than before, would get them rather from the United States and France than from the Federal Republic of Germany, particularly arms from America, although everybody knows that Saudi Arabia gravely criticizes the U.S.-promoted Camp David talks on an agreement between Egypt and Israel. I intend to go to Saudi Arabia in the next half year to explain to our friends there the foreign policy and domestic considerations which urge us to be most careful and restrained. By the way, the Saudi Government is very much aware of this circumstance.

[Question] In other words, you are not afraid that Saudi Arabia would consider it an unfriendly act if we do not supply the arms?

[Answer] No, certainly not, most certainly not. No unfriendly act. But the relations between Riyadh and London, between Riyadh and Paris, could develop more positively than between Riyadh and Bonn.

LACK OF EXPORT PERMIT HINDERS SAUDI ARMS DEAL

[Text] Bonn, 18 Feb (DPA)--Saudi Arabia wishes to buy 1,800 tanks from the Federal Republic, according to information available in Bonn. The Federal Government is aware in detail of these wishes. Saudi Arabian authorities and the German supplier firm reportedly have concluded the negotiations on this arms export deal which is said to be worth DM10 billion. The German firm has contacted the Federal Government but has not so far secured an export permit. According to the information, Saudi Arabia wants 300 Leopard II tanks as well as 1,500 Marders and Gepards.

According to the available information, the business partners are annoyed about the Federal Government's hesitation over granting an export permit. If the tank deal fell through, it was said, a proposed long-term cooperation agreement would not materialize. This agreement envisages the construction of plants and infrastructure by German firms. Saudi Arabia is prepared to guarantee 40 percent of German oil requirements for 10 years and also to grant credits.

PRESS REACTS TO PRESIDENT REAGAN'S ECONOMIC SPEECH

[Text] STUTTGARTER ZEITUNG discusses the economic program of the U.S. President and writes: President Reagan's economic speech exceeded everything that might have been expected of him. Doubts are indicated that the U.S. President wants to make people believe that growth without inflation can be achieved automatically via drastic reduction in tax rates with a simultaneous cut in state spending.

The trouble is that the outcome of this mechanism anticipated by his economic experts requires that all economic factors without exception, investors and consumers alike, behave as the White House wants them to behave. Nobody should react in any way different from what has now been delineated on the drawing board, an idea which veritably mocks market economy. Yet Reagan's attempt may succeed, albeit only for this highly improbable case.

The Oldenburg NORDWEST-ZEITUNG advocates this view: For the first time since his election, the U.S. President is undergoing his domestic policy test. His program is supported primarily by the hope that an economy liberated from excessive tax pressures and exaggerated governmental intervention will develop enough strength to rejuvenate itself. Since it is intended that all U.S. citizens profit from the expected tax relief, an increase in private consumption is also the strategy of the new men in the White House. The 40th President of the United States is still facing mountains of impediments. It is a difficult road that Reagan is travelling in the domestic and economic policy fields. Should he fail with his program for rejuvenating the economy, then those politicians in the United States and in Europe, who have always distrusted the mechanisms of the free economy and increasingly invoked the state, will have the upper hand. Should he, in contrast, be successful, then Reagan will have set effective signals also for America's partners here in Europe. It is not just the Americans who hope that Reagan will reach his goal.

SPOKESMAN ON EAGLEBURGER MISSION, EL SALVADOR

[Text] Bonn, 18 Feb (DPA)--The Federal Government adheres to its view that the civil war in El Salvador can best be ended by an understanding between democratic forces in both camps, Government Spokesman Kurt Becker told the press in Bonn after today's cabinet meeting. He said that the government had "taken note of" the statement by U.S. special envoy Lawrence Eagleburger on the situation in El Salvador and alleged Soviet arms deliveries to the leftist opposition.

Becker said that Eagleburger would return to Bonn after completing his mission to five European capitals in order to talk to Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who is currently visiting Cairo. The government spokesman stressed Bonn's great interest in avoiding a flareup of East-West antagonism in El Salvador.

Regarding the U.S. envoy's statement, Becker said: "We can only take note of what the Americans claim to have detected." He added that Bonn was unable to "verify physically" reports about military support for the rebels by the USSR and other communist states. A German Foreign Ministry spokesman described the talks conducted in Bonn yesterday by President Ronald Reagan's envoy as part of the consultations with his Western allies promised by the President.

The Foreign Ministry spokesman said that Washington had not fixed its attitude on El Salvador but is in the process of forming its opinion. Earlier reports from Washington suggested that President Reagan wants to give increased support to the ruling junta in El Salvador, which is based on Christian Democrats and military officers.

DIE WELT DISCUSSES BORDER POLICY REGULATION

[Heinz Vielain article: "Baum Cuts Down the Surveillance of GDR Functionaries"]

[Text] Bonn--Controversies are forthcoming in Bonn over an ordinance for the new regulation of interoffice support of the federal border policy for the Office for the Protection of the Constitution, now being prepared by Federal Interior Minister Gerhart Baum.

According to what DIE WELT has learned, the opposition has moved for a special meeting of the interior ministers of the laender, at which Baum's intentions are to be discussed.

The intelligence service chiefs of the Federal Government and the laender were informed about the planned new edict of the federal interior minister last weekend. Reportedly, the chiefs of the authorities for the protection of the constitution in various laender on this occasion voiced considerable objections. Special criticism in this connection also came from the Hamburg Office for the Protection of the Constitution.

Under the edict prepared by Interior Minister Baum, its text now is available to DIE WELT, the federal border police in future may report to the Office for the Protection of the Constitution only the entry of "GDR" functionaries who are strongly suspected of subversive or intelligence activities in the Federal Republic. In any case, a special "request" must have been submitted by the Federal Office for the Protection of the Constitution. The corresponding application by the Office for the Protection of the Constitution requires prior approval by the Bonn Interior Ministry in each case.

According to Baum's edict, a request for interoffice support by the Office for the Protection of the Constitution to the federal border police in any case requires that "actual clues" exist in support of the suspicion that persons entering the country combine their visit to the Federal Republic with these intentions:

"Efforts aimed against the liberal, democratic basic system, the existence and the safeguarding of the Federal Government, one of the laender or an illegal curtailment of the activities of members of constitutional organs of the Federal Government or of one of the laender; Activities endangering security or intelligence activities for a foreign power; Efforts aimed at the use of force, or respective preparatory actions to endanger foreign interests of the Federal Republic of Germany."

Point one is explained as follows by the minister's decree: "This prerequisite can exist particularly with regard to persons holding important positions or functions in organizations on federal territory which have anticonstitutional aims," or to persons who "hold significant functions or positions outside the federal territory in organizations which instruct or cooperate with organizations pursuing anticonstitutional aims."

Upon every request for interoffice support of the Office for the Protection of the Constitution, the federal border police can become active for not more than 3 months. "Requests for extension are impossible."

According to the prepared decree of the Ministry of the Interior, the persons which the Office for the Protection of the Constitution reported to the federal border police may not be registered in the book of wanted persons kept at the border. Moreover, no police action may be "based" on the request of the Federal Office for the Protection of the Constitution.

The planned new regulation naturally applies to travelers from the East as well as from the West. Permanent border checks, particularly at the checkpoints to The Netherlands, have produced in the past important clues about entering terrorists.

TUNISIAN PRIME MINISTER ARRIVES FOR 3-DAY VISIT

[Text] Paris, 18 Feb (AFP)--Tunisian Premier Mohamed Mzali arrived here today for his first official visit to a Western capital since he took over as premier last April.

Mr Mzali, who will spend three days in France, was welcomed by French Premier Raymond Barre, with whom he had an initial round of talks at the airport here.

He will also have talks with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing expected to cover the planned merger between Chad and Libya, as well as recent developments in the Arab world. Tunisians hold the post of general secretary of both the Arab League and the Islamic Conference.

Mr Mzali's visit follows a visit to Tunis by Mr Barre in October.

POLL SHOWS MORE PEOPLE 'DISSATISFIED' WITH GISCARD

[Text] FRANCE-SOIR for Friday, 13 February [presumably issue cover-dated 14 February] carries the monthly popularity poll drawn up by IFOP. The gap between those French people who are dissatisfied and those who are satisfied with Giscard d'Estaing's action is widening. The "satisfied" now represent 37 percent of the people questioned, as in January, but the number of "dissatisfied" people has increased from 47 percent last month to 51 percent.

The percentage of "dissatisfied" people had not previously reached 50 percent. Its highest point had been 47 percent in December 1976, October 1980 and January 1981. The gap between "dissatisfied" and "satisfied" people (14 points) is the widest recorded since this opinion poll started. It was 10 points last month.

The head of state's rating has been constantly negative since September 1980. Raymond Barre's rating is increasingly negative. One out of every four people questioned (25 percent as against 27 percent in January) is "satisfied" with the premier's action while 63 percent (as against 57 percent in January) are "dissatisfied." The gap is therefore 38 points and the government chief has achieved record unpopularity. His previous worst ratings had been recorded in September 1979 (31 points), December 1980 (30 points) and January 1981 (30 points).

This poll was carried out on the basis of 1,906 interviews conducted between 3 and 10 February on a representative national sample of the French population aged 18 years and over.

GOVERNMENT REPLIES TO USSR PROTEST ON TERRORISM

[Text] Rome--The Italian Government has replied to the Soviet Union's 17 January verbal note in which Moscow protested at references to the USSR contained in Pertini's interview on terrorism's foreign "headquarters." Italy, too, has adopted the form of a verbal note, which was read to Ambassador Lunkov by Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs Speranza. The meeting took place at the Foreign Ministry. This is the text of the Italian reply:

"In connection with Deputy Foreign Minister Ryzhov's 27 January 1981 communication to the Italian ambassador in Moscow, the Italian Government considers it necessary to point out the following to the USSR:

"With regard to the reference to the statements by President of the Republic Sandro Pertini, the Italian Government draws the Soviet Government's attention to the joint note issued by the president's office and the government, dated 27 January. This statement stresses that the president of the Republic referred in his television interview to an objective fact, namely that two countries on the border of the Atlantic area were the object of an intensive terrorist offensive.

"The same note points out that the president of the Republic made no mention of specific responsibilities on the part of any particular country. The Italian Government's position on the problems of terrorism was further specified on 3 February by the prime minister in his speech to the Lower House and is known to the Soviet Government.

"Committed to steadfastly combating the criminal networks that are trying to destabilize democratic life, the Italian Government has taken note of the statement made to the Italian ambassador in Moscow, which confirms the Soviet Union's position of condemning terrorism. Especially at a time when we are witnessing a serious deterioration in the international situation which is prompting serious concerns in us, the Italian Government's hope is that all states will make an active commitment to realizing this principle and that this will strengthen the conditions for broader cooperation among the countries that wish to pursue prospects for constructive dialogue and peaceful coexistence.

CALVO SOTELO OUTLINES POLICIES, PROGRAMS

LD181950 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1700 GMT 18 Feb 81

[Excerpts] A few minutes ago, in the Congress of Deputies, Prime Minister candidate, Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo, who had been nominated by his majesty the king in accordance with article 99 of the constitution as a result of the crisis caused by the resignation of Adolfo Suarez, the outgoing prime minister concluded his speech to the house asking for its support to form a new government.

The candidate, Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo, began his speech by paying tribute to Adolfo Suarez, the outgoing prime minister under whose orders he acted as a minister for more than 4 years, the last of them as second deputy prime minister with responsibility for economic affairs. He later added that with the resignation of Adolfo Suarez, the important era of the transition was coming to an end and that he aspired to govern from continuity, but not from continuism. Continuity without continuism, he said, because he intends to try out new formulas of government.

Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo then referred to the principal lines of action of his economic program to tackle the crisis which the country is currently undergoing, a program which he summed up in the following points: resolution in the face of energy problems; the creation of new jobs; a careful watch on inflation; industrial reconversion; the promotion of exports; and solutions to the difficult situation in the agriculture and fishing sectors.

On the subject of foreign policy, Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo pointed out the following guidelines for his government:

Referring to the foreign policy to be followed by the new government team, Calvo Sotelo stressed seven priority points for the future conduct of the next cabinet. The first of them is continuing a foreign policy aimed at safeguarding the internal and external security of Spanish interests and individual and collective interests in defense matters. Second, he raised the protection of Spanish emigrants and the safeguarding of ethical and spiritual values. He also pointed to the continuation of a decidedly European policy in the political sphere with greater active participation in the Council of Europe and with our country's integration into the EEC in the near future.

He also pointed to a good-neighbor policy to be pursued by Spain in the various areas. With Portugal, he pointed to the need to collaborate closely given the similarity of their economies and social problems. With France, he said, even though its demonstrated incomprehensible reticence about cooperation in the struggle against terrorism, an increase in realtions and cooperation in economic and antiterrorist matters is expected. With Great Britain, he stressed the continuation of the principles established with regard to Gibraltar in the Lisbon declaration. And, finally, with regard to the Arab world, he said that relations with these countries carry with them the elements of an undying friendship searching for a definitive and just solution to the conflict of the Maghreb. Referring to Morocco, Calvo Sotelo pointed to the desire to rely on its economic and political development in a coordination of wills and of friendly relations.

Finally, referring to Equatorial Guinea, he spoke of the will to increase efforts to strengthen the democratic process in this republic.

With regard to NATO, he said that the link with the Atlantic alliance is conditioned by other different approaches, but he reiterated Spain's Atlantic vocation following a consistent line of action already expressed by the Union of the Democratic Center in the previous governments. He stated that the link with NATO does not entail risks for Spanish territorial integrity, and promised to quickly initiate consultations with other parliamentary groups to study the conditions for a possible Spanish entry into the organization.

With regard to bilateral relations with the United States, Calvo Sotelo said that bilateral (?relations) would be more coherent through economic, scientific and commercial cooperation, (?accepting) the military scope contained in the present agreements.

Finally, on matters of public security policy, Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo said that when the citizens feel that basic values are endangered, this is when the greatest enemy of liberty emerges--fear. In this respect the policy of public security will be at the service of liberty and democracy.

He referred to measures for the prevention of juvenile delinquency, which at present accounts for 40 percent of the prisoners in Spanish prisons.

He asked for the collaboration of all parties in the face of terrorism, setting out the main points of the proposed government's line of action to tackle this plaque which is currently eating away at Spanish society.

PCE SECRETARY GENERAL STRESSES PARTY UNION

LD181757 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 13 Feb 81 p 12

[Text] PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo pointed out to his party's Central Committee at its last meeting the need to pacify that organization's internal conflicts in light of a possible early election. The Communist leader called on the PCE leaders "to reflect seriously on the need to restore in the party an atmosphere which will enable us to face this election, if, as is possible, and I would say even probable, it takes place this year."

Carrillo attributes to the "critical" sector of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] the desire to give the political map of this country a new shape, in which the main feature will be "a party even more conservative than the UCD, linked with the church and even more docile with respect to the economic right. And what is not clear, despite the fact that they adopted officialist stances at the UCD congress, is whether Martin Villa, Pio Cabanillas and the forces which they represent will not join the forces in favor of that large conservative party in such a situation." The PCE secretary general described as "interesting" the fact that Alfonso Osorio, who is not a UCD member, followed the course of the centrist congress in Palma.

He also regretted that the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] has made a negative response to the possibility of urging the masses to mobilize for a solution to the government crisis in which the PSOE would take part.

Following this analysis, Carrillo said that the new government will be very weak and will lean more toward the right, with the prospect of holding an election this year. "I sincerely believe," the PCE secretary general asserted at this point, "that the party is not in the best shape today for facing an early election." And he added: "My opinion is that we should aim at holding our congress on the scheduled date and at the same time consider how to rebuild a genuine party front in light of the possiblity of an early general election."

The report concludes by stating that if PCE members are not convinced that it is necessary to join forces with the Socialists, "We will be able to set ourselves the most attractive aims and tasks, but we will not succeed in achieving these aims."

PARTICIPANTS ANSWER QUESTIONS BEFORE TALKS SESSION

Gobbi, Ioannidhis Comments

NC181617 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 18 Feb 81

[Text] This evening a new meeting was held in the Ledra Palace Hotel within the framework of the intercommunal talks during which the discussion continued on the constitutional aspect of the Cyprus problem. The UN secretary general's special envoy to Cyprus, Gobbi, the Greek side's representative to the intercommunal talks, Ioannidhis, and Turkish Cypriot Interlocutor Onan participated in the meeting which was the third in the fifth round of talks. On behalf of the Greek Cypriot side, advisers to the talks Triandafillidhis and Mrs Souliotis, and adviser on constitutional and other related issues Poliviou, participated in the meeting.

Speaking before the meeting, Gobbi said that he anticipated a very constructive meeting because a very complicated issue would be discussed. We are working, he said, on a comparative basis that is very useful and we shall understand what common ground exists for the true points of difference. Gobbi added that discussion is a practical exercise and from this viewpoint it constitutes a good challenge.

Replying to a question as to what hinders the discussion of the Nicosia airport issue within the framework of the practical measures, Gobbi said that we are in a preparatory period analyzing the issue and that an exchange of views is taking place. For the time being, he added, we have not reached final conclusions but, as you know, this is an issue that we are examining on a parallel basis during the negotiations. He also said that various facts are being examined on a parallel basis, something that, as he mentioned, is part of the usual exercise in the search for common ground.

In addition, Gobbi said that UN senior functionary Sherry, who is responsible for Cyprus affairs, will leave Cyprus tomorrow.

The Greek Cypriot side's representative at the talks, Ioannidhis, expressed the hope that during the meeting a comparative study of the proposals for the constitutional aspect would begin. In any case I must reiterate, Ioannidhis continued, that a substantive dialogue can begin if and when we have specific proposals from the Turkish Cypriot side on the territorial aspect.

Replying to a question whether he links the constitutional with the territorial aspect, Ioannidhis said that a constitution cannot function in a void because it must be implemented within an area. For this reason, he went on to say, the two issues are mutually dependent, mutually linked and mutually related. Replying to another question Ioannidhis said that for the time being, no other issues are being discussed on a parallel basis.

Onan Views Reported

[Excerpt] Turkish Cypriot Interlocutor Onan expressed the hope that a comparative study would begin regarding constitutional proposals which both sides had submitted.

Replying to a question as to when it would be possible to make a comparative study of the territorial aspect, Onan said that a comparative study is being made of all issues but the point is now each side approaches the study.

Replying to another question connected with his promise that he would submit a map, Onan said that the issue concerns the criteria and various other aspects which must be agreed upon. When these have been agreed upon they will be interpreted on a map.

Bayrak Radio Reports

TA181658 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 18 Feb 81

[Text] The intercommunal talks on the solution of the Cyprus problem are being continued at the Ledra Palace Hotel under the auspices of the United Nations. Today's session, which began at 1630 and which is the third meeting of the fifth round, is dealing with the constitutional aspect of the problem.

Replying to journalists' questions before the meeting, the UN secretary general's special envoy to Cyprus Hugo Gobbi said that efforts will be made to determine the common grounds and differences of opinion on the constitutional issue between the two sides. In reply to a question on whether or not he submitted any proposal to include the subject of the Lefkosa [Nicosia] international airport on the agenda of the talks, Gobbi said that a decision on this issue would be reached in the near future.

In a statement to the press, Turkish Cypriot Negotiator Umit Onan said that a comparative study would be conducted on the proposals submitted by both sides regarding the constitutional aspect. In reply to a question, Onan noted that something can be expected from the Turkish Cypriot side on the practical measures--the second item of the agenda--after the Turkish Cypriots' requests have been answered.

In his statement, Greek Cypriot Negotiator Yeoryios Ioannidhis claimed that a constructive dialogue can be developed only through concrete proposals submitted by the Turkish Cypriot side on the territorial issue. Pointing out that the constitutional issue is related to the territorial issue, Ioannidhis noted that no other issue is being discussed simultaneously with the talks.

Meanwhile, Gobbi noted that Schlittler Silva, deputy of the UN special representative in Cyprus, and George Sherry, director of the UN Secretariat General political affairs assistant's office, will leave Cyprus tomorrow. The intercommunal talks will be resumed on 4 March.

PRESS COMMENTS EVALUATIONS OF TALKS' DEVELOPMENTS

ELEVTHEROTIPIA Criticizes Turks

NC190805 Nicosia ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 19 Feb 81 p 1

[Text] Authoritative political circles have commented on the statement made by the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor yesterday, prior to the third meeting of the fifth round of the inter-Cypriot talks. They said that this statement fully reveals the Turkish intentions as to the Cyprus problem. It has now become clear that Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot side firmly link acceptance of the invasion faits accomplis--lifting the "economic and political embargo" as the Turkish side calls it--with the condition to submit concrete proposals on territorial question at a subsequent stage.

The same circles stressed: "The Turkish Cypriot side has made this very clear at the negotiations table--a fact that recently prompted UN Special Envoy in Cyprus Gobbi to exert persistent efforts to avert a possible failure of the talks, because he knows that there cannot be any substantive discussion or an exchange of views on the constitutional aspect without both sides simultaneously submitting concrete proposals on the territorial question. The constitutional and the territorial aspects must be taken up in a unified way because of their nature."

The same political circles have interpreted the Turkish side's insistence not to submit proposals on the territorial question as a trick to lead the Greek Cypriot side into an impasse so that they would have to accept what the Turks submit at a subsequent stage, if in the meantime it succeeds--as it hopes--in having the so-called political and economic embargo lifted, a thing that would prejudge the constitutional aspect of the Cyprus problem and would obscure the territorial aspect that would naturally bring about a separatist solution.

The same circles referred to another point in Mr Onan's statement which hinted that if the Turkish side is to submit proposals on the territorial question, there should be prior agreement on the criteria and on other aspects. These circles stressed that apart from the fact that this is contrary to what was agreed between the two sides for the resumption of the dialogue, it is also contrary to the Makarios-Denktas agreement, which includes a provision on the question of criteria, namely economic viability, productivity and land ownership. The same circles concluded: "Therefore, there is no reason for a fresh agreement on the question of criteria."

Referring to Mr Onan's hint that the Greek Cypriot side had not submitted any proposals and had failed to respond to the Turkish side's requests on the question of practical measures, the same circles described these allegations as false, and stressed that it is the Greek Cypriot side that made a concrete request for practical measures for various issues, mainly for the following:

--On the missing persons.
--On the enclaved people.
--On the Nicosia-Larnaca highway.
--On social insurance matters and on cooperation in matters of health.

The circles added: "The Turkish side has not replied to three of the above-mentioned issues, whereas, although it has expressed agreement, it declines to give the green light for the other issues for reasons particularly connected with the impression on world public opinion, which would be in favor of the Greek Cypriot side."

O AGON Analyzes Talks

NC190920 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 19 Feb 81 pp 1, 8

[Excerpts] Instead of steps forward, there have been leaps backward and instead of narrowing the gap between the two sides on positions and views, it has been widened to the extent that if the current intercommunal talks fail, or if they are definitely suspended it would be very difficult for the UN secretary general to institute a fresh round of talks.

This gloomy but revealing description of the present state of affairs in the intercommunal talks was provided by authoritative political circles to O AGON.

The same circles stressed that the intercommunal dialogue, which has been going on for 5 months, has not produced anything. They said that it is not only nearing a deadlock and the danger of failure, but it has also actually contributed to a retrogression of the Cyprus problem as well as reduced to a minimum all prospects for the promotion of the problem.

The same circles stressed that the Turkish side is basically responsible for the current desperate situation. (This, of course, does not mean that the Greek side's wrong actions and decisions, that have actually assisted the Turkish goals, are being disregarded or underestimated.) In this connection it was disclosed that the Turkish demands right now surpass all the previous ones in provocation and intransigence, while the Turkish side's attitude and positions in general have hardened more than ever before in any other round of the intercommunal talks.

This view is based on the following facts:

1. The recent Turkish constitutional proposals are much worse than those submitted in 1978, which were rejected by the Cyprus Government undiscussed with the well-known statement: "We are not committing suicide..."

The recently submitted Turkish constitutional proposals, although in the guise of federation, in essence include the philosophy of confederation and partition, and also reveal a further escalation in Turkish intransigence and the substitution of a number of Turkish positions by still harder principles. Thus, although until now the Turks were in favor of the principle to have the office of president in rotation--one Greek and by one Turk--their fresh proposals suggest the setting up of a "presidential council" to be composed of two Greeks and two Turks and presided over in rotation by a Greek and by a Turk.

2. As for the territorial question, the Turks have persistently refused to "show their cards" and they are not going to submit any proposal on this aspect unless the Greek Cypriot side is prepared to lift the embargo.

I SIMERINI Cites Turks' Stand

NC191130 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 19 Feb 81 p 8

[Excerpts] Limassol, 18 Feb--The Democratic Rally [DISI] chairman yesterday revealed that from a Turkish document he had read on the constitutional proposals, it appeared that the differences between the two sides have not narrowed but widened.

Kliridhis spoke at noon yesterday at the Limassol Rotary meeting, where he described the Cypriot issue as a problem of lost opportunities owing to the leadership's indecisiveness in taking the necessary realistic decisions.

The DISI chairman then referred to the present deadlock, which he had foreseen 3 months ago and had spoken about at his party's rally in Limassol. Kliridhis stressed that although in 1976 Denktas was speaking about a partnership state with a 30 to 70 percent representation. He is now asking for equal representation.

Kliridhis went on to say that although the Turkish Cypriots in the past recognized the presidential system, they are now asking for the abolition of the institution of president and are proposing a four-member committee with equal representation by two members from each side with a rotating committee president. The DISI chairman also said that although in the past the Turks had never brought up the issue of their community's legal status, they are now asking for the right to conclude separate agreements with other countries.

Kliridhis also said: "No rapprochement whatsoever on the territorial aspect of the Cypriot issue was achieved because the Turks are refusing to accept any conditions prior to the settlement of the constitutional issue. The Turks are filibustering because it is to their advantage and serves to harden their position. In the event of a total deadlock, UN Secretary General Waldheim will find it very difficult to restart them." Kliridhis concluded: "In the event the talks fail, the only solution would be to appeal to the Security Council, which will submit specific proposals for discussion by the two parties."

AVEROF CONFIRMS ISLANDS WILL REMAIN FORTIFIED

NC181625 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 18 Feb 81 p 1

[Text] Greece has undertaken no obligation to demilitarize the islands adjoining Turkey. National Defense Minister Evangelos Averof, in a written reply to a question submitted by a deputy, denied the "report" as totally unfounded. The minister also reiterated that "repetition of such crude inaccuracies harms national interests in different ways, particularly because it encourages those who want the demilitarization of the islands and makes them believe that this is possible. Such a question, however, cannot even be discussed."

In discussing other issues touched upon by Deputy K. Bandouvas of EDIK, Averof:

--Stressed that, "no American (NATO) official made any statement during negotiations that the U.S. side made promises to the Turkish officials that the United States will not insist on the full withdrawal of Turkish troops from Cyprus" and;
--Wondered "how could it be that the deputy submitting the question on 19 January referred to U.S. demands (on the question of bases) which logically could not have been submitted before the commencement of the negotiations (27 Jan 81)."

Answering another question submitted by PASOK deputies on the violation of Greek airspace by Turkish military aircraft, in another written reply, Averof stressed the following:

--"During the period from 26 December 80 to 23 Jan 81, five aircraft of the Turkish Air Force, in contravention of regulations on air traffic control (non-submission of flight plans) did enter, for a very brief period, into an area less than 10 nautical miles from our shores.
--"All the necessary measures for the protection of our sovereign rights were adopted with respect to these violations in the same way that they were adopted in the past under similar circumstances.
--"Specifically, these aircraft were intercepted and identified by air defense aircraft of our military Air Force and, at the same time, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs was informed of the incident so that the necessary representations to the Turkish side might be undertaken through diplomatic channels."

The question was submitted by Deputies L. Verivakis and Mrs Amalia Fleming.

FRENCH FIRM PLACES ORDER WITH AVIATION INDUSTRY

NC181550 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 17 Feb 81

[Text] An agreement was signed today between the Greek Aviation Industry and Avions Marcel Dassault/Breguet Aviation of France. The agreement, signed at the Greek Aviation Industry offices, was signed by the industry's chairman, Stratos, and the French firm's sales manager in Greece (Pajeau). This is another success within the framework of international successes achieved so far by the Greek Aviation Industry.

The agreement provides for the construction of aircraft and aeronautical parts for use in modern fighter aircraft of high technology and performance. The rise of the Greek Aviation Industry to this level of international cooperation is proof of the high technology developed at the Tangra complex.

In an address, Greek Aviation Industry Chairman Stratos said, among other things, that this agreement is the start of wider cooperation between the Greek industry and the French firm in the aerospace industrial field.

CUMHURIYET CRITICIZES HAIG TERRORISM STATEMENT

NC191107 Istanbut CUMHURIYET in Turkish 14 Feb 81 p 3

["The World Today" column by Ali Sirmen: "Seriousness"]

[Excerpts] The new U.S. administration, bearing the Reagan stamp, is rapidly settling into office. The impression that Reagan and his team created in the early days is not at all cheering, nor is it compatible with seriousness. For instance, Reagan's secretary of state, Alexander Haig, made a statement to the famous American newspaper New York TIMES the other day that bewildered Americans as well as U.S. diplomatic circles. What is more, it forced the CIA to make a counterstatement. In that statement, Secretary of State Alexander Haig had argued that international terrorism is being supported by the Soviet Union.

We hasten to state that we are not in a position to express any views on the matter in question because we do not possess any information as to who supports international terrorism.

However, a person who has risen to the position of secretary of state, who once acted as a White House adviser and who occupied the highest position in NATO has to be careful in his speeches, each of which carries an official character.

Unfortunately, Haig's statement on international terrorism failed to comply with this rule and with the principle of seriousness.

The counterstatement issued by the CIA to the effect that it possessed no information whatsoever to indicate that international terrorism enjoys the Soviet Union's support has put not only Haig but the entire Reagan administration into a difficult position.

CUMHURIYET DISCUSSES NATO-ALLEGED SOVIET THREAT

NC100938 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 14 Feb 81 p 2

["Window" column by Ilhan Selcuk: "Is a Cold War Possible?"]

[Text] ANATOLIA has sent the following dispatch from Erzurum: The NATO staff officers in Erzurum observing the "Ally Enterprise-81" military exercises have stated that "a Soviet attack on Turkey most likely would be in the form of a surprise attack and preparations must be made to meet it."

These staff officers, who maintain that the Soviet Union has for years been pursuing a policy aimed at dominating the eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East, said that "the only force confronting Soviet strategy is Turkey." The NATO staff officers also expressed the view that in the event of a war, the Soviet Union "would probably launch its first attack on the straits area," adding that the aim of the Soviet forces would be to establish a land bridge with the Middle East and then seize the oilfields.

These foreign staff officers, who have come to Erzurum to observe the military exercises--whoever they are--have once again given expression to an old issue. Undoubtedly, in a world war the Soviet Union has plans for the Middle East oilfields and the Turkish straits. Those plans directed at the Middle East concern, in the first place, the Islamic countries. Turkey has to act meticulously in this respect. It must implement the careful policy outlined by Prime Minister Ulusu at the recent Islamic Conference. Identifying ourselves with a NATO or U.S. policy directed at the Persian Gulf, leaping across the countries in the area, may prove prejudicial to our national interests.

The Mecca communique that was signed at the Islamic Conference held in At-Ta'if stresses the fear of the Islamic countries of the Persian Gulf being converted into an arena of conflict between the big powers. The communique embodies the principle that "the Gulf can be protected only by the Islamic countries," which means that the logic of the NATO staff officers is not valid as far as the Middle East is concerned. The Islamic countries do not need the protection of a big power to protect their territory. Can Turkey, which signed the Mecca communique, identify itself with a policy that runs counter to this truth?

The question of the straits, however, concerns only Turkey. The NATO treaty signed in Washington on 4 April 1949 is not always interpreted or implemented in keeping with Turkey's national interests. We had a bitter experience concerning this in 1964 during the Cyprus crisis and also following the Cyprus peace operation in 1974 when the United States imposed the arms embargo on Turkey that lasted several years. Wasn't there, we wonder, a Soviet threat to the straits during the U.S. embargo?

The events we have been experiencing tend to worry us. As a matter of fact, the present NATO strategy can, by no means, protect Turkey against an outside attack. We have learned from Ataturk and from our war of independence how to depend on our own strength, not on foreign states and international treaties, for our national defense.

That the United States could abandon Turkey in the event of a Soviet onslaught became manifest in the notorious letter from the late President Johnson to the late Ismet Pasha in 1964.

The greatest risk in the NATO strategy is shouldered by Turkey, but the Turkish Armed Forces are not equipped according to NATO standards. Our "allies" are not willing to foot the bill to support Turkey. What is more, both Greece and Israel oppose such an act. In fact, Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis has recently reiterated this policy of Athens.

To put it briefly, the Islamic countries oppose the expansion of NATO toward the Middle East and the conversion of the Gulf area into an arena of war between the big powers. We cannot act as an extension of the U.S. military force in the Gulf area. The improvement of Turkey's military strength is obstructed by Greece within NATO; Ankara's behavior toward Israel brings the Israeli lobby in Washington into action; and Europe counterbalances Reagan's attitude. Under these circumstances, it is not easy to politicize and to return to the "cold war" years by merely arguing that there is a threat from the Soviet Union.

TERCUMAN ARTICLE ON NATO'S 'BRIDGE' IN MIDEAST

NC181122 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 13 Feb 81 p 4

[Article by Fahir Armaoglu: "Turkey, NATO and the Middle East"]

[Excerpts] Turkey's pro-Middle East policy, which began in November and took, one might say, the form of a show of force at the Islamic Conference Summit in At-Ta'if in January and at the recent military exercises, has now reached a significant stage. More importantly, Turkey has formally announced that it has undertaken the task of acting as a bridge between NATO and the Middle East.

The winter maneuvers carried out in Erzurum, both by the 3d Army and by NATO's Southeastern Allied Land Forces under Turkey's command, may envisage a danger from the northeast, but the statements made by military authorities clearly indicate tha the danger from the northeast may materialize only because of the weak and unstable situation in the Middle East.

We must recall a point here. In essence, NATO's small members oppose extending NATO's area of responsibility to the Middle East. As a matter of fact, unless the treaty of alliance is altered, no member can undertake responsibility in the Middle East. But this is not the real issue. In his statement, General Guneral has presented the situation in an extremely interesting manner. He defended the view that NATO's wing in Turkey should be strengthened against possible dangers from Mideast developments that might involve the NATO defense area.

But no matter what might be said, Turkey has decided to form a bridge between NATO and the Middle East, a decision that will undoubtedly please the Reagan administration, which is handling relations with the Soviet Union within the wide framework of the principle known as "linkage." Talks held with Senator Tower in Ankara yesterday should be evaluated from this angle.

PRIME MINISTER ULUSU DISCUSSES EXPORT LEVELS

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that the economic policy implemented by the government in a bid to solve the economic bottlenecks encountered in the country in recent years has begun to yield positive results. Replying to questions by a Turkish Radio and Television correspondent regarding the economic situation in the country, Ulusu said: We are very happy to observe that the measures taken by the government have begun to bear fruit and that our economy is steadily improving and being strengthened.

In fact, our exports in recent months have greatly increased compared to previous years. We have reached a record figure in the history of our republic. Our export revenues for December 1980 reached a record level. We are happy to observe that this trend has continued into January 1981; our export revenues for January totaled $430 million.

I believe it is beneficial to compare this figure with the export revenues of past years in order to better explain the situation. Our export revenues in January 1978 reached $151 million; in January 1979, $216 million; and in January 1980, $228 million. We have reached $430 million in January 1981. In other words, our export revenues in January 1981 were 90 percent more than the previous year. If our exports continue to increase at this pace we will undoubtedly exceed the goal of $3.5 billion envisaged in the 1981 program.

Ulusu continued: I am convinced that all our producers in the public and private sector and all industrialists will continue their efforts to promote exports. They will be supported with all state means on the issue. We should always bear in mind that exports are one of the most important factors in the economic development struggle launched by our nation.

TALKS ON RESCHEDULING DEBTS END IN LONDON

[Text] Talks in London, aimed at rescheduling Turkey's debts of some $3 billion--which were postponed to 1979--to international commercial banks, have ended. According to information obtained by a Turkish Radio and Television Correspondent, it was decided at the end of the talks that the Turkish Central Bank would prepare a plan of implementation regarding the rescheduling of the debts. The plan will be prepared by the Central Bank by the end of the next month and then the banks concerned will be called to hold another meeting. The Turkish delegation headed by the deputy director of the Turkish Central Bank, Yavuz Caneli, left London for the FRG. The delegation will hold contacts in Frankfurt in connection with the problems of Turkish workers employed there.

GENERAL STAFF ASSAILS PRESS REPORTS ON PRAYERS

[Statement issued by the office of the chief of the General Staff]

[Text] It has been observed with distress that a certain section of our press has recently been carrying articles discussing the issues of calling for prayers and translating the Koran into Turkish.

It is understood that the real motive for raising this subject--on which our people are very sensitive--despite the fact that no work is being conducted on this issue at the National Security Council, consists of attempts to redivide the Turkish nation and shake the great confidence in the National Security Council.

It is assessed that such useless and unscientific arguments based on groundless reports would yield damaging results and could cause misunderstandings among our citizens. These arguments, which are based on a concocted report that will provide a new subject of exploitation for secessionists and for those who hope to benefit from domestic unrest, will be stopped and the martial law commands will take the necessary measures on this subject.

REPORT ON LEFTIST LEADERS, MILITANTS CAPTURED

[Summar] "It has been announced that 1,329 militants belonging to the leftist organization [Dev-Sol] responsible for killing 101 persons and wounding another 85 have been captured until now. According to information given by the Istanbul Security Directorate, Dursun Karatas, the person in charge of the organization for Turkey, is among those captured. In a series of operations conducted by the martial law command security forces last year and especially after 12 September 1981, Karatas, Huseyin Solgun, Sinan Kukul, Saki Aydogan and militants active in the organization's regional committee and struggle teams have been captured."

It has been determined that these militants have murdered 101 persons, among them former Prime Minister Nihat Erim, and have wounded another 85. They were also involved in 14 robberies, 87 bombing incidents, 49 raids and many pirate rallies. It has also been determined that the militants were financing the organization through heroin smuggling.

Documents showing the organization's work methods and its activities, a list of persons to be killed and of organizations chosen as targets were also found in operations conducted by the security forces.

[Statement issued by the General Staff Martial Law Military Services Coordination Directorate]

[Summary] During the 1-month period between 12 January and 11 February, 588 crimes were committed in Turkey in violation of martial law. Of this number, 294 concerned placing posters and distributing pamphlets; 134 were robberies; there were 63 armed assaults and shootouts with security forces, 24 bombings and arson cases, 6 student incidents, 3 demonstrations and strikes and 64 other minor martial law violations.

Of these violations, 16 were committed by rightist activists, 361 by leftist activists and 15 by secessionist groups. The ideological motivation of 196 crimes could not be determined.

During the same 1-month period, 20 persons were killed in armed assaults. Five of these persons were members of the security forces, one of them was deputy security director and four were policemen. In addition, a total of 17 terrorists were killed in shootouts with security forces in various provinces. The number of persons injured in the same period was 48 with another 16 terrorists wounded in clashes with security forces.

During operations conducted between 12 January and 11 February, security forces captured a total of 5,601 suspects and legal action was started against them. Of these suspects, 1,607 are leftists, 420 are secessionists, 528 are rightists and the political inclination of 3,046 cannot be determined. Following initial findings, 2,005 of these suspects were arrested for various crimes.

In addition, the leaders in Ankara of the Turkish Revolutionary Communist Party People's Liberation Organization [Turkiye Devrimci Komunist Partisi Halkin Kurtulusu], the Turkish Communist Party Marxist-Leninist Partisan and the Revolutionary Path organizations were captured and these organizations were, to a great extent, rendered ineffective.

Of the rightist activists, almost all those belonging to idealist [ulkucu] and vanguard [akinci] groups who committeed a crime prior to 12 September were captured.

During searches and operations conducted in the same period, security forces also seized 298 rifles of various types and calibers, 76 shotguns, 47 submachine guns, 4,776 pistols, 1 rocket launcher, 87,123 rounds of ammunition, 441 bombs, 44 other weapons and 9 hand radios.

CAPACITY OF IZMIR REFINERY TO BE DOUBLED

[Text] Izmir, 17 Feb (AA)--The Turkish Petroleum company aims at increasing the capacity of its Izmir refinery from 5 million tons to 10 million.

Regional deputy manager of the company, Dogan Goksalturk, said the new units, which will be completed by 1984, are expected to cost the company some 40 million Turkish liras. Goksalturk said the refinery will be the second largest in Turkey after the completion of new units. The Soviet Union, will supply designs and material for the project.

The current capacity of Ipras refinery is 13 million tons, while the current capacities of central Anatolian Atas and Batman refineries are 5, 3.5 and 1 million tons, respectively.

The Izmir Refinery currently provides oil and oil products for 12 provinces and for the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. It will expand its distribution network considerably, doubling its capacity.

PAHR: NO OBJECTIONS TO U.S. INTERCEPTORS

AU191515 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 19 Feb 81 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "GPE": "Pahr: No Objections to U.S. Interceptors"]

[Text] Vienna--Now Foreign Minister Pahr has also commented on the question of interceptors to be bought for the Austrian Army. "From the viewpoint of the policy of neutrality, I have no objections to the American F-16", Pahr declared in a talk with DIE PRESSE. Such objections had been raised at the Defense Ministry after the American side had made a sales offer for 24 interceptors, and this offer had been described as a "contribution toward strengthening the security of this pro-Western country."

Pahr called this a "clumsy attitude of the United States," but added that the matter had already been straightened out. On Austria's part, he said, there are no objections, either, on the grounds that it would be the first neutral country to buy the F-16 if a decision were made in favor of this model.

In addition to General Dynamics' F-16, the Mirage 50 of the French Dassault-Breguet Company is still in the race for winning the billion-shilling order. According to an Austrian radio report, negotiating delegations from both countries are currently in Vienna. By tomorrow morning, Friday, they will have to submit their sales offers to an Austrian Government delegation headed by State Secretary Nussbaumer. Austrian Army test pilot Bernecker has tested both types. His report must be submitted to the National Defense Council by the end of February.

The F-16, an interceptor of the so-called second generation, is regarded as more modern, and thousands of planes of this type are used in NATO countries. The Mirage 50 basically dates back to the 1960's but according to the French representatives its radar and avionic equipment is specifically adjusted to Austrian requirements. The same goes for the engine.

Both firms offer compensation deals exceeding the 100 percent mark. The project costs amount to more than 4 billion schillings for the F-16 [for 24 aircraft], and the Mirage offer is said to be around 6 billion schillings. Early in April there may be demonstration flights of both planes in Austria.

CHANCELLOR KREISKY VISITS EGYPT 14-17 FEB

For Egyptian media coverage of Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's 14-17 February visit to Egypt, including an "exclusive interview" of the chancellor carried by MENA before his departure for Egypt, a 15 February press conference held by the chancellor and President as-Sadat of Egypt, and a 17 February joint press conference held just before the chancellor's departure from Egypt, see the Egypt section of the 17 and 18 February Middle East and Africa DAILY REPORTs.

BRIEFS

EXPORTS TO EGYPT--According to the Austrian trade delegate in Cairo, Austrian exports to Egypt developed favorably last year. In the first 11 months of 1980, these exports totaled 771.7 million schillings, 19.4 percent more than during the corresponding 1979 period. The main export commodities were paper, plastics, iron and steel and machinery. [Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 11 Feb 81 p 9 AU]

COMMENTATOR CRITICIZES REAGAN'S FOREIGN POLICY

[Karl Grobe editorial: "Help for the Rival"]

[Text] America's foreign policy of the Reagan era has rediscovered the presence of the communist danger. Wherever a restless spirit is at work, whereever there is rebellion against unacceptable situations, the damned Reds must be at work. The promoters of Soviet world power policy needn't therefore look for their own arguments. The spiritual mailmen of the ideas of the President and his team provide them free of charge.

Mr Eagleburger, the West Europe expert, has been trying to explain to the Europeans what is going on in El Salvador from the standpoint of the President and his team. It is quite simple. Since the armed opposition against Napoleon Duarte's regime is also being supported by Cuba, it must be an agency of Moscow; because he fights against this agency of the Reds, the dictator is a good man. Social problems of Central America are of less interest to the American rulers than ever; they were never seriously interested in the actual rulers of the banana republics, the presidents of United Fruit and other companies. They wanted to have law and order as well as safeguarded interest rates. Who will get excited about a few people in rags who demand human rights and acceptable living conditions--naturally instigated by the Russians--demand them modestly at first and then more energetically?

It is seen in such a simplified way, and not only in bars where it would not do any harm. Obviously, one seems to view it like that also in the White House, from where America is to be made great and strong again. And then damage occurs. The United States ought to realize this after its experience in Cuba, Vietnam, Kampuchea, Angola, Mozambique, Iran and probably also Namibia in the near future. Its ignorance drives with ugly regularity the liberation and revolutionary movements toward the world political rival who is charged with subversion and infiltration, so that the representatives of his interests need not do much. Their success develops almost automatically.

This then has to be used as justification for cold war, counterarming and "arming to death," for intensified anticommunism which again considers every attempt at differentiation as suspicious, as onesidedness which causes blindness and confrontation which escalates by itself.

All that would be dangerous enough if only the United States were involved. But European room for maneuver with regard to both superpowers is involved. No government in West Europe is interested in a breach with the United States. But none of them wants to become a helper of American policy--none of them can do that.

It begins with the pursuance of European interests beyond the Mediterranean. The West European economy depends much more than that of the United States on oil imports. The attempt to be partners with such oil exporting states as Iran, Saudi Arabia, Libya and Algeria is there. A one-dimensional scheme of cold war fails already at this point. It goes on involving the policy toward smaller East European states. Confrontation makes everything impossible. It helps only to increase Soviet pressure on the domestic situation of these countries up to an intervention, maybe tomorrow in Poland and the day after tomorrow somewhere else.

The confrontation scheme is unacceptable on principle for the Social Democrats and liberals in their approach to the Third World, to the developing countries, or--to formulate it politically--to the nonaligned states. Washington ideologists may accept a renovated Monroe Doctrine, the bill, as it were, which is more than 150 years old, making the states south of the Rio Grande appear as the playground of only North American economic and security interests and as nothing else.

But in the long run, even this doctrine would hinder the exertion of U.S. influence. It forces even moderate Social Democrats to side with the other superpower. Social Democrats and liberals cannot accept it at all if juntas, such as in Argentina and dictatorships, such as in El Salvador, are declared friends without any criticism.

Social Democrats and liberals must reject a policy aimed at preserving what exists with all repressive means, leaving social changes to Moscow's version of revolutions and overthrow. It is most urgent to make that clear to Washington.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ON REAGAN ECONOMIC SPEECH

[Commentary signed VR.: "Reagan's Venture"]

[Text] The strong wind of a liberal attitude blows through the economic program of the new American President. Reagan and his team rely on the strength of free economy, on the dynamics of the initiative of businessmen. Not state programs outlined by bureaucrats, but the initiative of businessmen is supposed to again give the American economy the stature which would correspond to the political power of the country.

It is not surprising that the Democrats and the trade unions make sour faces. They believe that Reagan wants to take back social progress. The time of expanded welfare programs and constant inflation of the currency is indeed over. Inflation is to be curtailed not only through a strict monetary policy, but simultaneously by considerable budget cuts. The considerable tax reductions, particularly for businessmen, certainly contain the greatest risk; a balanced state budget can be achieved only if economic activity is inspired above average by these alleviations. This is exactly what Reagan hopes for.

The President will score success with his measures, which at first will be unpopular, only if he gains the confidence of a broad strata of the population. His budget policy is particularly courageous and not at all certain of success. This program attempts through means of a liberal policy to get an economy going again which already is bogged down.

It is from this point of view that foreign countries and especially the Federal Republic will view America. The impression is gaining ground that the remarkable strengthening of the dollar's exchange rate reflects foreign confidence in the new administration. America is now following the British prime minister who is using a liberal policy to save the country. These are not merely platonic examples for the Federal Republic and for Europe. Economic forces may possibly grow here which could represent a new rank in international competition. Reagan's policy is therefore an example as well as a warning for those people in this country who want to handle economic calamities with the same old recipes, relying on state activity.

APEL EXPOUNDS BASIC SECURITY POLICY PRINCIPLES

DW191451 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 20 Feb 81 p 14

[Article by Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel: "Hans Apel: Armed for Detente"]

[Text] We are in the middle of a profound debate on the relationship between the army, the state and democracy, on the plausible defense capability; on the internal state of the armed forces and on the self-assessment of the soldiers and their cultivation of traditions.

What this debate involves is more than just military means and strategies. The subject of debate is fundamentals. The argument that war, in the event deterrence fails, would destroy everything that should actually have been protected, makes many people doubt whether armed forces in the era of nuclear mass destruction weapons make any sense at all anymore. The manifold character of the anxieties and worries, the complex interconnections between foreign policy, economic policy and security policy have obviously led to a point where many citizens of our country no longer see the hard reality and refuse to accept information. In the eyes of many people, a decade of detente policy made the preconditions for this policy recede into the background: the adherence to NATO and its strengthening for the preservation of the balance.

In the late sixties and early seventies, many people linked with the initial detente steps the hope that East and West, under the title of arms control policy, sooner or later might reach the point where they would reduce their defense budgets and the size of their armed forces. They overlooked how difficult this project would turn out to be. It is stagnation that currently prevails in the topics of negotiations. And yet, we will continue to pursue active arms control policy. Its short-term objective is, to begin with, a cooperative steering of arms: international agreements on armaments.

The classical concept of security, however, is no longer suitable in the early eighties. What has also given us a headache lately is the challenge to solve the problems of the Third World jointly with the states there. What security policy stands for today is more than just the ensured deterrence and defense capability, more than just the preservation of a military balance and more than just a policy of cooperation and detente with the East limited to Europe. Under the conditions of the eighties, which will be characterized by the interdependence of nearly all on nearly all, German foreign and security policies must adapt themselves to worldwide interconnections.

The basis of a policy of containing conflicts, detente and balance of interests is and remains our solid mooring in the North Atlantic alliance and in the European Community. Since its establishment, NATO has developed from a defense alliance into a community of states and nations of the free West which derives its political strength from common basic values and common interests. The Federal Republic of Germany has its firm place in this community. Neutrality between the blocs does not serve German vital and security interests and is not a subject of discussion.

Europe is a stable region because NATO has taken the precautions required in the face of massive Soviet armament in both conventional and nuclear weapons. The Federal Republic of Germany is making its contribution to this end. In the past decade, we spent about DM55 billion on new weapons systems. By the end of the eighties, we will provide our armed forces with weapons systems worth another DM50 billion. The debate on the Tornado combat plane shows that we will be facing considerable problems in that respect. The financial leeway is also growing narrower for the defense minister. This requires a sense of perspective and courage for new considerations and new concepts for the nineties. Apart from modernization and equipment, we create through our new army structure the preconditions for the adoption of these new weapons. Thus, the Federal Republic of Germany can assign to NATO 36 present brigades--which is three brigades more than before--and at the same time increase the presence and the combat potential of territorial defense.

Arms planning is closely adapted to the defense doctrine of the Atlantic alliance. The alliance does not attack; nor could it anyway. The alliance exclusively plans on deterrence, that is to say, on the prevention of war. This strategy alone determines the equipment and training of the Bundeswher. Anyone today demanding the Bundeswehr's reorganization to a so-called pure defense does not know the realities or the conditions of defense.

Some people are charging that our government program expresses an evil fascination by the pure military aspect of it all, a fatal craze for the balance of terror, the boundless readiness to squander more and more funds on constantly more costly weapons. The critics, however, fail to see the connection between the country's defense capability and its capability for political action and political molding work.

The renunciation of the capability of defending ourselves would be to waive our right to self-determination, tolerating foreign determination from outside and thus ultimately abandoning the will to live in keeping with our own concepts of values. It is the unimpeachable right of every individual to refuse war service and to be an absolute pacifist. Yet the policy of our country cannot ignore the realities. The SPD, too, never was, nor is, a pacifist party.

Under our basic law the dignity of man is unimpeachable; the inviolable and inalienable human rights form the basis of our community. Respecting and protecting these values is the duty of all citizens as well as of the state authority. Their defense, if necessary also with military means, is incontestably the commitment of the state.

If we take refuge in the idyllic, if we take leave from history, then others will shape history without us and thus decide over us. In this way, peace will not become safer but more brittle. The concept of "social defense" does not offer any suitable means for preserving it. It raises claims on the individual which go beyond human nature and human capability, and yet it fails in the face of armed aggression. The subjugation of the CSSR demonstrated this in 1968.

Secured defense capability guaranteed by the united community of NATO forms the foundation of our active participation in the detente process. At the same time, it forms the basis for reasonable efforts toward curbing the arms race. Arms control and arms limitation must achieve a situation where the detente policy principle of renouncing force will be reflected by the military power ratio as well. Secured defense capability and military balance constitute the required conditions for stability; they are not sufficient all by themselves, though. Anyone building security solely on more and more arms jeopardizes peace.

A balance of forces constantly driven up by continuous armament will not create more but less security and stability. Arms control aimed at halting the arms process, reducing armaments and stabilizing the balance on a mutually lower level, therefore, is an essential element of our concept of security policy. In this connection, unilateral advance concessions would violate the principle of secured defense capabilities--much more so in view of the inferiority of the West which exists anyway; ultimately, they would be bound to cause a destabilization of the political and the military situation. The Soviet Union pays nothing for a renunciation of armaments which are still nonexistent. One should think only of the decisions of the U.S. President not to build the B-1 bomber and not to deploy the neutron weapon; it remains to be seen, furthermore, whether the Soviet Union is prepared in the case of the medium-range missiles to negotiate on weapons which the West does not even have yet.

The imperial power of the Soviet Union will not waive anything in the event the West unilaterally reduces its armed forces. It will not renounce a superior menacing military potential for attaining political objectives. Yet the superiority of one side which no longer runs the risk of self-destruction makes war conceivable again as an instrument of politics. For this reason, arms reduction is possible only in a balanced mutual renunciation of arms which will respect the legitimate measure of security precautions of both sides.

The West-East arms control efforts began 18 years ago with the nuclear stop ban agreement in 1963. A number of additional agreements has been concluded since then. The nuclear powers in the Treaty on the Nonproliferation of Nuclear Weapons of 1968 undertook the commitment of nuclear disarmament. Later on, by the 1972 agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union on the limitation of strategic nuclear weapons (SALT I), it was possible for the first time to halt the uninhibited growth of strategic nuclear potentials.

But developments encounter impediments. SALT I has expired; the SALT II treaty that was signed has not been ratified to date; the Vienna negotiations on the mutually balanced troop reduction in central Europe (MBFR) are stagnate. This stagnation is attributable to the fear of the negotiating parties to sacrifice security unilaterally, and to the distrust that has emerged from the antagonism between East and West.

The West must counteract fear and distrust with a policy of partnership and balance of interests. By its behavior, the West must make it clear that it respects the security interests of the opposite side. We are quite aware that the Soviet leadership consider its giant territory encircled--by the NATO states in Europe, by China, Japan, but also by the U.S. naval forces. We do not fail to see that the extremely long borders cause the Soviets to feel that special security precautions are indicated. Yet all this does not justify either an excess armament or an invasion such as in Afghanistan, or a reach into remote regions of the world; the West is bound to take this as a threat.

We must demand that communist states also do nothing to impair our security interests. But the Soviet Union and its allies continuously strengthen their conventional and nuclear armed forces--far beyond the degree that would correspond to a reasonable defense concept. Even more so, the Soviet Union exploits its military power as long as the risk remains predictable for it, such as in Afghanistan or, by proxy, such as Cuba, for example, in Ethiopia and Angola.

The Soviet Union exploited the SALT dialogue with the Americans to strengthen its superiority in those fields which were not the subject of negotiations. The stepped up development of the Soviet medium-range potential since 1976 through the mobile SS-20 missile with multipurpose warheads and the Backfire bomber has drastically increased the threat for NATO Europe in quality as well as quantity. Last year, the number of SS-20 launching installations aimed against Europe increased from about 100 to more than 150. Together with the systems stationed in the Asiatic area of the Soviet Union, the final construction stage of the SS-20 will be soon achieved, long before the United States will have the first cruise missiles and the Pershing II. The Soviet Union has simultaneously stopped the removal of the older SS-4 and SS-5 missiles in a stage when 450 launching pads existed. As a whole, it increased its nuclear medium-range potential in 1980 from about 1,320 to 1,440 Eurostrategic arms.

In view of the intercontinental strategic parity, this extremely powerful Eurostrategic threat offers new dangers for West Europe. It curtails NATO's ability to act. The 12 December 1979 decision of the alliance to counteract the growing threat by stationing American nuclear medium-range missles in Europe--some 108 Pershing II missiles and 464 ground-based cruise missiles--is supposed to be an adequate counterbalance, returning to the alliance the necessary ability to act. The decision includes the NATO states of Europe in solidarity with the United States in the latter's nuclear risk. He who calls into question NATO's nuclear modernization and strengthening program, simultaneously calls into question the solidarity of the alliance. He would be provoking a revision of the American protection guarantees for Europe.

NATO's arms control offer made by the Americans to the Soviets aims simultaneously at initial steps to limit ground-based medium-range arms of both sides on the basis of parity. The simultaneous and parallel modernization and negotiations are indispensable for the Federal Government as well as for its alliance partners. The alliance is prepared to examine at any time the nuclear medium-range arms potential it needs for defense to examine it in the light of arms policy results. But if no results are achieved, the Soviet Union must know that the Western alliance will carry out its modernization program without any cuts. All 572 systems will be stationed, if no agreement is achieved between Moscow and Washington, permitting other figures.

In October November 1950, the Americans and the Soviets had initial talks on the limitation of nuclear medium-range arms. The SALT process has not been ended due to the fact that the SALT II treaty signed in Vienna in 1979 has not been ratified. U.S. President Reagan has made it absolutely clear that its continuation will remain a most important and high-ranking element of American security policy. Under these circumstances, one cannot say that the alliance's arms control concept has failed with regard to nuclear medium-range arms, and that the dual decision of December 1979 has lost its basis.

However, I consider as urgently necessary the continuation of the SALT process with ratified results. It is legitimate that the new American administration will examine once more the conditions of the SALT II treaty with regard to its defense policy effects. It would serve the interests of the alliance, however, if parallel with the SALT II examinations, talks would be continued in the United States on nuclear medium-range arms.

Our security policy has to face an additional challenge nowadays: The threat to the vitally important energy and raw material supplies of Western industrial nations from the Third World is growing due to the political uncertainties in the producing regions. Morality demands that the people carry out their right to self-determination and that they live in human dignity, they need our help to do that.

Our interests demand that our energy and raw material supplies be guaranteed at all times. Even a shortage would catastrophically deteriorate economic and thus also social conditions in the Federal Republic of Germany. We could avoid that only together with our alliance partners. Without the worldwide military presence of the United States, there would be no necessary protection of our interests. This would produce consequences for us, such as that we must make even more of a contribution to Western security if other allies protect our interests outside NATO's treaty area.

This alone is not a peace policy for the Third World. In addition, there must be a policy to protect the right of the people to self-determination as well as development aid. Development aid is part of our security policy. Naturally, it has its price. In the past decade, the Federal Republic has tripled its public expenditures for development aid, increasing them from DM2.2 billion (1970) to DM6.5 billion (1980). I know that these means do not suffice by far to relieve want in the world. We will, therefore have to increase our development aid expenditures in the future. But there is no cheap way out. The defense budget may not be considered the available savings account of the nation. It has more than doubled in the past 20 years, but its share in the federal budget decreased within that time from 27.1 to 18.2 percent.

The arms export issue belongs to the complex of national security and the Third World. We must give credibility our support of a worldwide peace system through our own actions. The Federal Government, therefore, has imposed strict restrictions with regard to war arms exports and has adhered to them. That can be demonstrated by figures: from 1972 to 1979, the share of war arms exports compared with overall exports amounted to an average of 0.37 percent; the greatest part went to NATO countries. Just 0.14 percent went to the Third World. This consisted of arms totalling DM2.58 billion in 8 years' mainly ships.

The public discussion on our arms exports confirms the concern that despite these restrictions the conditions for arms exports must be examined in a basic way. Our commitment in line with the basic law to promote peace in the world imposes extreme reservation on us. Our history leaves us no other choice.

The security policy debate in our country so far has lacked insight with regard to connections between foreign policy, economic policy and security policy. Orientation difficulties, a lack of readiness to recognize and respect realities, entails the fact that individual aspects are being used to call into question the legitimacy of the armed forces. The debate on the Bundeswehr tradition, provoked by the riots in connection with the solemn taking of the oath in May 1980 in Bremen, offer such a reason for generally rejecting the Bundeswehr and military service.

I believe that fruitful talks can be held with serious critics. I have made invitations in this connection for 23 and 24 April 1981. I want the representatives of all socially relevant groups to first articulate their ideas regarding relations between civilians and the military as well as the care for Bundeswehr traditions. I am for making tolerance and liberty the standard. We are a pluralist democracy. That is of significance for tradition as well. It is not a matter of the tradition of the armed forces, but of tradition in our democracy as a whole.

Soldiers have no claim to be loved or even adored by all citizens. They must face the debate like all other social groups. On the other hand, they are worthy of the same understanding one shows for other groups. We must help them to understand the meaning and purpose of their service. The awareness that the armed forces carry out a mission of the basic law as well as the meaning and aims of this mission must be understandably explained over and over again, to the young people particularly.

Young people have grown up in the sixties and seventies without recalling the brutal military interventions of the Soviet Union in Hungary in 1965 and in Czechoslovakia in 1968. They live in a state developing in peace and economic prosperity against the background of West-East rapprochement. Freedom and human dignity are natural for them and they are now aware of them. A military threat endangering their living conditions is for them impossible.

If we want to talk to them, we cannot do so in the style of the GDR military lectures. We must discuss with them the conditions of peace in Europe and our security policy, discuss it frankly and without prejudice, so that they will consider service in the Bundeswehr as serving peace with arms in hand--a service our people cannot renounce.

FIRM DENIES COMPLETION OF SAUDI TANK DEAL

[Excerpt] Munich, 19 Feb (DPA)--Krauss-Maffei, the German machine construction firm, today denied Bonn reports that the supplying of armored vehicles to Saudi Arabia already has been concluded.

A spokesman for the Munich firm merely confirmed that Riyadh had talked with Krauss-Maffei and is now awaiting a "signal" from Bonn. Only then will the Saudis officially approach Krauss-Maffei who will apply for an export permit.

HONECKER REMARKS SEEN AS NO POLICY CHANGE

[Excerpt] Bonn, 19 Feb (DPA)--Federal Minister for Inner-German Relations Egon Franke (SPD), has warned against interpreting the recent statements by SED General Secretary Erich Honecker on the possibility of uniting the two German states as a change in East Berlin's policy on Germany. Franke stated in Bonn today that if the GDR is supplementing its day-to-day policy of separation with prospects of a united communist Germany, then this is neither entirely new nor does it justify hopes in the Federal Republic.

Honecker stated that when the day comes when "workers of the Federal Republic being to undertake the socialist restructuring of the Federal Republic, the question of unifying the two German states will be seen in a completely new light" as far as the SED is concerned. In his statement, Franke also rejected the view of CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl to the effect that the SED has been encouraged by the inactivity of the Federal Republic on the German question to lay claim itself to the concept of unity of the German nation.

OIL AUSTERITY BRINGS DILEMMA TO REFINERY SECTOR

[Text] Hamburg (VWD)--The oil industry in the Federal Republic anticipates another decrease in oil consumption by roughly 4 or 5 percent this year.

In an interview granted to the VWD [United Economic Service] the chairman of the board of the oil association, Klaus Marquardt, stated in Hamburg that the drastic increase in crude oil prices in combination with the recession has elicited among consumers an unexpectedly great readiness for austerity. Last year this led to a decrease in the domestic oil consumption of more than 10 percent. The planned increase in the oil tax will also contribute toward reducing consumption in that gasoline prices, including the value added tax, will presumably increase by about 8 pfennigs, and diesel fuel prices by roughly 3.5 pfennigs per liter.

According to the association chairman, the decrease in oil consumption brings increased problems for oil processing in German refineries. In that sector, excess capacities exist which were based on the consumption expectations dating back to the times prior to the 1973-74 oil crisis. While the capacity for oil processing amounts to just about 150 million tons, the current utilization at best is around 100 million tons, the tendency pointing downward. The low level of utilization has a negative impact on the proceeds situation of the oil companies, a situation which Marquardt terms "disastrous" at the moment.

If the excess capacities thus far have not yet been cut down tangibly, this is due to the fact, among others, that the high overhead costs of the refineries remain even if capacities were reduced. What makes more sense is to exercise the option of converting the existing crude oil capacities into reprocessing installations. This is what is being done in part. Should the present situation continue as it is right now, he said, it may be that entire refinery complexes will be closed down with all the concomitant negative consequences.

FEDERAL BANK DECIDES TO TIGHTEN CREDIT POLICIES

[Text] Frankfurt, 19 Feb (DPA)--The German Federal Bank will on principle grant no more loans against securities until further notice. The Central Bank Council decided to take this step at its meeting on Thursday. This means that the credit institutions for the time being will not be able to pledge any more securities at the Federal Bank.

The Federal Bank, it was learned, will however grant the credit institutions special loans on securities at a special interest rate. This rate will be altered daily.

The introduction and stoppage of such special loans against securities as well as the amount of the special interest rate will be announced separately. The interest rate for loans on securities in the Federal Republic has been 9 percent.

GISCARD RECEIVES BREZHNEV REPLY ON AFGHANISTAN

[Text] Mr Giscard d'Estaing on 3 February received Mr Brezhnev's reply to a message sent on 24 January, the Elysee announced on Tuesday, 17 February. The delay in making this announcement does not seem to have any particular significance.

No indication has been given in Paris or Moscow on the content of Mr Brezhnev's message, the dispatch of which, moreover, has not yet been announced in the Soviet capital. On the other hand, in his television speech on 27 January, the president of the Republic stated that he had proposed to the Soviet head of state that an international conference should be convened with no Afghan participation with the aim of eliminating any foreign interference in Afghanistan. Since then, there has been no indication that the Kremlin, whose every effort is aimed at securing recognition for the Kabul government as a valid interlocutor, has changed its policy. Giscard d'Estaing also reminded Mr Brezhnev that any interference in Poland would have "very serious consequences" and he appealed for the USSR to show "restraint" in Africa.

LE MONDE VIEWS EAGLEBURGER MISSION, EL SALVADOR

[Editorial: "Mr Reagan, El Salvador and Europe"]

[Text] It may seem surprising that the first major subject for talks between the Europeans and Mr Reagan's new administration is neither the revival of East-West tension nor the rise of the dollar but the situation in El Salvador, one of the smallest Latin American countries. It is true that during a tour which started in Bonn on Monday and is to continue in Paris and Brussels on Tuesday and in the Hague and London at a later date, assistant Secretary for Political Affairs Eagleburger intends to discuss problems connected with the neutron bomb and European defense efforts but it is on Central America that the United States wants to show "muscle."

Mr Reagan was not slow in expressing in action his intention to restore order in his own backyard, which he made widely known long before opening his election campaign. The sudden recall of the former American ambassador to El Salvador, who did not conceal his liberal views, and the suspension of aid to Nicaragua, which has been accused of letting arms for the El Salvador rebels pass through its territory, could well be only a beginning. As far as the immediate future is concerned, the aim is to help the junta now in power in El Salvador to win a final victory over the guerrillas.

And Mr Eagleburger's first task is to sever the long-established friendly relations between the El Salvador opposition and several European countries.

Its success is not assured. European parties belonging to the Socialist International have given considerable aid to the Sandinistas in Nicaragua and, more recently, to supporters of reforms in El Salvador. This particularly applies to the FRG. The SPD has been especially active in Central America through the intermediary of the Ebert Foundation even though Chancellor Schmidt has had to distance himself from his party on both this matter and many others.

The French Government is less subject to such "ideological" pressures but it does not seem prepared, until it receives more information on the subject, to either modify its traditional policy under Washington's pressure or encourage a destabilization whose consequences could adversely affect the situation in its American departments.

Addressing the El Salvador ambassador who presented his credentials to him at the end of January, Mr Giscard d'Estaing expressed the hope that El Salvador would find "a lasting solution which will make it possible to restore social peace by promoting democratic freedoms, showing respect for human rights and implementing a plan for structural reforms." This means that it would be out of the question to either support a hard-line regime or forgo the cordial relations maintained with Sandinista Nicaragua which Mr Stirn visited in November and which receives humanitarian aid from Paris.

Having said this, it will probably be necessary to make the best of a bad job, which is what Nicaragua itself has been doing by advising its friends among the El Salvador guerrillas to pursue a course leading toward a political solution which has now become more necessary since their "final offensive" has been stopped in its tracks. The least that can be said is that Europeans have no reason to object to such a solution.

LE MONDE CITES NONALIGNED CONFERENCE RESULTS

[Editorial: "Difficult Compromise"]

[Text] The results of the Ninth Conference of Nonaligned Foreign Ministers which ended in New Delhi on 13 February were bound to be the fruit of very difficult compromises safeguarding a largely bogus unity.

Even though they were obliged to shed some ballast and give up, for instance, the idea of explicitly denouncing American military presence on the British island of Diego Garcia (which is claimed by Mauritius), the Soviet camp's friends or allies, who, although in the minority, are extremely active within the movement, have scored some points. The Khmer Rouge, who are still recognized by the United Nations, were not even allowed to come to India, and Vietnam has managed to limit any damage it has suffered in the face of attacks launched by its anticommunist Asian neighbors.

Even though the pro-Vietnamese Phnom Penh regime was unable to participate in the conference, the regime installed in Kabul by the Soviets represented Afghanistan, whereas representatives of the Afghan resistance were kept out. This was no small achievement on the part of Moscow and its friends, even though the Afghan delegation was able to show its ill-humor. The USSR apparently has no intention of withdrawing from Afghanistan in the near future. And the fact that no discussion was directly initiated in New Delhi among the parties concerned has rather encouraged the Soviets to consolidate their protege in Kabul.

It is true that many nonaligned countries have seen Afghanistan's invasion as the most serious indication of their analysis of Soviet imperialism. But the call to show respect for the Nonaligned Movement's principles would carry more weight if it were not made, sometimes in a caricaturing manner, by countries which are not thought to be leading the struggle against... Western imperialism. For reasons mainly connected with national interest. India now seems to be playing obligingly into the Soviets' hands. Despite its efforts to keep the movement at an equal distance from the "blocs," Yugoslavia can hardly claim to speak on behalf of the Third World. And Algeria--yet another major non-aligned power--conceals its position's ambiguity behind dialetic subtleties.

Cuban presence has been opposed and even paralyzed. However, driven by an activist faction which has gained strength in recent years, many nonaligned countries--and especially most Arab countries--are not prepared to stop supporting the USSR in regard to Israel. It is one of the Nonaligned Movement's main tasks to support the right of still-colonized peoples to self-determination. It is in the name of this principle that it supports the struggles waged by the Palestinians and the Namibians and that it also denounces "the occupation of the Comoro Island of Mayotte by France." This attitude renders even less explicable from the moral viewpoint the fact that the Afghan resistance movement has been left to its fate.

For, no matter how much the USSR may congratulate itself on its influence with many developing countries and pretend to be the Nonaligned Movement's "natural ally," the majority of its members nonetheless sought to show in New Delhi that their conference must become no sounding box for the rivalry between the two superpowers.

FRG'S GENSCHER TALKS WITH COLOMBO DURING STOPOVER

[Excerpt] Rome, 19 Feb (DPA)--At the end of an exchange of views in Rome with his Italian opposite number, Emilio Colombo, Federal Foreign Minister Genscher flew back to Bonn tonight. On his return from visits to Pakistan and Egypt, Genscher made a stopover in the Italian capital. He said he informed Colombo of the results of his tour and on his talks with the foreign ministers of France and Britain in Bonn on 13 February.

In Rome political circles, Genscher's short visit in Rome is seen as a gesture towards the Italians who were not invited to the confidential talks in Bonn. Genscher and Colombo also talked about their forthcoming visits to India. Both sides stressed that their talks in Rome revealed "complete agreement." "It is of great importance that Italy and the Federal Republic should cooperate so closely within the Western alliance and within the European Community," Genscher said.

Colombo on U.S. Trip

LD191937 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 19 Feb 81

[Text] West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has ended his brief visit to Rome. During his talks with Foreign Minster Emilio Colombo, Genscher was informed about the recent meetings his Italian counterpart had with the new U.S. leaders. Colombo made it clear in an interview that no pressure had been exerted by the United States on Italy in order to demand an increase in defense expenditures.

CHRISTIAN DEMOCRAT OFFICIAL DISCUSSES U.S. VISIT

[Text] A press conference was given by Flaminio Piccoli, secretary of the Christian Democratic Party, who returned today from his visit to the United States where he met the highest Stage Department and Reagan administration officials.

Piccoli said he was satisfied with the positive results achieved during the talks and affirmed that there is a U.S. determination to regain leadership of the Free World. Behind the new administration, he added, there is an effort being exerted by [words indistinct] U.S. cultural circles. Piccoli confirmed the White House decision to wage an all-out fight against terrorism, considered a very dangerous form of conflict.

Piccoli insisted that the U.S. leaders develop more intense relationships, not only with governments, but also with democratic forces. The latter, said Piccoli, must understand the proposals made by the Washington leaders and strive for a closer relationship.

NORWAY

EDITORIAL ON GOVERNMENT'S STANCE ON EL SALVADOR

[Editorial: "El Salvador and Norway"]

[Text] The least sensible foreign policy demarche which could come from Norway right now would be to unequivocally take sides for or against one or other of the parties in the extremely confused civil war situation which exists in the Central American republic of El Salvador. But this is precisely what can be read into statements last week from Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Reiulf Steen, who is also the ruling party's foremost spokesman. He expressed the view that Norway should consider giving official support to the liberation movements in Latin America, criticized U.S. policy in El Salvador and hinted that he could find there "like-minded people"--presumably in the Marxist-led guerrilla, which embraces a number of leftwing groups.

Even though El Salvador is far away and has no direct significance for Norwegian interests, clumsy treatment of this conflict in Oslo could have direct negative consequences for our relations with the United States, thereby damaging important Norwegian interests. Norwegian politicans should not allow themselves to be tempted to repeat Steen's attempts to win a couple of political points on the homefront with the help of El Salvador's civil war. Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund was more cautious when he stressed in the Storting last week that "in the Norwegian view the people of El Salvador must themselves decide their future without interference from any side."

But Frydenlund, too, was content to raise an admonishing finger at U.S. arms supplies alone, without raising the question of who was supplying the guerrillas with arms. And he wants to raise the question at the next Nordic foreign ministers' meeting. Does this mean that Norway will ally itself with the extremely sharp Swedish attacks on our most important ally? Recently the Labor Party has created such great concern among our NATO partners with its foreign policy that we see no cause for new somersaults which could make Norway's position even worse.

There are two fundamental circumstances which we must bear in mind when appraising the situation in El Salvador. First the situation in the country is not clear cut; it is not well-suited to black-and-white interpretations from a distance of thousands of kilometers. Norway must seriously study the material which special U.S. delegations are now bringing to Europe and Latin America, and which according to the United States confirms that the Soviet Union's closest allies, namely, Vietnam, Ethiopia and Cuba, are providing arms to topple El Salvador's civilian-military junta, which politically has a center-right orientation. We must remember that the guerrillas' January offensive did not trigger off any great popular movement; there is much to indicate that the population is withdrawing its support from all the armed groups which have thrown themselves into the bloody civil war. While Western European social democrats continue to support the guerrillas, a number of their Latin American sister parties have retreated a step; even Nicaragua is beginning to adopt a lower profile toward its neighbors' internal fighting.

The other fundamental factor which Norway ought not to overlook is that our dependence on the United States is greater today than in the sixties when we were at odds with the Americans over the Vietnam issue. Our neighbor the Soviet Union has grown militarily more powerful and politically more aggressive, and we stand politically more alone in Europe that we have done at any time since 1949. In addition, the government itself, through its treatment of contingency stockpiling and of a nuclear-free zone, has contributed to a situation in which U.S. tolerance of Norwegian demarches at odds with U.S. policy is probably also less than at any time since NATO was established.

ULLSTEN STANCE ON EL SALVADOR DEEMED 'NAIVE'

LD191031 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 13 Feb 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Ullsten Irritates United States..."]

[Text] Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten's recent statements on the situation in civil war-torn El Salvador have irritated the U.S. Department of State which has given vent to its displeasure in both Washington and Stockholm.

The United States has recently decided to increase its arms aid to the, on paper at least, reformist military junta in the tiny Central American republic. Cuba and the Soviet Union are supplying the antigovernment guerrillas with military equipment.

"A first step toward a peaceful solution to the conflict is the cessation of all foreign involvement in El Salvador." This was Ullsten's central point, and it certainly seems reasonable. However, the problem is that while U.S. support for the junta is official and fully visible, the communist countries' help for the guerrillas is effected clandestinely. If the United States halted its aid there would be no guarantee that the opposing side would show the same restraint.

When Ullsten met members of the Salvadorean opposition movement the Revolutionary Democratic Front [FDR] recently, he seems to have gone a step further. He directly criticized the U.S. decision to step up its military aid, which only "leads to the prolongation of the fighting," and he pointed to the FDR's program as a suitable starting point for a peaceful solution.

This seems somewhat naive. The FDR program contains many honorable words--democracy, human rights, religious freedom and so on--but does not say much about its real aims. There are certain indications that the guerrilla movement has been radicalized and brutalized. Thus the irritation over Ullsten in Washington is not entirely difficult to understand.

As a result of many years of political and economic neglect, not only the situation in El Salvador, but also in the rest of Central America, has reached crisis proportions. There are elements in the Reagan administration advocating that the United States support without compromise the reactionary forces in this part of the world, and if this happens the consequences could be explosive.

If developments do move in this direction there is every reason for Sweden and other countries to protest. However, for the time being the situation must be commented on with caution and with a full realization of all the complications.

NOTT INTERVIEWED ON NATO DEFENSE, GIBRALTAR

LD191600 Madrid ABC in Spanish 12 Feb 81 p 17

[Ignacio Carrion interview in London with British Secretary of State for Defense John Nott: "Spain's Entry Into NATO Will Not Affect Gibraltar Issue"--date not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] Mr Minister, it has been suggested that the United State might use the new cruise missiles which will be deployed in Britain in 1983--"owned and operated by the United States," as you yourself reported in the House of Commons--in order to contain the theater of war in Europe and, consequently in this way, eliminate the threat of war from its territory. What is your opinion on this issue?

[Answer] The aim of the cruise missiles--as is the case with the long-range aircraft which the United States has in Britain at present--is to demonstrate to the Soviet Union that its territory would be vulnerable if its attacked Europe and that the United States is committed to this happening in this way. The United States does not believe that it is possible to direct a limited nuclear attack against the USSR from Europe or from anywhere else without endangering its own territory. The Soviets would be well aware that the United States would take part actively in the decision to attack. It is precisely for this reason that the U.S. interest in developing the system here renders deterrence more effective. This will demonstrate to the USSR that the United States regards the defense of Europe as something inseparable from its own territory. There is no clearer way of demonstrating to them that Europe cannot be the object of a "limited" war, remote from the superpowers' sanctuaries.

[Question] If the Reagan administration ends up by approving the neutron bomb, which has the characteristic of killing people without destroying buildings, tanks and so forth, would you be in favor of having the bomb?

[Answer] There is a great misunderstanding about the enhanced radiation warheads (ERW). In fact, they are ordinary nuclear warheads, but modified so that the blast of the explosion is reduced and, at the same time, the radiation is increased. That is why they are termed "neutron bomb." The potential value of a version of this bomb for use in combat would be its ability to neutralize large formations of tanks, while at the same time, minimizing the number of casualties among the nearby population. This characteristic would help to deter the Soviets from taking advantage of their superiority in armored forces to attack NATO. In 1978, President Carter decided to postpone a final decision on ERW manufacture. He said at the time that his final decision would depend on the extent to which the USSR displayed moderation in its conventional and nuclear arms programs of the United States and West Europe.

I understand that President Reagan would like to consult the allies on this issue. I am absolutely certain that he does not wish to make any decision without these consultations taking place. It is a very important issue and we would be prepared to hold talks on it.

[Question] It has been said both in Spain and in Britain that British-Spanish cooperation in the military field is excellent at present. Does this mean that we will hold further joint military maneuvers and that our two countries will also cooperate in the theoretical field of arms manufacture?

[Answer] It gives me satisfaction to see how well relations between our armed forces have developed over the past few years. Of course, we welcome the possibility of greater cooperation, including these joint military maneuvers, when possible. Some possible plans for manufacturing arms which would be beneficial for both sides are being considered, and I believe that they would be developed.

A recent instance was the contract between the Racal Company and the Spanish Ministry of Defense for military field radios. This equipment has been partially manufactured in Spain. And if the Spanish Armed Forces purchased the Rapier air defense system (a new ground-to-air missile), part of that system would be manufactured in Spain.

[Question] What is your opinion on Spain's possible entry into NATO?

[Answer] The British Government would receive Spain's application to join NATO with satisfaction, but we believe that this is a decision to be made by the Spanish Government. Spain's entry into NATO would strengthen the alliance and, in my opinion, would also increase Spain's security.

[Question] If Spain joins NATO before Gibraltar is returned to it, what role would this very crucial British military base play?

[Answer] I do not believe that any change in the role which Gibraltar plays within NATO will occur, even if Spain joins the Atlantic alliance. As your question indicates, its importance is due to its strategic position at the entrance to the Mediterreanean, and this will remain unchangeable. Of course, the fact of Spain's entering NATO will not alter Britain's commitment to the people of Gibraltar.

LORD CARRINGTON MEETS WITH NIGERIA'S AUDU

[David Adamson report: "British Must Free Namibia"]

[Excerpt] Britain was urged last night by Prof Audu, Nigeria's foreign minister, to assume its "full responsibility" for settling Africa's last colonial problem--Namibia.

Speaking at a dinner attended by Lord Carrington, foreign secretary, the professor said that the collapse of the recent Geneva conference on Namibia (south-west Africa) demonstrated that the Western powers were either unwilling or unable to exert sufficient pressure on South Africa.

Britain--a member of the five-power Western contact group which has tried to mediate on Namibia--had a special responsibility because of its close association with South Africa.

Nigeria is an honorary member of the Africa "front-line" states which support the South-West African People's Organisation and its SWAPO guerrillas fighting the South Africans.

Lord Carrington has been emphasising that his success over Zimbabwe at the Lancaster House talks did not mean that he could do the same in Namibia, or indeed had any obligation to do so.

In private talks with Prof Audu earlier in the day, Lord Carrington noted that he would be discussing Namibia when he and Mrs Thatcher visit Washington next week. The talks would enable the five-power group to agree on the next step.

Nigeria is the one African country with enough economic weight to take selective action against Western countries if it feels they are not supporting plans to bring South Africa to heel.

But Nigerian officials said yesterday that they were not pressing for sanctions against South Africa at this stage. They would await the outcome of a fresh approach to Pretoria by the five.

KKE CALLS FOR MOBILIZATION OF DEMOCRATIC FORCES

["February 81" statement by KKE Central Committee plenum"]

[Text] The KKE Central Committee plenum met and dealt with international and domestic developments, the forthcoming election battle and the party's duties with Comrade Kharrilaos Florakis, secretary general of the Central Committee, as the main speaker.

The plenum examined the problems created by the imperialist cold war policy, which is becoming even more aggressive and reactionary after the advent of the new U.S. administration, and underlined the ever-increasing servility of the "New Democracy" government toward Atlanticism. It stressed the need for mobilization and common action by the country's broadest patriotic-democratic forces to repulse the imperialist cold war offensive in defense of peace and for disarmament; for withdrawal of all nuclear weapons from our country; for the abolition of bases; for withdrawal from NATO; and for the removal of the rightwing from the country's administration as its stay in authority fosters serious dangers for the people and augurs national adventures.

The plenum examined the heavy consequences for the workers resulting from the intensified economic crisis and accession to the EEC, and supported the conclusions drawn from the increased workers struggles, and particularly from the results of the great strike movement. It concentrated its attention on the acute problem of dismissals and unemployment and stressed the need to mobilize the unemployed and all workers in order to adopt measures to protect the unemployed, curb dismissals and increase employment.

The plenum called for a mobilization of all democratic forces to guarantee all the prerequisites for uninfluenced elections, and once again stressed that the prerequisites were now being established for ousting the rightwing from the parliamentary majority, and that this could most certainly be guaranteed by implementing the system of proportional representation or, should this not be implemented, by elevating the KKE to the second distribution of seats. This electoral goal of the KKE is realistic because it can guarantee the support of both democrats who want the certain defeat of the rightwing and of all leftwing fighters irrespective of their ideological differences.

The plenum underlined that the only solution to the problem of governmental authority, which could promote the cause of change in the country, was the election of a democratic government that would be backed by all the forces in support of change and that would promote a program for national independence, democratization and economic development for the people's benefit.

The plenum ratified the political resolution, which will be released for publication. In conclusion, the Central Committee plenum appointed a committee to draft the "positions for the 11th KKE Congress."

[Dated] February 1981. [Signed] The Presidium of the plenum.

Party Would Back PASOK

NC191720 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA Greek 19 Feb 81 p 1

[Excerpt] The KKE is prepared to support a PASOK government after the elections if it supports "a program for national independence, democratization and economic development for the people."

This can be concluded from yesterday's statement by the party Central Committee plenum, which met to discuss a recommendation submitted by Kharrilaos Florakis, secretary general of the KKE Central Committee, on international and domestic developments and on the forthcoming election battle.

The statement stated that "the only solution to the problem of governmental authority, which could promote the cause of change, was the election of a democratic government backed by all the forces favoring change."

It is recalled that in a recent interview, the PASOK chairman expressed different positions, arguing that if the elections did not provide for a government that could stand on its own then the solution supported by PASOK was that new elections must be held. In any case, the leader of the majority opposition party believes that PASOK will have a clear majority.

RALLIS, PESMAZOGLOU DISCUSS POLITICAL DEVELOPMENTS

NC191655 Athens NEWS in English 19 Feb 81 p 12

[Text] Premier Rallis yesterday afternoon met with KODISO leader Mr Pesmazoglou and they discussed recent political developments.

According to sources Premier Rallis stated categorically that the government insists on exhausting the four-year term of the present Parliament and that opposition efforts to establish a proportional election system for the next elections are not accepted by the government.

HUNGARIAN DEPUTY FOREIGN MINISTER BEGINS VISIT

MINISTERS COUNCIL APPROVES PROTOCOL WITH LIBYA

ND190858 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 14 Feb 81 p 5

[Excerpts] The sixth term protocol prepared by the Turkish-Libyan economic commission has been approved by the Council of Ministers and is now in force. The protocol governs such matters as the two country's current trade, economic and industrial relations, and it aims at facilitating relations concerning labor, social insurance, contracting business and official banking exchanges.

The protocol stipulates that the formation of joint companies will be accelerated in the areas of maritime transport, agriculture, livestock breeding, engineering and consulting services, construction works, management and industrial investments.

It has been decided to establish six weekly flights between Turkey and Libya. In addition, work will start immediately on initiating direct telephone links between the two countries.

Libya has also decided to open a permanent trade center in Istanbul. According to information obtained from the Trade Ministry, work on this is nearly completed, with the center expected to be commissioned this spring. Following the trade center's opening, Libya will stay in constant contact with the private sector, with the result that the types and quantities of exports to Libya will increase.

Commenting on the trade center to be opened in Istanbul, (Ahmat el Atrash), Libyan Foreign Ministry secretary general, said: "We have a great desire to increase trade relations with Turkey. Over the past 5 years there relations have shown a great development. We do not set a limit on these relations. Libya is an extensive market for Turkish agricultural and industrial products. Libyan and Turkish exporters know little about each other's needs, which is why we are opening a trade center in Istanbul. This trade center, which we hope to open in the next few days, will encompass the Balkan countries and central Europe, and exporters will be extended all possible facilities. We hope the Turkish Government will provide the necessary facilities."

VOTCP ASSAILS TRIAL OF FORMER KURDISH DEPUTY

[Station commentary]

[Text] The Ankara Martial Law Command Third Military Court is trying Serafettin Elci, former deputy from Mardin, who served as public works minister in the Ecevit government, for racism and engaging in propaganda weakening national feelings. A sentence of up to 9 years is being demanded for Elci. However, the trial by martial law courts and by the current administration of a person like Elci, who was sent to the National Assembly by the votes of the toiling people and who, during his term as a minister, made certain realistic moves in a bid to improve conditions in Kordestan, which was allowed to remain undeveloped, is totally antidemocratic.

The allegations of racism and of attempts to weaken national feelings directed against Elci, while the real target should be the fascist ringleaders and NAP (?leaders) who incite racism, attempt to create strife among the toiling people by discriminating between Alawites and Sunnis, stage mass massacres in Kahramanmaras and Maltaya and many other provinces and murder thousands of patriots, are unnecessary and groundless.

During his term as a minister, Elci stated that he is a Kurd and that there are Kurds in Turkey. Far from weakening national feelings, these statements constitute a clear expression of the realities in Turkey. There are millions of Kurds in our country. Admitting the existence of Kurds is not tantamount to secessionism or racism. On the contrary, ignoring the millions of Kurdish citizens in our country, terrorizing the Kurdish toilers and obstructing the social and economic development of Kordestan by allowing it to remain backward would be considered secessionism. It is evident that the sovereign circles in Turkey are implementing these measures. These antidemocratic trials are aimed at silencing the progressive, patriotic, revolutionary and democratic elements that voice the democratic demands of the Kurdish people. However, our people, who are waging a struggle for the free, equal and fraternal coexistence of the Turkish and Kurdish peoples, will not remain silent and will not bow down.

GENSCHER APPEALS TO USSR TO HALT ARMS BUILDUP

Deutschlandfunk Interview

[Text] Bonn, 26 Feb (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Genscher today addressed an urgent appeal to the USSR to abandon its "alarming" armaments efforts and to embark on a policy of moderation. In an interview with Deutschlandfunk, Genscher said today that the Soviet claim to world power placed the world at the crossroads. The West will have to make it clear to the USSR that it can derive greater advantages from a policy of cooperation than from a policy of military superiority.

"We, the Federal Republic of Germany, we, the West, do not want an arms race but an equilibrium at the lowest possible level of armaments." the foreign minister said. "The U.S. Government has again made this clear and agreed to the proposal for a European disarmament conference with confidence-building measures from the Atlantic to the Urals. It is now up to the USSR to declare at its party congress that it intends to return to the road of cooperation in the interests of peace throughout the world in order to rid the world of the arms burden and to enable the people in the Third World to live independently in accordance with the great common goal of the Nonaligned Movement."

In the interview, Genscher pointed out that the USSR's "gigantic medium-range missile armament" threatened not only West Europe but northern Africa, the Near and Middle East, Pakistan, India, the Chinese People's Republic and Japan as well.

Westdeutsche Rundfunk Interview

[Text] Bonn, 21 Feb (DPA)--Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has once again appealed to the Soviet Union to accept the West's offer for disarmament negotiations. In an interview for Westdeutsche Rundfunk, the FDP chairman said on Saturday if Moscow were not to accept it "then that would be a dangerous attitude which would signal that it intends to build up its arms." At the same time, Genscher indicated that he sees in the "Soviet advantage-snatching arming" not only a considerable threat to West Europe, but also to North America, the Near and Middle East, Pakistan, India, China, Japan and the Asian states belonging to the ASEAN pact.

With reference to the impending CPSU party congress, Genscher said that especially today it is important for the Soviet leadership to recognize that it has reached the crossroads of its foreign and defense policies: "It is facing the question whether it intends to continue its gigantic arms program which threatens the world's security and stability, and which will bring with it the danger of a great arms race, or whether it wants, like us, arms limitation and arms control." It is not only in the interest of the West and in that of the development countries, who urgently need help to overcome their difficulties, but also in the interest of the Soviet Union itself, if it decides in favor of cooperation with the West, and of arms control and arms limitation.

Foreign Ministry Statement

[Text] Bonn, 22 Feb (DPA)--One day before the start of the 26th CPSU Party Congress, Federal Foreign Ministers Hans-Dietrich Genscher has again called on the Soviet leadership to take seriously the West's desire for cooperation and to take the "path of disarmament (?and) world political moderation." In a statement published on Sunday by the Foreign Ministry in Bonn, Genscher also underlined the Germans' "sincere and honest desire" for understanding.

The minister stated that the joint responsibilities, tasks and opportunities for West and East were never so great as they are now. But neither has the West's determination to maintain peace and freedom ever been greater. The war against the Afghan people and the missile threat to West Europe, Genscher said, have roused the responsible forces in the West.

The minister said, "The Soviet Union should recognize that it is also in its interest to abandon the path of overarming and power policy in the Third World and, together with the West, to take the path of disarmament and world political moderation to which it pledged itself in the Soviet-American declaration of 1972 and the Helsinki final act." The communist countries' economic problems alone are sufficient reason to consider the West's offer to cooperation.

The minster went on to say, "The Germans have with deep conviction supported the Federal Government's treaty policy and sincerely and honestly want this cooperation." "But they are just as determined to do everything within their power to secure stability and balance in Europe and the world." The European Community and the Western alliance are here, "the guarantees of our freedom and our security."

SCHMIDT COMMENTS ON SALT TALKS, PARITY ISSUE

[Text] Hamburg, 20 Feb (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt assumes that the second round of the American-Soviet negotiations on strategic arms limitation (SALT) will be continued this year. In an interview for the news magazine DER SPIEGEL (23 February issue), Schmidt stated: "I have no indications whatever that one or the other of the two world powers is trying to get out of this."

Schmidt believes it a serious mistake for the Soviet leadership "to have allowed itself to depart from the parity concept concerning medium-range missiles...[DPA ellipses] I have no doubt that it is necessary to make it clear to one's own people as well as the West European public, in figures, that Soviet armaments are miles ahead in a number of military areas, that it has disturbed the balance and is in the process of endangering the same, seriously and fundamentally. In these areas, equilibrium must be reestablished, either by way of Russia scrapping arms or by way of Russia scrapping some arms and allowing the opposite side to build up some portion. Developments concerning SS-20 missiles and Backfire bombers over the past 3 years must not continue for yet another 3 years, assuming that we, the West European countries, want to remain politically independent of the respective Soviet leadership."

According to Schmidt, the SS-20 missiles and Backfire bombers due to their limited range are directed only against the European states, that is, also against the Federal Republic. "I do not believe that they will be used tomorrow, but I do believe that they could be used the day after tomorrow to exert political pressure. And that is my real worry."

Further Report

[Text] Stuttgart, 21 Feb (DPA)--In the opinion of Chancellor Schmidt, the Federal Government is supported by a clear majority in the lower house on the question of NATO's double decision of December 1979. There is no reason, therefore, "to ask parliament for a vote of confidence at this time," Schmidt said in an interview with South German radio today. However, he expected that some critics of the decision in the SPD will continue "to make public noises in furtherance of their views."

The chancellor said that he is convinced that the second round of talks between the United States and the USSR on Eurostrategic weapons will take place "before the end of this year."

He is just as firmly convinced that U.S. President Reagan is earnest about his repeatedly declared intention of achieving arms limitation as a balanced and evenhanded result of negotiations. He also believes that Soviet leaders want such negotiations. The chancellor stresses that continuation of the SALT process for an agreed limitation of strategic weapons on both sides will decide "whether there ill be more tension in the world or whether tensions can be reduced."

FRG, U.S. OFFICIALS VOICE CONCERN OVER NATO DEFENSES

[Excerpt] Munich, 21 Feb (DPA)--The Americans have made an urgent appeal to their West European allies to increase their defense efforts. Frank Carlucci, U.S. deputy defense secretary, said at the international military policy conference in Munich on Saturday that a strengthening of conventional armed forces in Europe is "urgently required." Defense Minister Hans Apel expressed the view that the Federal Republic had not slackened in its defense efforts, but one should not rest on one's laurels. The two ministers expressed their great concern over the nuclear medium-range missile potential of the Soviet Union, which is growing quicker than expected and which increasingly threatens West Europe.

Manfred Woerner, the union's defense expert, also demanded "resolute efforts" to improve defense capabilities, which means reassessing priorities in the NATO allies' national budgets. Reestablishment of the military balance is absolutely vital for such a policy.

APEL VIEWS GROWING SS-20 THREAT, ARMS POLICY

[Text] Munich, 21 Feb (DPA)--According to Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel (SPD), the West European states are increasingly being threatened by the Soviet SS-20 nuclear medium-range missiles. Speaking in Munich on Saturday at the international military policy conference, Apel pointed out that Moscow's missile potential is growing faster than expected. In 1980 alone, the number of systems targeted on Europe has increased from about 100 to over 150.

The Soviet Union will "soon" have at its disposal the volume of missiles which the United States "as the final stage of the development predicted for only very much later." The SS-20 project will be completed much earlier than even the first American cruise missile or Pershing II missiles will be deployed in West Europe. In the absence of disarmament negotiations, the relevant NATO decision provides for these missiles to be moved from the United States to Europe in 1983 at the earliest.

In Apel's view, arms control policy has so far been "at best a controlled armament policy." The number of nuclear warheads of the United States and Soviet Union will increase during the coming years even if both sides adhere to the current SALT agreement. The potential permitted under this agreement will be improved regarding targeting precision, range, mobility and invulnerability. New mass destruction weapons could be developed and "the race to achieve military power in space is only just beginning."

The explosive increase in arms expenditure everywhere to about $500 billion last year, the development of conventional arms, the amassing of arms in the Third World--all this is an obstacle to successful arms control and the further aim of disarmament, Apel believes. Nevertheless, arms control maintains its outstanding importance within the framework of the policy of detente. Nobody can say that SALT has failed. The stagnation at the Vienna troops reduction negotiatons will have to be overcome.

According to Apel NATO will have to continue to attach great importance to providing military resources. However, the thought of extending NATO's contractual sphere cannot be entertained. Security in Europe should be consolidated through defense capability and the willingless to promote detente.

The West will have to develop a strategy to cope with the Soviet's Third World policy and regional crisis developments in the Third World. A military intervention by Moscow in Poland would jeopardize all possibilities of a positive development of East-West relations. Europe's conventional forward defense ability will have to be maintained under all circumstances. The minister left no doubt that costly arms projects, under the pressure of tight funds, will be no longer realizable as hitherto. As an example, he mentioned the enormous financial shortfalls for the new Tornado combat aircraft. "We shall have to get away from the idea that we should and could continue the present pace as far as our hardware is concerned." The Bundeswehr will have to learn again to fully exploit existing possibilities before demanding new systems.

Despite all this, the Bundeswehr will continue to receive all funds which it requires to meet its commitments, Apel underlined. From 1970 to 1980, the FRG increased its defense budget in real terms by 21 percent. In 1981, the defense budget will again grow appreciably more than the total expenditure of the federal budget. From 1970 to 1980, expenditure for military acquisitions rose by about 35 percent in real terms. During the last decade, Bonn has spent some DM55 billion on new arms systems. By the end of the 1980's, the Bundeswehr will receive the next generation of powerful arms systems. Their cost will amount to at least another DM50 billion.

In connection with the Bundeswehr's personnel problems, Apel referred to the future smaller age-group numbers. As of 1987, the number of recruits will fall below the target, reaching the bottom in 1994 with a shortfall of about 43 percent. One might have to consider extending the basic military service period. The possibility of the armed forces opening up a number of careers for voluntary service by women can also not be excluded. Although the Bundeswehr is integrated in society, he, Apel, feels that society's awareness of defense matters is insufficient. Many have "nebulous, emotional concepts" about the reasons for the need for armed forces. This lack appears to him to be also one of the reasons for the demonstrations during the past months, such as during the oath-taking ceremonies. The defense situation and the extent to which we are threatened will have to be discussed more than in the past. Apel announced for the end of April at the Defense Ministry a 2-day debate on the armed forces' tradition.

Comments on NATO Contribution

[Text] [No dateline as received] In a Bayrische Rundfunk interview, Defense Minister Hans Apel said with reference to the American demands for an increase in defense expenditure that there has to be agreement in NATO. It is not the case in the alliance that the one demands and the other pays. He will meet the American Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger at the end of March. Then there is the session of the nuclear planning group and the NATO council of ministers meet in May. Not until after this can the Bonn cabinet discuss whether and how German defense expenditure has to be raised.

Apel said he hopes that the committee of investigation into the Tornado case will help explain this project objectively to the public. Asked whether he will survive the committee politically as a minister, Apel said: "I take the opposition's attacks seriously. The confidence of the federal chancellor and the SPD is decisively in my work and my person. Given this, there is no reason at all for me to worry about my position at the Hardthoehe."

SCHMIDT, GENSCHER HOLD TALKS WITH U.S. SENATOR

[Text] Bonn, 20 Feb (DPA)--Questions of security and the alliance were the main subjects of the political talks which U.S. Senator John Tower, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, had with Federal Chancellor Schmidt and Foreign Minister Genscher today. According to the Foreign Office, Genscher's talks with the senator revealed a unanimity of views on all important questions.

On the same day, the Federal Government expressly welcomed the recent statement by U.S. President Reagan that the new U.S. Government attached importance to arms control and disarmament and desired "realistic, balanced and verfiable" agreements with the USSR. Government Spokesman Becker told a news conference that the U.S. President's statement has removed any doubts about the continued U.S. readiness to negotiated.

SAUDIS REPORTEDLY INTERESTED IN TORNADO AIRCRAFT

[Excerpt] Bonn, 21 Feb (DPA)--The Federal Government confirmed on Saturday that Saudi Arabia, apart from German armored fighting vehicles, is also interested in buying the new European Tornado aircraft. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker said that Saudi Arabia's request to Great Britain for Tornados required the joint coordination between the governments of the three producing countries: Great Britain, Italy and the Federal Republic. The questions raised by this issue will be discussed by the Federal Government at the next cabinet meeting. Becker gave no further details. Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel, in an aside at the international military policy conference in Munich, refused to comment on questions presented by DPA. "I have absolutely no comment to make," the minister said.

CHANCELLOR BEMOANS HIGH U.S. INTEREST RATES

[Text] Stuttgart 21 Feb (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt (SPD) believes that the current policy of high interest rates pursued by America will be unacceptable to Europe.

In an interview for Sueddeutsche Rundfunk, the chancellor said on Saturday, according to the radio, that the effects of the economic program recently announced by U.S. President Ronald Reagan on the European and the German economy cannot yet be estimated. However, Schmidt believes "that rather detailed talks with our American friends will be necessary to make clear that we here in Europe cannot put up with American interest rates in the area of 20 percent for any length of time." This will force the Federal Republic to adopt a higher interest rate "than is appropriate to our present economic situation or trend."

FINANCE MINISTER SPEAKS OUT AGAINST PROTECTIONISM

[Excerpt] Frankfurt 21 Feb (DPA)--Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer (SPD) has once again spoken out against protectionist measures and an aggressive trading policy in order to improve the German balance of trade. "The Federal Republic is not going to try to solve its economic problems at the expense of other countries," Matthoefer emphasized on Saturday during the opening of the 66th International Frankfurt Fair. More than one-third of the exhibitors have come from abroad. Any trade restriction would only backfire on the Federal Republic since it is more dependent on open borders and unrestricted trade than most other countries, the minister said.

OFFERGELD INTERVIEWED ON EL SALVADOR POLICY

[Dirk Cornelsen interview with Federal Minister for Economic Cooperation Rainer Offergeld in Bonn; date not given]

[Text] FR: The special envoy of the U.S. President, Eagleburger, is currently touring Europe obviously for the purpose of persuading the European allies to approve the U.S. support of the ruling junta in El Salvador.

The justification is that the Soviet Union, Cuba and other allies support the resistance movement against the junta with arms. On principle the new U.S. administration proposes to contain and/or push back the Soviet influence in Latin America. How do you assess the situation in El Salvador, and do you, like Mrs Hamm-Bruecher, believe that the junta under Jose Napolon Duarte is receptive to reforms and that the vast majority of the people does not support the opposition?

Offergeld: Whoever believes that the guerilla fighters are supported by the East bloc and that the unrest in El Salvador is the doing of the communist commits a serious misjudgment. The cause of this conflict is unbearable social injustice. He who wants to eliminate this conflict must eliminate injustice and make fundamental reforms possible. It may be that Duarte is personally receptive to reforms. Yet, the fact that it is rather the reactionaries who have prevailed among the military people and that the majority of the Christian Democrats, too, has repudiated the junta indicates that little receptiveness to reforms exists among those surrounding Duarte. The people themselves are fatigued by a long and cruel civil war. At the moment they do not take sides actively. This does not, however, allow any conclusions about the real attitude of the people.

FR: If the cause of civil war is to be sought in this social injustice, is there any reason, in the present situation, to resume German development aid to El Salvador and to send Bonn's ambassador to San Salvador in keeping with the wish recently voiced by the Americans?

Offergeld: Development aid cannot be started at this time, if only for security reasons, because we cannot carry out any sensible development projects in a country waging civil war. Besides, the resumption of development aid in the present situation would meet with the absolute disbelief of many people in the Federal Republic. The movements in Central and Latin America which demand more social justice and social equalization find broad support, for example, in ecclesiastical circles. It would, for instance, meet with the continued resentment of the youth, for example, were one to now support a regime whose willingness for reforms is doubtful.

FR: What do you think of the U.S. policy which seems to be aimed at supporting the ruling junta in El Salvador militarily and economically even more strongly than to date"

Offergeld: We are in the process of discussing these problems with the Americans in friendship and to make it clear that we, as far as our policy toward the Third World is concerned, proceed from the premise that long term successes in safeguarding peace can be scored only if the right of all states of the Third World to sovereignty, independence and the pursiut of an independent course is recognized. We will have to discuss these problems calmly with our American allies. Considering what we have so far read in publicized utterances by the new administration, the need for coordination with our American friends is particularly great in this field of foreign affairs.

FR: Can one take it from your statements that you are very skeptical or against the request for massive support for the junta which is now in power in El Salvador, with the idea of containing the influence of the Soviets and the Cubans?

Offergeld: Yes. I am not prepared to massively support the present junta. No demands of this kind have been made by our American friends so far.

FR: Do you believe that the danger exists that the new American policy could create tension with regard to the Federal Republic and other European states whose declared position is not to transplant the East-West antagonism to countries of the Third World, such as El Salvador?

Offergeld: There certainly are recent statements made by some representatives of the new administration which could cause one to assume that a change in the policy toward the Third World might take place.

The Federal Government will adhere to its persistent line on Third World policy, namely, not to involve developing countries in the East-West conflict. It will continue to claim that the nonaligned must be strengthened as an element of world policy safeguarding peace and that we will accept the developing countries having their own line independent of the two big military blocs.

FR: What should happen now with regard to El Salvador, and what will you advise the Americans to do?

Offergeld: I am firmly convinced that a military solution of the problem is out. If the civil war goes on, the country will bleed to death and there will be no solution for years. We must, therefore, support political decisions. The people who are prepared for talks and who want to implement a reform course in this country must be brought together around one table. The Salvadorans themselves must develop political solutions. Only in this way will the weapons be silenced in the near future.

FR: Can you give any names of democratic politicians who ought to be supported?

Offergeld: I am convinced that a talk with Duarte would be worthwhile. But I am also certain that there are many upright democrats among the resistance fighters, without whom a political solution would be impossible. I would name Ungo, the chairman of the Social Democrats.

DIE WELT ASSESSES U.S. ECONOMIC SITUATION

[Horst A. Siebert editorial: "The Comeback of Initiative"]

[Text] Ronald Reagan's economic program is a remarkable document because it is the first time that an American president has tried to really push back the influence of the state. The package of savings measures can also serve European governments as an example. The weariness resulting from inflation, state debts, higher and higher tax burdens and more and more intervention has reached an unbearable degree on the old continent as well.

The situation into which the United States has maneuvered itself is indeed fatal. A middle class family pays for unsecured bank credit more than 20 percent annually; mortgages cost 15.4 percent. These record interest rates make life difficult particularly for the automobile companies in Detroit and for construction firms. Chrysler will probably never again be a high flying company. "Personal bankruptcies" were never this high in the United States; compared with the year before, they increased 76 percent in 1980 to 367,000.

But that is not all. The United States experienced in the past 2 years double-digit inflation rates, something that has never happened since World War II. The debts of the government are rapidly nearing the 1,000 billion limit; interest payments will consume 80 billion this year, about one eighth of the current budget. The American workers' real wages, minus inflation, decreased in the past 5 years by 5 percent. In the same period, the burden of federal taxes for an average family increased by 67 percent.

Even worse is the fact that productivity has decreased in the past 3 years in the greatest industrial nation of the Western world in contrast to competitive countries. That does not merely affect the ability to compete on an international level; this downward trend indicates that worms have nibbled at the structure. If the creation of capital is insufficient and if not enough productive investments are being made, the lights must go out some day.

In such a critical situation one has no choice but to roll up one's sleeves. The Republicans issued the slogan: "Supply oriented economic policy." Basically this is nothing new, but as a term it is most effective, at least in America, because it makes sense. In contrast to Keynes, demand is not supposed to create production; direct influence will much rather be exerted on production. That will curtail price increases because more goods will be on the market. But how will one depress the enormous inflationary expectations which have developed in the United States and which so far have foiled economic policy corrections?

For the purpose of cutting the Gordian knot the Reagan team has developed a program which is based on four reciprocal measures. It envisages a reduction in the income tax by 30 percent over 3 years and the accelerated depreciation for companies, a cut in federal spending to a sizeable degree, a mitigation of state regimentation, as well as a stable monetary policy. There can be no amendments if the reckoning is to pan out.

The Reagan team proceeded in a very circumspect way, especially in view of the fact that the American welfare system is a corruptive jungle. For those really in distress the Social Security system not only remains intact but will even be broadened. Otherwise chips are bound to fall if planned state expenditures of $736.9 billion are cut to $695.5 billion as envisaged now for the 1982 fiscal year. The only budget that is actually changed upward is the defense budget.

It is the principle of overlapping advance planning that will be applicable to U.S. fiscal policy for the next 5 years. In the future, expenditures will increase by only 7 percent a year instead of the present 16 percent. A continuously careful monetary policy by the U.S. Federal Reserve Board actually should do away with the inflation fever, especially since Washington, too, lays claim to only a smaller portion of the U.S. Gross National Product. Definitely strong investment impulses will emanate from the tax reductions-spaced over several years, which is an advantage--and from the improved depreciation options.

And yet, Ronald Reagan did not quite go all the way; for political reasons he shrank back from a thorough investigation into indexed transfer payments. An inflation adaptation which would cover only 85 percent of the annual price increase would also have been beneficial for greater price stability.

But what the program lacks in particular is the elimination of the root of all evil, leaving aside the proliferation of social redistribution: In the United States it is possible to deduct all interest rates from the income tax, which falsifies the real money price and dodges the monetary policy of the Federal Reserve Board system. What must also be limited at long last is the deductibility from taxes of all sorts of conceivable mortgages. This is how U.S housing construction is being subsidized, which thus in turn ties up too much capital which is lacking in other branches of the economy.

In all probability Congress, which considers the tax reductions inflationary, will pull Reagan's rescue package apart. The Democrats have already sounded the bugle for attack. Many cuts in expenditures, too, will not survive. Still, the effort of the Republican President is not in vain. The next start, being preprogrammed already, many bring the breakthrough. No matter what the Democrats feel, the American people are putting their stakes on more private and less state initiative. They back Reagan.

REPORT ON RADIO FREE EUROPE BOMBING, INVESTIGATION

[Excerpt] Munich, 22 Feb (DPA)--Five of the eight persons injured in the bomb attack on Radio Free Europe (RFE) in Munich were today discharged from the hospital. The three seriously injured victims--two men and a woman--are members of the station's CSSR editorial office. According to the Bavarian criminal investigation office, the woman's life is presently not in danger.

When the bomb went off at 2045 GMT on Saturday evening 30 of the some 300 employees were in the radio station which is situated in the Englischer Garten. "This is the first attack of this kind on our building," said RFE spokesman Robert B. Redlick. Hungary is the only East bloc country so far to have reported the attack. RFE was able to maintain operations and broadcast the news in its programs. The spokesman refused to make any comment as yet on the attack.

Investigations are being led by a 38-man special commission from the land criminal investigation office and the public prosecutor's office. The federal prosecutor's office has not instituted proceedings so far but it is being constantly kept informed. The land criminal investigation office reported that the Americans are likewise not yet involved in the investigations. The Munich police, who before the attack "sporadically checked" the building as a threatened target, have brought in 30 officers for permanent guard.

QUAI D'ORSAY COMMENTS ON EL SALVADOR ISSUE

[Text] Assistant Secretary of State Eagleburger had a 2-hour meeting with Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet during a working breakfast on Tuesday, 17 February.

Questioned on this meeting, the Quai d'Orsay spokesman replied: "Mr Eagleburger informed Mr Francois-Poncet of the information gathered by the Americans on foreign support, notably arms supplies, which the El Salvador guerrillas are receiving. The French are studying this information. If it is confirmed, France can only condemn such interference. It must be recalled on this occasion," he added, "that the French Government is concerned about the situation in that region of the world, condemns the violence which the French ambassador in San Salvador suffered in 1979 and hopes that a political solution will be found within El Salvador."

REPORTAGE ON MEXICO'S DE OTEYZA'S VISIT TO PARIS

FL192328 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 2200 GMT 19 Feb 81

[Text] Paris, 19 Feb (NOTIMEX)--Rejection of all foreign interference in the Salvadoran conflict was the message conveyed to the French Government today by the Mexican secretary of programming and budget [title as received] Jose Andres de Oteyza, according to diplomatic sources in Paris. The Mexican position differs from that of U.S. Secretary of State Gen Alexander Haig, who is for taking part in the conflict when the time comes.

It was officially reported that De Oteyza and Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet renewed the agreement between Mexico and France on the resumption of the North-South dialogue, an initiative that led to the calling of a multinational meeting in the Mexican capital in June. The Mexican visitor also met with Industry Minister Andre Giraud with whom he continued talks to finalize, through a joint investment plan, several projects for industrial cooperation in keeping with Mexico's criterion on technological transfer.

On the other hand, nothing new came up in the area of oil. French sources claim that cooperation between both countries in this area is going well. De Oteyza's official visit will end tomorrow after he is received at the Elysee Palace by French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

Trade Agreement Signed

FL201724 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1654 GMT 20 Feb 81

[Text] Paris, 20 Feb (NOTIMEX)--At a meeting this morning between French Industry Minister Andre Giraud and Mexican Secretary of Patrimony and Industrial Development Jose Andres de Oteyza, the two officials signed an economic agreement by which Mexico will increase oil supplies to France in exchange for increased French industrial exports to Mexico.

The two politicians confirmed the good development of French-Mexican oil contracts although the Mexican secretary reported that his country's policy is to increase crude oil production only on a limited scale. Mexico currently supplies 100,000 barrels of oil daily to France. Trade between the two countries increased by almost 60 percent last year to a total of 4.20 billion francs (20.70 billion pesos).

The Mexican secretary, who is scheduled to leave Paris for home this afternoon, declared at the end of the meeting: My visit to Paris was made in view of the chiefs of state meeting that will be held in Mexico in June to see how we can get the North-South dialogue--stalled for such a long time at international (?forums)--out of the hole in which it has been. De Oteyza noted that he had examined with President Giscard d'Estaing the status of bilateral relations, primarily the economic ones.

Mr Sathe and the French officials also discussed the Cambodian situation and the Iraqi-Iranian war as well as bilaternal issues, according to the Foreign Ministry. GALLEY VIEWS NEW TACTICAL NUCLEAR MISSILE

[Summary] France will equip itself with a new tactical nuclear missile. Its model was shown yesterday to Defense Minister Robert Galley while he was visiting the Luxeuil military base. It has a range of 150 to 300 km and can carry a 150 warhead. It enables planes carrying it to reach their target without direct contact with enemy air defence. This means that this automatic remote control missile increases from 100 to 300 km the offensive range of the weapon. The missile will be installed on the Mirage-4 planes in 1984 and some of the Mirage-2000 planes of the tactical forces and the navy Super Etandard in 1986.

LATEST OPINION POLLS ON ELECTIONS PUBLISHED

L'EXPRESS Survey

NC201935 Paris AFP in English 1838 GMT 20 Feb 81

[Text] Paris, 20 Feb (AFP)--French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Socialist rival Francois Mitterrand are now running in a dead heat in this spring's presidential elections, according to a public opinion poll published today.

The survey, based upon a sample of 1,000 people and published by the weekly magazine L'EXPRESS, showed a drop in support for Mr Giscard d'Estaing who led Mr Mitterrand in a similar survey last month by 51-49 percent. Mr Giscard d'Estaing, who has yet to formally declare his intention to seek another seven-year term, beat Mr Mitterrand in the 1974 presidential elections by a slim 400,000-vote margin or 1.6 percent of the popular vote. The president has been losing ground steadily in the polls since November when survey's indicated that he would be elected by 59 percent of the votes against Mr Mitterrand's 41 percent. On Wednesday, a survey published in the rightist newspaper LE FIGARO showed Mr Mitterrand leading Mr Giscard d'Estaing in the two-round presidential vote this spring with the support of 52 percent of those interviewed.

SOFRES Poll

LD201617 Paris LE FIGARO in French 18 Feb 81 pp 1, 2

[Charles Rebois report: "Alarm Rating"]

[Text] Our fifth SOFRES opinion poll on the way French people intend to vote on 26 April and 10 May (poll carried out from 6 to 12 February 1981) further accentuates the trends which have emerged in previous months.

It will be noted that the four leading figures concerned are well ahead and that the gaps between their ratings are narrowing. To be more precise, they reflect the balance of forces between the four main parties which share the French people's support. This applies not only to the declared candidates but also, to some extent, to Valery Giscard d'Estaing, whose image is now no longer seen entirely as that of an incumbent president.

In the first round, Valery Giscard d'Estaing would obtain 28 percent (down 3), Francois Mitterrand 25 percent (up 2), Georges Marchais 17 percent (up 1) and Jacques Chirac 13 percent (up 2). In the second round, Francois Mitterrand with 52 percent (up 3) wuld have a lead over Valery Giscard d'Estaing who would only receive 48 percent (down 3).

In the first round of the 1974 presidential election, Valery Giscard d'Estaing obtained 32.6 percent. As the sole leftwing candidate. Francois Mitterrand would now total 43.2 percent. His score in this opinion poll added to that of Georges Marchais only reaches 42 percent. However, with Michel Crepeau's score, it rises to 43.5 percent. The left does not, therefore, seem to have progressed. It is the majority which is losing support, and its deserters are swelling the number of undecided voters.

These results may be surprising. They seem credible in view of the evolution which has been observed here for several months. Other opinion polls, however, contradict these results. It must be remembered that this is a still photograph taken of opinion more than 2 months from the election. In these conditions, there is a strong temptation to respond unfavorably in these times of economic crisis. It is possible to let off steam safely. Behavior in the polling booth will obey more objective considerations. In the present phase, Valery Giscard d'Estaing has all the disadvantages. As head of state, he is held responsible for good and bad, and everybody knows that current difficulties are upsetting the balance. Being compelled to show restraint, he cannot answer his critics or point to the positive aspects of his record. Hence, he would be condemned to the role of the hare in the fable if he were to delay too long in setting off. While, in the tortoise's role, Francois Mitterrand has an initial lead which Giscard will have to make up.

At this point, the question arises whether Valery Giscard d'Estaing should, if he stands, draw a distinction between the president's image and that of the candidate since, in the public's eyes, he is now a candidate. De Gaulle--the only great case to which it is possible to refer--chose a different attitude. He offered himself as a whole. You could take him or leave him. Moreover, the French people seem hesitant to make a choice for the second round. While only 12 percent did not give an opinion for the hypothetical first round--which favors pluralism in the first phase--21 percent refrained from giving an answer on the second round lineup. They did not have the vital factor for their decision, namely the first round result. This raises the notion of the tactical vote, which is determined by the chances of each of the two candidates who remain in the running. At present, 61 percent of the people questioned forecast Valery Giscard d'Estaing's victory as against 59 percent in January. This is a feeling which predominates in all political parties (49 percent in the PCF, 51 percent in the PS, 87 percent in the UDF and 61 percent in the RPR). Francois Mitterrand only obtains 18 percent of predictions.

However, these predictions do not correspond to wishes since the latter are equally divided (27 percent each) between the two candidates in the first round and since 42 percent of the people want Francois Mitterrand to win in the second round as against 40 percent for Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

The same uncertainty prevails over the transfer of votes. At first sight, this opinion poll suggests that the transfer is likely to be more effective on the left than in the majority. Sixty-one percent of Georges Marchais' voters said that they will vote for Francois Mitterrand on 10 May, while only 52 percent of Jacques Chirac's supporters are determined to vote for Valery Giscard d'Estaing. However, these figures must be adjusted according to the size of the respective scores on 26 April and account must be taken of the number of undecided voters.

Indeed, the undecided voters are the main unknown quantity. They belong to several categories. There are those who could still change their minds. They represent 30 percent of the voters. They include the dissatisfied people who are motivated by anger against the government and are likely to cast a positive vote in the polling booth. Their number rises to 31 percent in the RPR. Account must be taken of 38 percent of those interviewed who so far show little or no interest in the forthcoming presidential election.

Alongside the two "big names," there is the battle for succession. The aim is to secure a good position for the subsequent changeover. The man most directly concerned-probably the only one concerned--is Jacques Chirac, who has improved his position (13 instead of 11) partly at Michel Debre's expense (4 as against 5.5). Marie-France Garaud (3 as against 2.5) is reaping the meanly calculated benefit of an intelligent campaign.

For his part, Georges Marchais (17 as against 16) is waging a difficult battle. It is not very likely that he will succeed in nearing Jacques Duclos' 1969 result (21.52 percent).

IFOP - LE POINT

LD201639 Paris LE POINT in French 16-22 Feb 81 pp 44-45

[Jean Charlot report: "Big Names Hold Sway"]

[Text] Debre tumble, setback for Giscard and Marchais, very slight progress for Mitterrand and first successes of Chirac's offensive--the eighth IFOP-LE POINT opinion poll is all the richer in information since additional questions have revealed ferments for change which could lead equally to a deterioration in Giscard's position or to its stabilization and even improvement.

Jacques Chirac's candidacy was announced only at the final stage of this eighth opinion poll. It nonetheless immediately affected the situation in two ways by considerably increasing the number of people intending to vote for Jacques Chirac (11 percent compared with 8 percent) and by reducing Michel Debre's chances by a similar percentage (from 7.5 percent to 4.5 percent) in the event that both men are candidates in the first ballot.

In any event, Michel Debre has retreated on all fronts. Fewer people believe in his chances of winning. After being outclassed by Giscard and Chirac as the "best majority candidate," he has now been overtaken by Chaban even though the latter is not a candidate. His prestige has suffered--only 35 percent of the French people believe that he possesses the necessary qualities to become president compared with 41 percent in December 1980. Finally, slightly fewer people are prepared to vote for him now that initially (4.5 percent compared with 5 percent in August 1980). On the other hand, Chirac has improved his image (even overtaking Mitterrand, but not Giscard, with respect to qualities a president should possess). He has improved his credibility and started the reconquest of the Gaullist electorate, maybe in expectation of even better things to come.

The situation is gradually becoming clearer. The "Coluche phenomenon" seems to be continuing and the "small candidates"--many of whom could well be unable to qualify for lack of a sufficient number of "sponsors" (at least 500 sponsors from 30 departments are needed)--are beginning to give way to the four big names. The total percentage of people intending to vote for Giscard, Mitterrand, Marchais and Chirac has increased from 78 percent to 79.5 percent in the past 3 months.

In a way, the majority is starting from positions which it secured in 1974. The situation has been remarkably stable--the number of people intending to vote for Giscard has gradually decreased to the level of the first ballot in 1974, namely 33 percent. In 1974, Chaban and Royer obtained 17.7 percent of votes cast whereas 17.5 percent of the electorate now apparently intend to vote for Chirac, Debre and Marie-France Garaud.

As for the left, with 40.5 percent of the electorate intending to vote for its candidates, it is in a considerably worse situation than it was in 1974 when it secured 46.1 percent of votes in the first ballot. However, this gap is not a result of any progress by the majority--it can mainly be explained by the (temporary?) rise of ecologist votes (5-6 percent compared with 2 percent in 1974). Pressure for "tactical" voting should enable Mitterrand, who has progressed slightly, to pin some hope on this.

The Communist electorate seems to wish to break through its reserve in the second ballot. At the time of the preceding opinion poll, only 56 percent of Communists intended to vote for Francois Mitterrand in the second ballot, whereas 40 percent adopted a wait-and-see attitude. The corresponding figures are now 61 percent and 35 percent.... Everything seems to indicate that, as a result of his noisy campign, Georges Marchais has lost rather than gained support. The percentage of people intending to vote for him in the first ballot amounting to 14-14.5 percent according to different hypotheses, compared with 15 percent in January 1981.

Even though the change in the electorate's voting intentions and its hopes for the individual candidates' victory is unfavorable to the outgoing president, his chances in the second ballot remain the highest. And, above all, his image, which greatly deteriorated at the end of the year, seems to have improved. Giscard remains by far "the least unlikeable" candidate. The ecologist electorate's attitude to him is more favorable now than it was at the time of preceding opinion pools. The unity of the majority electorate seems exemplary compared with a still far from perfect transfer of votes among the electorate of the left. Despite his advantages--especially in the social sphere--Mitterrand carries round his neck the electoral millstone of Communist ministers which everybody attributes to him. As for Chirac, even though his chances have improved, he lacks credibility compared with Giscard and--unlike the outgoing president--gives rise to serious rejection reactions on the left.

All in all, this opinion poll could make it possible to envisage a stabilization rather favorable to Giscard's position if the Friday IFOP-FRANCE SOIR opinion poll did not indicate that his popularity in the country is continuing to decrease--37 percent of the French people remain pleased with Giscard as president but the proportion of people displeased with him has increased from 47 to 51 percent in 1 month. As for Premier Raymond Barre, his--temporary?--silence has not worked in his favor either--only 25 percent (compared with 27 percent) of the French people are pleased with him whereas 63 percent (compared with 57 percent) say that they are displeased.... Eighty days before the election, the head of state and the premier have again broken all records of unpopularity compared with their own past performance and that of their predecessors.

PCI'S NAPOLITANO SUPPORTS BERLINGUER'S VIEWS

[Excerpt] Regarding relations between the CPSU and the Italian Communist Party, Giorgio Napolitano of the Communist Party National Secretariat states in L'EUROPEO that on questions of international policy, the Italian Communist Party is profoundly united with Berlinguer. No one should have any illusions about the possibility of removing militants from the party who might express reservations about criticism and condemnation of the Soviet Union (?taking unforeseen options). In addition, Napolitano believes it to be of vital interest to the Polish leaders to avert the threat of a Soviet military intervention, and in the interests of the Soviets not to become involved in such a risky undertaking.

BERLINGUER DEFENDS PCI VIEW ON POLISH SITUATION

LD201109 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 16 Feb 81 pp 1-2

[Ugo Baduel report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 15 February speech in Turin: "Workers' Response to the Crisis"]

[Excerpt] Turin--Anomaly That We Do Not Want To Lose

We are perfectly well aware, Berlinguer said, that our quest and initiative on both the theoretical and the practical planes, which are prompting so much interest and so many hopes within the European workers' movement and in progressive forces even outside Europe, are prompting the hostility of the West's most stubborn, reactionary and adventurist forces and also incomprehension and mistrust among those who believe that the kind of socialism realized hitherto is the only path and the only solution valid for all countries and that the communist parties' struggle must submit to unchangeable general laws immune from the innovation of experience and from the march of history.

This will not prevent us, Comrade Berlinguer said, from continuing to patiently develop our stances both on general issues and on very important specific issues such as Poland.

In this connection, Berlinguer pointed out that with regards to events in Poland the PCI has expressed a verdict and taken initiatives consistent with the principles in which we believe and which we practice, always in a correct, constructive and indeed--we believe--irreprehensible manner. The first of these principles is the unacceptability of any violation of every people's sovereign right to freely choose the paths for their own development and progress. Berlinguer added that repressive measures would be all the more absurd and unacceptable in the presence of a movement that has emerged from within the Polish working class and from its protest against errors of approach and method.

Irrespective of the incomprehension and the initiatives of other communist parties, we will continue calmly and steadfastly along our path.

This path, he added, will never lead us either to opportunistic compromises or to entrenchment. We will defend and develop the PCI's individual characteristics as a class and national party asserting a new concept of internationalism--the characterists that have made us the Western world's strongest communist party and on which our very unity is based.

That which is termed our "anomaly" is the most valuable thing that the Italian working class has created. We do not want to lose this "anomaly:" we need it now to stand the test posed by the Italian crisis and to resolve it, within democracy, by means of a change in the ruling class.

EL SALVADOR FRONT DELEGATION HAS TALKS WITH PCI

[Unattributed report: "PCI Solidarity With Democratic Front"]

[Text] Rome--A Salvadoran Revolutionary Democratic Front [FDR] delegation composed of Directorate member Jose Rodriguez Ruiz and FDR representative in Italy Dina Mendoza met yesterday at PCI Directorate headquarters with the following comrades: Central Committee member and Foreign Section Chief Antonio Rubbi and Renato Sandri and Claudio Bernabucci of the foreign section.

The Salvadoran comrades gave a full report on the situation that has come about in their country following the general offensive launched in January by the liberation forces, the massive military aid that the United States is providing to the Christian Democratic military junta and the threat of outside intervention and regionalization of the conflict. They called for full solidarity from the democratic political forces with their struggle, which is aimed at extricating their country from the present brutal campaign of repression, ridding themselves of the despotic forces ruling the country and pursuing action that will reestablish the conditions for implementing in El Salvador a policy of thorough reforms within freedom and democracy.

The PCI comrades confirmed the commitment of our party together with all Italian workers and democratic forces to developing more extensively the broadest and more prompt initiative of solidarity through demonstrations, declarations and the gathering of financial and material aid and to exerting pressure on the Italian Government to take the necessary political and diplomatic initiatives in all European and international forums against the threats of outside interventions in El Salvador and against the current campaign of repression against the patriotic forces, and to recall the ambassador for consultations which cannot be delayed any longer.

DEFENSE MINISTER LAGORIO DEPARTS FOR EGYPT

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC CONGRESS APPROVES STRATEGY

LD222002 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 22 Feb 81

[Excerpts] The eighth congress of the Social Democratic Party [PSD], held this weekend, has resulted in a clear strengthening of the position of party leader and Prime Minister Francisco Pinto Balsemao.

In effect, in the only leadership election that had rival slates of candidates competing for the National Council, the slate backed by the party leader secured 20 of the council's 30 seats.

The strategy motion unanimously approved in the early hours of the morning pledges opposition to any bid for more personal power by President Eanes and, at the same time, advises the government not to seek or provoke rifts with the president of the republic.

The motion denies the existence of any political solidarity between the president of the republic and the government and adds that the institutional solidarity proclaimed by Belem Palace [the Presidency] is merely occasional and episodic. The motion advises the government not to allow any interference by the head of state in its own sphere of jurisdiction. It also reiterates that the PSD will enter into no pacts with the Presidency over the revision of the constitution and will not agree to attempts by General Eanes to interfere with the process of revision, since this task belongs exclusively to the Assembly of the Republic.

The motion also recommends the proposal of a civilian candidate to the 1985 presidential elections.

The motion calls for the disbanding of the Council of the Revolution, the total abolition of the government's accountability to the president of the republic, and the complete subordination of the Armed Forces to the government.

With regard to foreign policy, entry into the EEC continues to be top priority and is described in the motion as a condition for Portugal's democratic stability. The EEC, the motion states, is the only course for the speedy and sound improvement of the living standards of the Portuguese.

The motion declares that Portugal must maintain its unconditional commitment to NATO. It rejects nonalignment and neutralism and totally denounces Soviet expansionism.

The motion recommends that the emigrants be allowed to vote in the presidential elections and that the number of parliamentary seats for emigrants' representatives be increased.

It expresses support for a policy of rapprochement between Portugal and the Portuguese-speaking countries in a context of respect for each other's sovereignty.

GOVERNMENT REMOVES SANCTIONS AGAINST IRAN

LD191701 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 15 Feb 81 p 3

[Text] The cabinet has decided to lift the restrictive measures imposed on economic relations between Portugal and Iran last April.

According to a "resolution" published in the OFFICIAL GAZETTE, the release of the U.S. hostages hitherto detained in that country ended the situation which led the Portuguese Government to decree the economic sanctions.

The government headed by Sa Carneiro was in fact the first to respond to the appeal issued by President Carter to the U.S. allies, illustrating its condemnation of the conduct of the Islamic students in Tehran.

PSOE'S GONZALEZ ON CALVO SOTELO'S PROGRAM

LD202006 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 20 Feb 81

[Text] Our correspondent reports from the Congress of Deputies on the investiture debate at the congress plenary session:

Felipe Gonzalez is now speaking, replying to Calvo Sotelo's response to Gonzalez's earlier speech which opened this afternoon's session. Let me summarize Felipe Gonzalez's speech.

The Spanish Socialist Workers' Party [PSOE] secretary general made what was, in fact, a formal speech. Rather than attacking the candidate's program, saying his colleagues Lluch and Solchaga had already set out the Socialist position, Felipe Gonzalez limited himself to asking about those subjects missing in Calvo Sotelo's program and requesting explanations about those which had not been made clear.

Thus, he asked about energy costs and prices and what effect these are going to have on farming and fisheries. He also asked why nuclear energy, instead of more coal and gas, combined with only the essential amount of nuclear energy. He asked if restructuring of industry is to be achieved through a policy of agreed changes; whether farm prices are to be negotiated; whether prices of diesel fuel and of fertilizers are to be negotiated with farmers; and what precisely is to be done about the consequences of the drought. He also asked what is happening about the fisheries agreements with Morocco. He continued with a long list of questions, which eventually led him to international affairs.

Here he devoted time to the question of NATO. Felipe Gonzalez said that his party believes in Europe, of course, but that its European and Western bent does not go as far as implying an Atlanticist policy, in other words, a policy geared to NATO. I do not want to cause our country to risk 10 million deaths in 24 hours through nuclear weapons, Felip Gonzalez said, and went on to say that he, and he supposed that the candidate took the same view, took no pleasure in the existence of foreign bases in our country; but he said that he was nevertheless prepared to renegotiate the treaty with the United States so as not to upset the international balance. But, he said, the fact that Spain goes along with and supports the Western political system is of least interest to NATO; NATO is only interested in military matters. He cited the instance of Portugal, which, under the Salazar dictatorship, formed part of the North Atlantic Treaty. He said, finally, that he does not want Spain to join NATO, because it will bring no benefit though it could do a lot of damage.

Felipe Gonzalez ended by listing subjects which he found missing in the candidate's speech. For example, said Gonzalez, Calvo Sotelo had not mentioned women's matters, pensioners', the poor, housing, education, health or culture. This, he said, amounts to promising an economic policy without an accompanying social policy. And so, said Gonzalez, it is impossible to inspire hope in these options if it is done coldly and distantly, without paying heed to the problems of the man in the street.

In his reply, Calvo Sotelo expressed thanks for the tone of the speech, and described Felipe Gonzalez's speech as statesmanlike. My program, said Calvo Sotelo, looks better as summarized by the Socialist leader. Finally, he said that his policy is not a conservative one but is following the economic line of the last 5 months. He further denied that his program puts a greater burden on the underprivileged. The weakest in society have grown considerably in recent years but this cannot (?continue) in the present crisis situation. On the question of NATO, Calvo Sotelo disputed the assertion of a nuclear risk.

At this moment, as we said, Felipe Gonzalez is delivering his reply to the address by Calvo Sotelo.

From the Congress of Deputies I return you to the studio.

POLISH FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR OFFICIAL VISIT

NC191114 Paris AFP in English 1101 GMT 19 Feb 81

[Excerpt] Copenhagen, 19 Feb (AFP)--Polish Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek arrived here today on a three-day official visit in reply to a trip to Warsaw last June by his Danish counterpart Kjeld Olesen.

Mr Czyrek, who has handled Polish foreign affairs for almost 30 years but was only made minister last August, was met at the airport by Mr Olesen.

He is scheduled to have talks with Social Democrat Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen as well as the foreign minister and will also meet Queen Margrethe.

Economic Needs Discussed

NC202020 Paris AFP in English 1956 GMT 20 Feb 81

[Text] Copenhagen, 20 Feb (AFP)--Poland's Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek used a 48-hour official visit to Denmark that ended here today to signal to the West what kind of economic and financial facilities his country could do with.

Following wide-ranging talks with his Polish guest, Danish Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen expressed his readiness to pass on the Polish message to Denmark's nine partners in the European Economic Community as well as its four allies in the Nordic Council.

The Polish foreign minister meanwhile spelled out at a press conference what his country required, namely credits for certain raw materials, food supplies to cover the day-to-day domestic needs and western agreement to reschedule or refinance repayment of earlier loans.

Recalling recent Soviet cash credits to Warsaw worth 2,300 million roubles (dollars), Mr Czyrek declared that to pull out of its difficulties, Poland would need to mobilize all of its economic resources as well as intensifying its cooperation within COMECON, both in terms of credits and exchanges of goods.

In a final communique, the two foreign ministers made a strong plea for halting the amrs race and strengthening "security for all sides at the lowest possible level of armaments," emphasizing the need for progress in the SALT process, the nuclear force reduction talks in Geneva and the Vienna negotiations on force reductions in central Europe.

KLIRIDHIS ASKS FOR GOVERNMENT'S RESIGNATION

NC211921 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1830 GMT 21 Feb 81

[Text] Speaking this evening at a provincial mass meeting of his party in Paphos, Chairman of the Democratic Rally Kliridhis accused the government and the president of the republic of erroneously handling the national issue and the economic slump that has hit the country, and asked for their resignations and for the dissolution of the House of Representatives.

Kliridhis called for a rally to bring about a change and salvation and said that the parliamentary elections will unify the political left at the grassroots. Then he said that the Democratic Rally Party will reverse the course of events toward meritocracy, responsibility, tax relief, good government and equality among citizens. He also promised that, among other things, his party will radically revise tax legislation and the proportional system for social insurance and will work for the implementation of a correct and feasible system for medical care.

The chairman of the Democratic Rally also mentioned that his party will take measures to increase productivity, and will work to radically improve export trade and, until the refugee problem has been finally solved through the return of the refugees to their homes under conditions of security, his party will focus its social policy on the relief of the refugees and the solution of their problems.

Kliridhis added that it appears the inter-Cypriot talks are being led to a new failure and that the responsibility for the impasse lies on Turkish intransigence. In order to break this, he said, we must promote our own formula for the solution of the Cyprus problem on the basis of the Makarios-Denktas agreement, a formula that should also meet with the parallel support of the Western, Eastern and nonaligned world.

Kliridhis supported recourse to the Security Council on the basis of such a formula and a demand from the Security Council to submit suggestions for the solution of our differences with the Turks.

U.S. 'MANEUVERS' IN NORTH INCITE PROTESTS

KKE Protest

NC201550 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 20 Feb 81 p 1

[Text] The press bureau of the Central Committee of the KKE yesterday released the following statement for publication:

"A stark new U.S. violation was carried out today in Drama. It clearly demonstrates where the government's policy of submission to the imperialists may lead. Specifically at noon today a U.S. platoon wearing antiradiation uniforms and gas masks occupied the central square of Drama during an exercise of "antinuclear, radiological, biological, chemical warfare." This caused a great disturbance among the city's population.

"This unprecedented invasion by the Americans is aimed to create a cold-war psychosis and to demonstrate to the people that the Americans are the true masters of the country. It was carried out in a city in north Greece and it undermines our relations with our peace-loving neighbors. It confirms not only that our country is inundated with nuclear weapons but also that plans exist to involve it in nuclear adventures. "The government of the rightwing, with its reintegration within military NATO, with its new agreements on bases which is now under preparation, has created a highhanded spirit among the Americans such as they did not even possess at the time of Purifoy and the junta.

"The KKE denounces this new imperialist provocation which takes place only days after the airport of the Greek capital had been policed by U.S. military units and the terrorist activities of the Americans at Sourmena [area neighboring on Ellinikon airport.]

"The Greek people will intensify their struggle so that the Americans, their bases and their nuclear weapons depart from Greece before our country is forced to pay an even higher price for the imperialist overlordship; so that the government of the rightwing, which has turned Greece into an unfenced field of imperialism, is ousted from authority."

Nicosia Reports Incident

[Text] It was announced in Athens that Foreign Minister Mitsotakis will protest to U.S. Ambassador McCloskey over the entry of U.S. troops into Drama without permission and their conduct on an exercise there. In the meantime, a spokesman of the U.S. Embassy in Athens admitted that a U.S. Army detachment of 20 men, stationed at a Greek military base near Drama, did carry out a maneuver within the framework of a training exercise which incorporated the use of gas masks and chemical warfare uniforms.

The spokesman admitted the exercise was conducted without approval and that commanders of senior military units [as broadcast] have given an apology to the appropriate Greek authorities. The spokesman said those responsible for the conduct of the exercise have been reprimanded.

NC211255 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 21 Feb 81

[Text] This morning, the Greek Government filed a protest with the U.S. Government over the Drama incident in which a U.S. detachment entered the town without permission in order to conduct an exercise.

In this connection, the Foreign Ministry has issued the following statement:

The Drama incident was due to the violation by a small U.S. detachment, under a junior officer, of explicit and specific agreements and regulations which stipulate that the elements of U.S. Armed Forces, stationed in our country on the basis of the agreements in force, never conduct exercises outside a military camp except only in case of joint maneuvers with Greek units to which they are detached and after a special permit. These regulations are in force incessantly and inviolably. The Greek Government has filed, through Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, a protest to U.S. Ambassador McCloskey and requested that measures be taken so that the agreements and regulations continue to be firmly observed. Mr McCloskey expressed his government's regrets for the incident, which it attributed to a misunderstanding by the junior U.S. officer in charge of the team, and gave the assurance that in the future the existing agreements and regulations would be firmly observed.

AVRIANI Reports Protests

NC211623 Athens AVRIANI in Greek 21 Feb 81 pp 1,8

[Excerpts] One mistake by the U.S. military stationed at Drama has disclosed a secret that could be fatal for the area and the whole country in general. As is known, the U.S. military forces made a surprise invasion of the town while on a march which was included in their maneuvers. The U.S. military is guarding nuclear warheads at the Drama base!

In the meantime, there has been immediate reaction in all parts of Greece against the inadmissible behavior of the U.S. Armed Forces in Drama. Yesterday, the inhabitants of the area held a gathering and demanded the withdrawal of the Americans, who show that they consider the whole country as their property.

Politico-military opposition circles have stressed the concern caused by the disclosures made following the surprise invasion of Drama by the Americans. Because, although the American military has been in Drama for quite some time, nobody or, rather, a very small number of inhabitants knew about its presence.

Thus, it is reckoned that in many areas of the country there are nuclear warheads at similar bases with all the dangers entailed by their storage. Besides, all the opposition parties have stressed the seriousness of this new U.S. provocation.

KKE Statement

[Statement of the KKE Central Committee press office--date not given]

[Text] At the same time the government was stating ignorance concerning the U.S. soldiers' aggressive exercise in Drama, the U.S. Embassy was irreparably exposing it in an announcement. The embassy's announcement brazenly stressed that an exercise had indeed taken place but...mistakenly, and that it had extended inside the town of Drama "without the approval" of government authorities.

This fact proves the government's total slavishness in which it once again has sought to cover the provocative activities of its protectors as some time ago it hastened to declare the alleged existence of a Greek Commander at the U.S. Base at Ellinikon!

By tolerating the successive provocative activities of the Americans, the government is affording the possibility to the U.S. Embassy to appear as cosovereign in a country whose government not only does not inform the people about what is happening at home but tries to conceal activities which--mistakenly or deliberately--may jeopardize even their future lives. It is a vital national necessity that the right be ousted, because through its submission to U.S. domination, it is leading the country to new national adventures.

Papandreou Stand

["Text" of statement by PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou on U.S. "maneuvers" in Drama--date not given]

[Text] The U.S. Armed Forces "being hosted" in our country consider Greece as their protectorate and open field [stretching] from Crete to Macedonia and from Vatika [Neapolis] to Drama. This is the message and meaning of their behavior at Drama which is unacceptable to our proud people. But, of course, the responsibility falls with the government; not only the present government but all rightwing governments without exception, because they have never taught the foreigners to respect our country and because the rightwing governments were always prepared to accept restrictions to our national sovereignty and sacrifice national interests at the altar of the "alliance's" interests.

We ask the prime minister: How long will our people have to tolerate similar provocations? Let the prime minister, at last, state responsibly: Is there a single inch of Greek territory which is not controlled by the armed forces of the "allies?"

TO VIMA Editorial

[Editorial: "A Provocation and...a Reprimand"]

[Text] The incident involving U.S. troops in Drama cannot close with a "demarche" or with a "reprimand."

First of all, the term "incident" cannot apply. This is nothing but a scandal--and a scandal of the first magnitude the extent of which increases as a result of all the inherent questions.

Let us start with this indescribable occurence. At noon Thursday a platoon of U.S. military personnel wearing gas masks came out for an exercise in the streets of Drama, yelling and terrorising the inhabitants. They poured out into the town, they carried out their "operation", and then they left with things returning to normal conditions.

Normal conditions? Most certainly not, because if the case is not cleared up completely, then Greece, as a sovereign state, will have accepted in silence a blow which is unprecedented in times of peace. At the same time, there is absolutely no importance to the fact that the Americans are also members of the NATO alliance and that their presence on Greek territory is officially recognized.

This is because as it was proved after the fact:

--The Americans asked for absolutely no permission to conduct their "operation." They did not even warn the Greek authorities. Without any interference they trampled upon Greek sovereign rights.

--The Americans started from another Greek military base and, with their provocation, they thus abused the very military "hospitality" extended to them.

If these are the facts, however, then we also have the following questions:

--Apart from the bases which they already have on Greek territory, are the Americans "enjoying hospitality" at other installations in our country?

--On the basis of what agreements, which have never been announced, is this "hospitality" extended to them?

Use will be made of the argument that these U.S. forces "are the guests" at Greek installations, not in their capacity as U.S. forces but as NATO forces--to which Greece also belongs. Even in such an eventuality, however, the questions are no less critical:

--Could it be that these forces (which supposedly are not U.S. forces but NATO forces) "were the guests" at Greek military installations even during the 5 years during which Greece was not a member of the military wing of NATO?

--Could there be other forces which, under the cover of NATO, have been installed in other regions of Greek territory?

--And, primarily, how are these forces controlled by the Greek military authorities when, a as is last Thursday's case in drama, they are able, unchecked and without interference, to carry out military exercises in the central streets of Greek towns?

In answer to all this, as well as in answer to the protests of the press, of the opposition and, yesterday, of the government, the U.S. Embassy issued, luckily, this reply: "Those responsible have been...reprimanded."

This more or less brings to mind the story of a passerby whose hat is snatched off by a thug who then tramples upon it. When this passerby protests, then the thug picks up the hat rams it on the passerby's head and tells him: there you have your hat back. Now be on your way again...

The question, however, is which way will the passerby be able to go from now on. The question is also, which way will the Greek Government follow in face of an insult--as well as a provocation--which cannot be wiped out with a..."reprimand."

TO VIMA Article

[Excerpt] The U.S. military unit, whose platoon of 40 men provocatively carried out the "antinuclear exercise" in the center of Drama, was entrusted with the guarding of nuclear artillery shells. This unit--which is stationed in a Greek military camp 3 kilometers from Drama--is a section of the "558th U.S. Artillery Group" which also commands its second section at the Elevsis airfield. It is characteristic of the secrecy surrounding the mission of this group that both the Greek and the U.S. sides have refused to explain the exact role of this U.S. force. Both the Greek Government spokesman and the U.S. Embassy spokesman yesterday refused to make any statement on the purpose served by these units.

At the same time, it is not at all coincidental that the exercise of the U.S. troops centered on dealing with nuclear warfare and the platoon was equipped with special uniforms and gas masks. The question which arises after this "accidental" revelation of the existence of these forces is whether there are other similar forces stationed on Greek territory and whether the question is being dealt with during negotiations on the status of U.S. bases.

The Foreign Ministry statement, issued 24 hours after the well-known statement-admission of the U.S. Embassy--attempts to blame the Drama incident on junior officers while U.S. Ambassador McCloskey limited himself to an expression of regret and blamed the incident on a misunderstanding by "the junior U.S. officer in charge of the group."

The government, in the meantime, appears strongly irritated by the "initiative" undertaken by the U.S. Embassy and its issuing of a statement without a prior consultation, a fact which made the government appear in ignorance of such an important issue.

Comrades Grigoris Farakos, member of the Central Committee Political Office, and Mitsos Sakhinis, Central Committee member, are included in the delegation.

Before departing, Comrade Kharilaos Florakis made the following statement: "We feel very satisfied because, as the KKE delegation, we intend to follow the work of the 26th CPSU Congress. Regarding the significance of this congress, it is determined solely by the fact that all eyes of the world, friend and foe, are currently turned toward Moscow not only becuase it concerns a CPSU congress but because it is convening at a time when the international situation is very tense."

MITSOTAKIS ON DECISION TO MARK ATATURK YEAR

[Text] OFficial Greek participation in events to be held on Greek soil as part of Ataturk Year, commemorating the 100th anniversary of his birth, is part of general efforts to restore confidence between Greece and Turkey. This is the reply Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis gave to PASOK deputies who asked a question in Parliament Wednesday on the above subject.

Mr Mitsotakis said that a revival of the spirit that prevailed in the relations between the two countries during the days of Kemal Ataturk and Elevtherios Venizelos, may help create a climate suitable to find settlements of the difficulties burdening the two countries' bilateral relations at a crucial time for the sensitive east Mediterranean region. Mr Mitsotakis also recalled that Ataturk Year, declared by Turkey for 1981 is under the auspices of UNESCO.

To a question on whether the Greek Government has asked, or will ask, for similar events to be held in Izmir or any other Turkish city, it was clarified in Parliament that, for the time being, Greece has made no plans for such events, and consequently no overtures have been made to Ankara.

ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS CRITICIZES PASOK-KKE COOPERATION

NC201637 Athens ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS in Greek 20 Feb 81 p 8

["From the "Judgments and Comments" column: "The Front in Action"]

[Text] KKE and PASOk cadres are in the forefront in all gatherings organized by the so-called "Greek Committee for International Detente and Peace," because A.G. Papandreou and Kh. Florakis' men are actively moving among Moscow, Sofia, Thessaloniki and Patrai to hinder the installations of NATO "Pershing 2" and "cruise" missiles--after 3 years--and are keeping silent, are not seeing that the Soviet "SS-20's" are already installed and serving with their tubes aimed toward Paris, London, Athens, Rome and Brussels... In Thessaloniki the KKE-PASOK front, front for the country's foreign and defense policy, dropped the following slogans:

"No to the pursuit of arms--long live the people's friendship!" "No to the Pershing and cruise missiles." "Out with the bases of death." "No to the neutron bomb." "Workers ask for peace and jobs." "EEC-NATO robbers' syndicate" and so forth.

Without the fellow-traveling of PASOK, KEE would not dare this provocation. However, both Marxist parties have "common motives" for peace and democracy! as A.G. Papandreou ascertained during his recent meeting with Stalinist coupist, the secretary general of the Portuguese Communist Party. He ascertained this and declared it proudly!!

RIZOSPASTIS SUMMARIZES KKE PLENUM RESOLUTION

[Excerpts] "Achieving the goal of the party's participation in the second distribution of seats requires that the members, friends and followers of the party should approach all workers in order to present the positions of the KKE everywhere, at every place of work, in the town quarters, in the villages, in every home. The target must be that there will be no worker, no young man or woman, whether working or a housewife, without learning of the election positions of the KKE."

This was stressed in the resolution of the plenum of the Central Committee of the KKE which was released for publication. This document of the plenum of the Central Committee deals with international and domestic developments, with the imminent election battle and with the party's duties.

In respect to the international situation it is stressed that this situation is becoming more dangerously tense. But--it is stressed--the time when imperialism was the sole regulator of the fates of the world has past forever.

On domestic developments: There is exhaustive reference to the passage of the government to even greater subjugation to Atlanticism, to the crisis which rages in the economy of Greece, to the greater increase of the workers' struggles, to the elections and to the party's goals.

The plenum resolution reiterates once again that the immediate proclamation of elections is a national necessity. It also presents the basic prerequisites for the smooth and inviolable conduct of the elections.

"The KKE Central Committee," the resolution states, "stresses the necessity for alert and common struggle by the democratic forces, for obstructing pressure and terrorist demonstrations, for neutralizing the danger-mongering of the rightwing and for guaranteeing the inviolable character of the elections."

In reference to the goal for the party's participation in the second distribution of seats, the resolution stresses, among other things, that this is an absolutely realistic goal.

"The fighters," the resolution stresses, "understand that the battle of the leftwing can as a whole and effectively give the KKE a unifying slate, because the KKE could overcome the obstacle of the current felonious electoral law."

The Central Committee of the KKE particularly stresses that with the loss of parliamentary majority by the rightwing, the only solution which could promote the cause for change will lie in the formation of a democratic government which will rely--both in the Chamber of Deputies and among the people--upon all the forces which support change.

The Central Committee of the KKE stresses that irrespective of its climaxing and the specific rates of its implementation, the program of a postelection democratic government must promote the following:

--national independence;
--democratization;
--economic development to the benefit of the people and the country.

"The democratic government," it adds, "can neutralize the various plots and undermining acts of the local and foreign reactionary forces, and it can protect the smooth democratic progress along the road to change, only if it is supported by the organized, united, mass movement of the people and by the common action of all anti-imperialist-democratic forces."

[Text] State and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal has announced that the 1982 fiscal budget of the United States envisages $700 million of aid for Turkey. In a statement to Turkish Radio and Television, Ozal, who is currently holding contacts in Washington, said that $300 million of this will be in the form of economic aid and the remaining $400 million will be military aid. Ozal noted that an extension of $50 million of the $400 million military aid as a grant has been requested. Meanwhile, Ozal explained that an additional loan of $95 million was secured from the U.S. Exim bank and that this loan could be operational within 2 months.

During his contacts in Washington yesterday, Ozal met with the presidents of the IMF and the World Bank and U.S. leaders. In a statement at the end of these meetings, Ozal noted that he briefed the administrators of the international financial organizations on the development of the economic stability program and that these organizations were very satisfied with the course of the economic situation in Turkey. The deputy prime minister also said that the project loans extended to Turkey by the World Bank are expected to exceed $700 million next year.

Yesterday, Ozal also met with U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig, U.S. Secretary of the Treasury Donald Regan and U.S. Under Secretary of State Walter Stoessel.

Press Conference

TA202041 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 20 Feb 81

[Text] State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal has said that Turkey will need about $1.5 billion in foreign aid next year. Our correspondent in Washington, Berna Kulac, reports that Ozal held a news conference there at the end of his contacts, stating that there was progress in Turkey since the economic stability program began to be implemented a year ago. He said that the rate of inflation had dropped, productivity had increased, workers' remittances had doubled and black marketing had been prevented. In spite of that, Ozal said, Turkey will need about $1.5 billion in foreign aid next year.

Ozal said that this sum could easily be obtained from establishments such as the World Bank, the IMF and OECD. He stressed that he did not think there would be any problems in that respect. The deputy prime minister pointed out that the U.S. administration proposed to extend about $700 million of foreign aid to Turkey in fiscal 1982.

Replying to a question, Ozal said Turkey had not received any proposals to assume a role in the protection of the security of the Persian Gulf. To another question, Ozal replied that Turkey had friendly relations with the Soviet Union and that the two countries cooperated in the fields of technology and industry. Turgut Ozal then met U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

FOREIGN MINISTRY REACTION TO AVEROF'S REMARKS

[Text] Foreign Ministry spokesman Ambassador Oktay Iscen has pointed out that by signing international agreements Greece has assumed certain undertakings and that it cannot free itself of them by means of statements or speeches.

Replying to a question in the Greek Parliament 2 days ago, Greek Defense Minister Averof had said that Greece is not considering the demilitarization of the islands close to Turkey in the Aegean Sea. In his weekly news conference in Ankara today, Ambassador Iscen replied to journalists' questions on Averof's remarks. Ambassador Iscen said: It is impossible to free oneself of obligations stipulated by treaties through statements or speeches. We do not feel it is necessary to comment on this issue.

[Statement by the VI Army Corps and Adana, Icel, Kahramanmaras, Gaziantep, Adiyaman and Hatay Martial Law Command Press and Public Relations Office]

[Text] Those mayors in the VI Corps Army and Martial Law Command Region who resigned from their parties and remained in office after 12 September 1980 have now been removed from office in line with paragraph 2 of martial law act 1,402 in order to ensure the proper investigation of the complaints filed to the command, to ensure fully impartial work in line with the decisions of the new administration and to give a momentum to the municipal services. The governors of the Icel and Hatay Provinces will carry out the mayoral duties of the Mersin and Antakya cities, respectively. The proposals made for the replacement of the other mayors have been found appropriate and the relevant appointments will be made by the concerned governors.

SECURITY COUNCIL ENACTS DUAL CITIZENSHIP LAW

NC201359 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 17 Feb 81 p 3

[Editorial by Oktay Eksi: "Dual Citizenship"]

[Excerpt] A long-awaited law has been enacted by the National Security Council. According to the text on hand, this is very goods news for over a million of our fellow countrymen living abroad and for their relatives.

Now, if fellow Turkish countrymen abroad can maintain their ties with their motherland by calling at a Turkish Consulate General at least once every 7 years and say 'hello', or express this desire by dropping a few lines to the consulate general, they will be entitled to the citizenship of both of their own country and of the country they live in, and they will be able to possess dual passports.

This provision of the law is extremely useful in that it responds to contemporary needs and helps our sons, whom we have been losing to other countries over the years in the form of a brain drain, to preserve their ties with their motherland. Let us stress the fact that it particularly important that this law, which looks at the right of citizenship from such a liberal angle, be enacted by the military administration.

SPOKESMAN, SCHMIDT REACT TO BREZHNEV SPEECH

[Excerpts] Bonn, 23 Feb (DPA)--The Federal German Government welcomes the Soviet Union's readiness to continue the dialogue on reducing strategic nuclear weapons with the United States and the idea of a summit meeting between the two superpowers but rejects the freezing of medium-range weapons because of the existing Soviet superiority. Government spokesman Kurt Becker today gave journalists this initial wary reaction to the speech by state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev at the CPSU congress. Becker said that Brezhnev's speech, regarded as"moderate," is presently being examined carefully. Therefore, comment by Bonn could only be an initial wary reaction.

Becker said that the Federal Government notes with interest Brezhnev's remarks on creating a zone for confidence-building measures. The willingness, indicated by Brezhnev, to include the European part of the USSR approached the French proposal for confidence-building measures from the Atlantic to the Urals. Brezhnev's proposal for extending the Western area is not yet quite clear.

Referring to the proposal for a moratorium on medium-range weapons, Becker said that Bonn rejected this idea in 1979 because of the then Soviet superiority. This superiority today has become even greater because the West has no comparable weapon to match the Soviet SS-20 missile.

Chancellor's Comments

[Text] Bonn, 23 Feb (DPA)--In the view of Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Brezhnev's proposals on arms limitation require careful examination with regard to their substance, but also with regard to the conditions Brezhnev indicated for his suggestions. Schmidt told the SPD executive that this applies to the readiness Brezhnev expressed to extend confidence-building measures in the military field to the entire European area of the Soviet Union, and in particular to the proposal of a moratorium on stationing medium-range weapons in Europe. The chancellor said that the basis of every contractual regulation has to be the objective of equilibrium.

The FDP lower house parliamentary group's spokesman on security policy, Juergen Moellemann, called on the Soviet Union to follow up Brezhnev's words with deeds The USSR should put the seriousness of the proposals to the test by stopping "the immense advance arming in the field of medium-range weapons" and not stationing two more SS-20 missiles every week. A pure moratorium (a freeze at the present level) would establish Soviet superiority for a long time, Moellmann said. What matters is military balance at a low arms level. Negotiations on this topic must begin as quickly as possible.

The chancellor described Brezhnev's suggestion for a moratorium as response to his, Schmidt's, proposal made early last year that East and West should agree to refrain for a period from installing additional medium-range nuclear missiles. The chancellor, according to reports, did, however, add in the executive meeting that when evaluating Brezhnev's suggestion, it must be borne in mind that the Soviet Union has in the meantime continued its arms drive in this field.

DER SPIEGEL INTERVIEWS SCHMIDT ON SPD, SALT

DW231425 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 23 Feb 81 pp 24-29

[Rudolph Augstein, Dirk Koch and Erich Boehme undated interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at the chancellor's office in Bonn]

[Text] SPIEGEL: A few months ago, Mr Chancellor, you scored an impressive election victory, you personally, even perhaps, primarily you. And yet, voices can be found which do not hold any a priori animosity toward you even though they make comparisons with the Erhard era after the latter's election victory, despite the fact that he governed for some time without being attacked. How do you explain this development?

Schmidt: This is almost habitual for the Social Democratic Party. We saw this twice in the seventies, after the 1972 elections and after the 1976 elections. What's occurring now after the 1980 elections likewise should not be overrated.

SPIEGEL: How do you feel about this statement: "Never before after a government statement, not even after that given by Ludwig Erhard in the fall of 1965, did such a climate of intellectual barrenness spread as it has after the government statement of 24 November 1980"--written by Erhard Eppler in his new book.

Schmidt: Nothing.

SPIEGEL: Eppler is a member of the Presidium of your party.

Schmidt: This is why I gave him a piece of my mind within the framework of the institutions of my party. I have no intention of doing so in this interview.

SPIEGEL: How come the chairman of the SPD Bundestag faction again speaks in an interview about the danger of a partition of the Social Democrats just a few days after the party Executive Board in its 5-point statement expressly rules out any tendencies toward a split?

Schmidt: Mr Wehner is man enough to explain himself what is bothering him. It cannot be my job to interpret Herbet Wehner. You will not induce me to make any remarks about my fellow party members, be their names Wehner or Eppler.

SPIEGEL: Presidium member Helmut Schmidt, for example, comments on the decision of two SPD party congresses to keep an option open on the question of pulling out of the nuclear energy program: "If such a decision came up for discussion again today--in the meantime the second oil price explosion has happened--one must keep in mind that I would tell the party congress: This does not seem very realistic to me to plan on taking such an option." This was a few days after party Deputy Chairman Helmut Schmidt by his vote on the 5-point statement indeed upheld that option, an option through which the SPD had intended to make its internal party peace.

Schmidt: What matters is not making peace with the help of verbal compromise. In politics, it is necessary to retain one's own judgment independently of the opinion of others. My power of judgment has made me say that I consider implementing the option of making do without nuclear power to be highly improbable. This is quite justified, and I believe that not many people in Germany could justify through their expertise that, conversely, the implementation of this option is particularly probable.

SPIEGEL: Is this the result of a thought process that took place within yourself or did you know it already at the time?

Schmidt: No, this was neither a thought process nor did I know it then. The fact is that the situation has changed. We have had in the world in the meantime a second oil price explosion. At the time, in December 1979, it could not be foreseen.

SPIEGEL: The explosion came before the Executive Board decision a few days back in which the SPD expressly upheld its party congress decisions of Berlin and Hamburg.

Schmidt: During the meetings in which this paper was adopted, I pointed out my opinion, the one you just quoted. It is not my view that the decisions of SPD party congresses or of the SPD Executive Board can replace the decisions of the Federal Government or of the Bundestag.

SPIEGEL: Are you seeking a revision of the Berlin party congress decision...

Schmidt: No, I do not think that this is necessary at this time. After all, I did not say that the decision ought to be retracted. What I said was that the implementation of this option is highly improbable. This is no reason to object to the fact that some people keep aspiring to this option. Why should I have it retracted anyway? Tell me, why should I wish to have it replaced?

SPIEGEL: We confront you with the quotations because elections will be held in Berlin on 10 May, for example, and because the Social Democratic Party has indicated that it has some stakes in the game. At the same time, however, it presents itself to the voter in a highly discordant state: a split, for example, into a northern SPD led by Hamburg Mayor Klose, a western and a southern SPD led by the chancellor which has decidely come out for nuclear power; an SPD which one of its leaders still considers prone to a split. What would you do as a voter in Berlin if a party presented itself to you which was so torn by its predications?

Schmidt: As a Berliner, I would, of course, vote for Hans-Jochen Vogel and the Berlin SPD. It is a wrong use of designations to speak of a northern SPD and a western and southern SPD. This may seem that way to you. All three designations are wrong. What is likewise wrong is the idea that the northern SPD rejects nuclear power on principle.

This does not hold true for the SPD of Schleswig-Holstein, which has reconciled itself internally to the nuclear powerplants at Brunsbuettel and Kruemmel. This does not hold true if you take a look at the SPD of Schleswig-Holstein and Hamburg together. In the Hamburg SPD, a strong minority, a very strong minority, was in favor of the construction of the Brokdorf nuclear power station. In both laender, Schleswig-Holstein and Hamburg, strong majorities in the trade unions advocated it, and they are Social Democrats as well. Emden and Bremen are also part of northern Germany, as are Hannover, Goettingen and the like. So I think wanting to throw the northern German SPD all into one pot seems to me to be rather arbitrary. It is just as arbitrary to lump the west German or south German SPD together in another pot.

SPIEGEL: What matters on the issue of nuclear power is not primarily economic problems, at least they should not matter, but the question of whether the whole complex has been adequately worked out to implement such giant projects. Do such large-scale projects, such as the construction of the Tornado as well, simply go beyond the decisionmaking capacity because the consequences of a decision, once made, cannot be foreseeable?

Schmidt: Well, the last passage is wrong. There is no such thing as a decision once made which keeps having its effect for years and decades; after all, decisions are made in sequence in the course of time and add up. But otherwise your question is properly posed. The beginning of the project that lately has been called Tornado, an airplane jointly developed and produced by Italians, Britons and Germans, dates back to the sixties, to the time when Gerhard Schroeder was defense minister. After him, two other defense ministers, namely Schmidt and Leber, had to deal with the project and most recently Apel. Each of the persons named made decisions one after the other and under each of the four gentlemen listed, decisions were made that added up in this respect. It is the same story as that of the reconstruction of the German steel industry or with the restoration of the German big cities or the restoration and enlargement of the network of German autobahns and highways after the war. Some time you reach the point where a person says: We must tackle this, we must get this started. But this does not prejudice the decision 10 or 20 years later...

SPIEGEL: Isn't there a qualitative difference?

Schmidt: No, not on principle. What this involves on principle is important complexes. These are complexes, accumulations, which entail giant investments. If you arrive at the finding, as you asked, that politicians would be overtasked in this regard, the question then would be: To whom will you hand it then? To the church or the private economy? Obviously, it has to stay with the governments. But one of the consequences that might be drawn from such surprises would be that complicated instruments would have to be added to the normal laws such as the reich budget order. In our country, a budget law is valid for 1 year only and this project, as I told you, has been going on...

SPIEGEL: ...over several legislative periods.

Schmidt: ...over at least a decade and a half. But each budget law is valid only for 1 year. From this gap between the annual character of the budget law and the temporal extent of such a development procedure alone emerges the need for reconsideration. There is no call whatsoever to restrict the criticism to the term of the incumbent defense minister. On my part I will see my task as supporting this good defense minister with words and for all to see and as defending him.

SPIEGEL: Do these large-scale technical projects such as the Tornado and the giant technical nuclear powerplants in Germany not belong to the very chapter which you have practically designated as the "ungovernability of the world?"

Schmidt: I have never used the word "ungovernability of the world," much less with respect to such big technical projects. What is appropriate rather is that not only governments but also large companies also discontinue or alter at various stages of completion many projects which they begin. This goes without saying. An enterprise that actually went through with every project that it ever worked out would be a very poorly managed company, for this would mean that it would be incapable of drawing any conclusions from experiences gathered in the meantime. The same is true for governments.

SPIEGEL: What you stress is that politicians and businessmen must be prepared to learn and if necessary to alter a project or drop out of it. Would this mean in the case of Chancellor Schmidt that he, too, must be ready to learn to drop out of nuclear energy if and when the risk some day seems to him to be too great if and when the costs begin to run away from him?

Schmidt: Absolutely.

SPIEGEL: Or if waste disposal were to turn into a technical problem defying solution?

Schmidt: The answer generally is yes. But I have added already that I deem this highly improbable, at this time.

SPIEGEL: An ambivalent Schmidt. One part represents the active politician who says: Who else should do it? Then there is the philosopher Schmidt who says: All this will grow to be so difficult that, were I not an active politician, I would not know where to go from here either.

Schmidt: No, this ambivalence does not apply to me, but I do know politicians who would prefer to be philosophers rather than bear the responsibility for something like this.

SPIEGEL: There is near certainty in the Bonn union opposition already that your government, in keeping with the word of Sonthofen, is in a hopeless situation, that the situation will worsen through unemployment, inflation, arms race to a point where your government prematurely end. How do you feel about that?

Schmidt: These are the pipedreams of Mr Kohl, and not only his but also those of some others. Since election day, the opposition has not said in the Bundestag what it would do any differently in any field. It makes do without explaining its own political substance, and its dreams will not come true.

SPIEGEL: The opposition makes do without alternatives because it believes it is pretty close to its goal. It is of the view that the government coalition has been worn down to a point where it can no longer solve the problems which we will be facing in the course of this year and, therefore, will leave these problems to the opposition without putting up a struggle.

Schmidt: The opposition does not have any alternative concepts, otherwise it would come out and present them. The opposition will have no choice but to admit that what we are doing is by and large correct.

SPIEGEL: Following the crisis in Berlin and after the initial eruptions over nuclear power, it is security policy now which moves into the foreground. You will be traveling this spring to the United States for the purpose of laying the groundwork jointly with President Reagan for an "overall Western concept," as you said in the Bundestag. Worried voices have been heard in the United States for quite some time. They say that strong forces exist in the party of the German chancellor which oppose the course of the new U.S. Government. Do you, too, see the need for strengthening first the basis of confidence between Washington and Bonn?

Schmidt: At the moment, it is still impossible to determine clearly in many fields the foreign policy course of the Reagan administration. This is why it is premature to form a judgment on all these fields, and it would be much more premature to talk about achieving agreement on different viewpoints and approaches. I believe that the Reagan administration will first of all tackle decision on economic issues as the most important matter. You cannot already derive from his speech what the upshot of it will be; for that, you will have to wait for congressional reaction in Washington. To the astonishment of some German newspaper writers, perhaps it is true in the United States, too, that there is a parliament which does not always nor from the outset fully agree with what the executive branch says and with which rests the ultimate verdict.

SPIEGEL: When you, Mr Chancellor, speak of "newspaper writers," it is similar to our previously having written about "functionaries." This always has such a demeaning sound to it.

Just recently you said that part of the German media pretends that the Russians want to negotiate whereas the Americans do not but that the facts are exactly the other way around, at any rate during the past 15 months. This makes us ask you: Who is it that does not want to put SALT II into effect? After all, it is the United States.

Schmidt: I am here neither as an attorney for the defense of the Americans nor as a prosecutor against the Russians. The governments ought to speak for themselves. What I meant with the passage that you quoted was the fact that the North Atlantic partners, including the United States, in December 1979 offered negotiations on the limitation of Eurostrategic weapons. The Americans have made this in due form bilaterally toward the Soviet Union, too, of course.

By late June and early July, the Soviet Union had cold-shouldered this offer, having declared its receptiveness to such negotiations only in early July, during my Moscow visit, that is, well over half a year later. The negotiations commenced last fall. I assume that they will be continued in a second round in 1981. I have no indication whatever that either world power intends to dodge this.

SPIEGEL: Has the relationship of the two great powers with each other, and of the two great powers with Europe, changed?

Schmidt: I do not think that anything will change quickly. I assume that U.S. foreign policy will possibly have to be made in a different style and in a different tone toward the Soviet Union, but that U.S. foreign policy will adhere to the principle of stabilizing the military balance, on the one hand, and to the readiness to come to terms with the other world power on controversial issues rather than shoot, on the other. I believe it will take some time before the world public comprehends this. The Soviet leadership probably is more sure of itself in this expectation than many a European editorial writer.

SPIEGEL: So you stick to the principle that NATO's dual decision of deploying new U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe after 1983 while simultaneously negotiating until then on a balance of the medium-range armaments is realistic?

Schmidt: The so-called dual decision of December 1979 is veritably exemplary for the overall philosophy which took my federal government to Helsinki: On the one hand, the firm will to remain capable of defense militarily and, on the other hand, relying on the military balance thus preserved, the equally serious will for cooperation with the Soviet Union.

SPIEGEL: And you think this can be sustained until 1983?

Schmidt: There are no deadlines. There are no agreed schedules either in the West or between West and East. You should not overdo the matter of the deadlines.

SPIEGEL: Do you believe that the Soviet Union has abandoned thinking along the lines of balance?

Schmidt: I consider it a grave mistake that the Soviet leadership permitted itself in matters of medium-range arms to deviate from the idea of parity and balance. That is a grave mistake of Soviet policy, namely, that it permitted itself to deviate from the idea of equal security for all through its actions.

I have no doubts at all that it is necessary to use figures to make it clear to our own people and to the West European public that the Soviet armament has achieved a lead miles long in some military fields, that it has upset the balance and that it is about to endanger it seriously and in a basic way. In these fields, the balance must be re-established, either by scrapping of arms by the Russians, or by scrapping a part and allowing the other side to build some. Developments involving the SS-20 missiles and the Backfire bombers in the past 3 years cannot be accepted for another 3 years, if we West European countries want to remain politically independent of the will of the Soviet leadership.

SPIEGEL: Do you consider it possible that within the 3 years NATO has left up to the implementation of the counterarmament decision the imbalance involving the SS-20 and the Backfire bomber will have become so great that the possibility of negotiations will have been spoiled?

Schmidt: That is a hypothetical question and is unpleasant because of its hypothetical character. I cannot answer it in the affirmative. But I must say that along with the further increase in the Soviet preponderance, the likelihood of bilateral limitation on the same level naturally will not increase but much rather sink.

SPIEGEL: According to recent intelligence reports, the number of annual SS-20 missile deployments will increase from the present 50 with 150 warheads to 80 with 240 warheads...

Schmidt: Yes, I have heard that also.

SPIEGEL: Do you still deem a successful conclusion of negotiations possible?

Schmidt: I said that the likelihood does not increase. I cannot say more about that.

SPIEGEL: Critics of nuclear armament say that sufficient destruction capacity is stored in Europe with its 7,000 nuclear warheads. Why have new arms? The new NATO missiles, which for the first time would permit firing on Soviet territory from the territory of the Federal Republic, would have the advantage for the Americans that an exchange of nuclear strikes could be limited to Europe, sparing the American homeland. Do you take such critics seriously?

Schmidt: Naturally, they must be taken seriously. But these critical remarks have not come up for the first time. I dealt with them some 2, 3, 4 or 5 years ago when I began studying the problem. That is offset by the fact that the Soviet Union builds and deploys more and more SS-20 missiles and Backfire bombers ready for action, which cannot at all be aimed at America because of their limited range, but only at European states, such as the Federal Republic of Germany among others. I do not believe that they will be used tomorrow, but I believe that the day after tomorrow they can be used for political pressure. That is my real concern.

SPIEGEL: Don't you consider it a serious argument by the Soviet Union that Pershing II missiles and cruise missiles fired from European territory can hit the Soviet motherland for the first time, with cruise missiles possibly even hitting Moscow, without triggering anything intercontinental?

Schmidt: That is an argument worth hearing. The phrase "for the first time" is wrong. There were some Western systems which were removed after the Cuban missile crisis, systems which could reach from West Europe to the Soviet Union. There is no need for the Soviet Union to expose itself to this if it abandoned its own medium-range missile armament. The Soviet Union has asked for this matter, I believe, without correctly figuring out the final consequences.

SPIEGEL: Did you expect a revival of the neutron bomb discussion?

Schmidt: As we have read in an interview by the U.S. secretary of defense, a private opinion was involved and not the opinion of the American administration or the American President. I do not consider it desirable at the moment for the federal chancellor to give his private opinion.

SPIEGEL: You consider it the private opinion of Mr Weinberger?

Schmidt: That is what I said.

SPIEGEL: You said in the Bundestag that you agree with Haig that "our defense system has been geographically definitely defined." But you also said that our security interests as a whole were not definitely defined geographically.

Schmidt: Correct.

SPIEGEL: The Persian Gulf, for example.

Schmidt: We are interested in oil from the Persian Gulf, for example. We are interested, for example, in the safety of Germans in Namibia.

SPIEGEL: Any consequences from this insight?

Schmidt: I do not want to draw them at the moment, at any rate, not the consequence to expand the geographic definition of the North Atlantic treaty. One need not have treaties everywhere one has interests, nor assistance pacts.

SPIEGEL: In the Bundestag, you have mentioned in this connection security policy categories of cooperation with Saudi Arabia which we Germans must take into consideration. What might the security policy categories look like with regard to cooperation with Saudi Arabia where we have vital interests to look after?

Schmidt: You may have noted in the speech that I tried very carefully not to commit the Federal Government in any way. What I would not do vis-a-vis the Bundestag, I will do even less vis-a-vis DER SPIEGEL. All that must be discussed with our own allies and friends. It must be discussed with our friends in the region, such as the Saudis, the Egyptians, the Israelis and others.

I will visit Saudi Arabia this spring. All these talks and contacts will result in components, in parts of a great mosaic which should not be put or glued together in an overly hasty way.

I was concerned about one thing in the Bundestag debate, namely, to point out to parliament and the German public the great role Saudi Arabia will play in the future for Europe and for us Germans, not merely as the most important oil supplier, but also one of the biggest world creditors.

SPIEGEL: What do we have to offer to Saudi Arabia, the country to which you will have to declare in your forthcoming visit that it cannot expect German tank supplies, while having to ask it in view of the deutsche mark's exchange rate to be most careful with the enormous DM deposits the Saudis have?

Schmidt: We have enormous industrial and technical offerings, naturally. Very major private economic and industrial activities are going on in Saudi Arabia. I cannot share the currency policy worries you indicated. There is no reason at all to paint such pictures on the wall.

SPIEGEL: Will there be exports of Leopard II tanks?

Schmidt: The arms export problem is still far away. I see no reason why I ought to pretend in this interview that a decision must be made tomorrow or that it has already been made. Also, the Saudis will obtain arms from the Americans, planes from the British and if they want to, from the French. I know Western governments which would like to deliver as many arms as possible to Saudi Arabia. It would include the problem of training Saudi soldiers. But the Saudis seek cooperation in Europe not only with England and France, but also with Germany.

SPIEGEL: Did the Saudis misunderstand you? You had a visitor from Saudi Arabia last year and the visitor articulated his hopes that the Federal Government would soon supply Saudi Arabia with Leopard tanks.

Schmidt: I do not believe that the Saudi Government has articulated anything like that.

SPIEGEL: Recent reports from Riyadh indicate that the Saudi Government will make the coming about of a planned cooperation agreement on the construction of installations by German firms and an oil supply guarantee covering 40 percent of the German demand depend on the supply of 300 Leopard II tanks, 1,500 Maurder armored personnel carriers and Gepard antiaircraft tanks. What do you think of this linkage?

Schmidt: I think this is a journalistic speculation.

SPIEGEL: What do you think of the American resistance against the large German-Soviet deal: Pipes for participation in the exploration of the Siberian natural gas resources? Will you in any case support a positive conclusion of the deal?

Schmidt: The German industrial firms and banks negotiating with the Soviet side on an exchange of natural gas for pipes--putting it roughly--have not done so without backing by the Federal Government. Please conclude the basic approach of the Federal Government from this.

SPIEGEL: What possibilities do you see for bringing the growing unemployment rate under control?

Schmidt: Since one must realize that growing unemployment is not a German phenomenon, but a West European and North American one, it is most likely that isolated action of one single government will have no success at all, but that one must hope that the states will act together.

No patent recipe can be given in the current situation for common action of the states. There is no patent recipe against the effects of an oil price explosion as has taken place in the past 15 months with the consequence that the vast majority of all states are in a deep balance of payments deficit.

Regarding us Germans, it can be assumed that an increase of our competitiveness will help us to close our balance of payments gap in the coming years, that our exports will increase and together with these exports employment in this field will increase and thus improve employment as a whole. This expectation is supported by the enormous rise of the currencies of the two Western oil countries, namely the American dollar and the British pound, vis-a-vis the deutsche mark. Compared with the dollar and the pound, the deutsche mark has been devalued, which will certainly bring positive influence to bear on the competitiveness of our exports and thus on our employment situation in the export field.

SPIEGEL: Do you regret in this connection that the means for the promotion of further economic programs are very limited and that the federal bank at present is much more interested in stability, keeping the interest rate high instead of decreasing it?

Schmidt: The federal chancellor cannot become involved in a public discussion of the federal bank's policy. Basically, I just want to say that I have great understanding for the dilemmas of the federal bank in view of the high interest rate policies in the United States and England.

SPIEGEL: If the high unemployment figures are not a German phenomenon, can one not at least expect the government chiefs and presidents of the leading Western countries who have to handle an enormous foreign trade gap, to get together and form a common economic policy, something which does not seem to be taking place at the moment?

Schmidt: One can expect and demand that from them. But one must give them some time. More exactly, one must give the new American Government time to learn about its problems. Thereafter, one can expect it from the Western governments and they will certainly try to live up to these expectations in the course of the spring and summer.

In addition, one can expect and demand from the governments that they reach agreements with the governments of oil-exporting states. That brings us back again to the necessity of having friendly relations with the biggest oil exporter of the whole world, namely, Saudi Arabia.

SPIEGEL: Do you have in mind a repeat of the Guadeloupe meeting?

Schmidt: No, I have in mind a world economic summit to take place in July.

SPIEGEL: Mr. Federal Chancellor, will you again run as candidate for the office of deputy SPD chairman?

Schmidt: I have not at all thought about that problem. I see no reason to have any changes in the personnel structure of the Social Democratic Parry top echelon.

SPIEGEL: It seems absolutely clear that nobody in the entire government would or wants to contest your job as government chief...

Schmidt: Actually, that is a pity, isn't it?

SPIEGEL: But there are people who ask themselves what would happen if Helmut Schmidt did not or could not do it any more. Isn't it depressing for you to know that after Vogel's departure for Berlin, there's no man behind you who could keep the whole coalition together?

Schmidt: First, it is not correct that everything depends on just two eyes. Second, regarding the uneasiness, I remember that there were chancellors who disliked it if somebody who might want to take their chair stood behind them.

SPIEGEL: But that is not your position.

Schmidt: That is not my position and I do not feel uneasy. Everybody must do his duty here, trying to do it as well as he can. The rest is just fuss.

SPIEGEL: Is your health all right, Mr Federal Chancellor?

Schmidt: My health is better than that of the average 62-year-old.

SPIEGEL: Who are the strong Social Democrats behind you, who could take over future leadership tasks?

Schmidt: The expression "behind me" indicates a rank which I would not like to accept.

SPIEGEL: Could you give some names?

Schmidt: I do not intend to have a personnel debate.

SPIEGEL: You were not that shy before when you named Mr Matthoefer, Mr Apel, Mr Vogel or Mr Wischnewski as successors.

Schmidt: You have an example here of my ability to learn. I have noted that it does not make sense to give names because these people are then only cirticized and discussed by the press. I believe that the names I gave at that time have not lost anything of their weight in the time that has passed. Moreover, these are such hypothetical questions. You would like to see me hypothetically in the Ohlsdorf cemetery in order to find out who should replace...

SPIEGEL: ...truly not. You could also take a walk in Sachsenwald. We thank you for this interview.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON DETENTE POLICY PROBLEMS

DW231349 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1210 GMT 21 Feb 81

[Reporter Guendler interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher--date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Foreign policy and security policy have been almost a patent means for holding coalition partners SPD and FDP together. In the meantime, however, it looks as if some estrangement between the liberals and the Social Democrats is in the offing in this field. Is it because detente policy has gotten itself into a crisis?

[Answer] No! First of all, one cannot say that detente policy has gotten itself into a crisis, but we are facing a worldwide expansionist policy of the Soviet Union and an enormous armament policy of the Soviet Union. We face this with our realistic security policy aimed at doing what is necessary for our own security, while simultaneously making an attempt to limit armament through negotiations. We want to have a balance in any case, that is the prerequisite for our security. If it were up to us, the balance would take place on as low an armament level as possible.

The fact that this realistic security policy by the Federal Government is broadly supported by the opposition is actually new for the Federal Republic. Previously, foreign policy was a subject of disputes between the government parties and the opposition.

[Question] Does agreement exist in the Federal Government and between the coalition parties in the assessment of Soviet policy, or are you and the federal chancellor much more skeptical with regard to Moscow's intentions than other coalition partners, particularly the left wing of the SPD?

[Answer] You have rightly stated that the federal chancellor and I view Soviet policy with considerable concern. I cannot expect every deputy of the government coalition to assess the matter in a fully identical way. The recent decisions of the Party Executive Board and the SPD Bundestag faction have shown that the party leadership as well as the SPD Bundestag faction back the Federal Government's security policy.

[Question] Can one say after the special session of the SPD Bundestag faction that NATO's dual decision to safeguard the balance in nuclear mass annihilation arms of medium range has become a secured part of Bonn's government policy?

[Answer] It has not become that, it always was. It has been confirmed once more, and that was correct and necessary. The Soviet armament lead represents a considerable threat to Western Europe, and not only to West Europe but also to North America, the Near and the Middle East, Pakistan, India, the People's Republic of China, the ASEAN states and Japan. Our counterarming decision is nothing but the attempt to safeguard the balance. Linking it with the offer to negotiate stresses once more our security philosophy which does not want an arms race, something which unfortunately is being initiated by the Soviet Union's armament lead. Our philosophy wants to avoid an arms race through arms limitation. Soviet preponderance will simply not be accepted because Soviet preponderance would very quickly result in the political submission of the West. That cannot be the intention of a foreign and security policy aimed at peace and freedom.

[Question] Do you still believe the Soviet Union will be impressed by this dual decision and that it will eventually accept negotiations?

[Answer] If the Soviet Union fails to agree to negotiations, this would constitute a dangerous attitude indicating that it wants an arms race. I believe, therefore, that it is important for the Soviet leadership to recognize, expecially in these days prior to the party congress, that it has arrived at a crossroads in its foreign and security policies. It is confronted with the question of whether it wishes to continue its gigantic arms program which threatens the security and stability of the world--which would evoke the danger of a large-scale arms race--or whether it wishes arms limitation and arms control as we do. It is facing the decision of either wishing to continue its expansive policy as expressed by the inhuman intervention in Afghanistan or seeking cooperation with us. It is my view that this is not just in the interest of the West, not just in the interest of the developing countries which urgently need help to overcome famine and distress, disease and ignorance, but also in the interest of the Soviet Union itself if it decides in favor of cooperating with the West and in favor of negotiations on arms control and arms limitation.

[Question] This week Lawrence Eagleburger made two stopovers in Bonn. Did he urge the Federal Government to join the American view that the rebellion in Nicaragua [as heard] is being steered and partly financed by Moscow?

[Answer] There is too much being read into Eagleburger's visit. The real reason for this tour of Europe is the serious will of the new U.S. Government to enter into a continuous process of consultations with its European allies for the purpose of attaining a joint opinion-forming process as well. This is why these talks were so extremely important and useful to us, because they provided an opportunity for an exchange of opinions which involved developments in central Europe [as heard] but which on the whole also dealt with the relationship of the Western democracies with the states of the Third World and the movement of the nonaligned states.

I was very satisfied at finding at the end of our talks that it is our common objective to contribute toward the strengthening of the independence and sovereignty of the states of the Third World.

[Question] But does this not cover up a conflict? The public statements by Secretary of State Haig, after all, divulge that it is Washington's inclination to look for the Soviets behind any difficulties the West may encounter in the Third World. Actually this has made a joint Western development policy impossible, has it not?

[Answer] I failed to recognize such statements which see the Soviets behind the developments in the Third World. It is, however, uncontested also in our country that the Soviet Union attempts to subject the states of the Third World to its control through its policy of expanding its influence. I believe that the Soviet Union must carefully ponder the question of whether or not it is in its own interest to aggravate the peaceful solution of serious social problems undoubtedly existing in the Third World through arms deliveries to the various hotbeds of conflict in the Third World.

[Question] Do you consider the widely discussed cooperation offer of Saudi Arabia, in which the delivery of German tanks and other war materiel plays a role, an option for Bonn to take a hand in the stabilization of the situation in the Persian Gulf and in the defusing of the Middle East conflict?

[Answer] To begin with, I would separate the Middle East conflict from the threat by the Soviet Union to which the Gulf region finds itself exposed after the intervention in Afghanistan. We need to discuss in great prudence the question concerning our arms exports. But as I have already done in the Bundestag, I would like to make it absolutely clear at this opportunity that it is my conviction indeed that German restraint in questions concerning arms exports has proved its worth and that, therefore, nothing should be changed in this principle. What alone matters is the question of whether the criteria hitherto applied are still compatible with the conditions of our times.

DPA VIEWS POSSIBLE 'TRANSATLANTIC DISPUTE'

[By DPA correspondent Friedrich Kuhn]

[Text] Munich, 22 Feb (DPA)--Shortly after the advent of the Reagan administration, a new transatlantic dispute between the United States and its European allies appears to be preprogrammed. At the international defense seminar in Munich, the European partners noted the renewed sharp transatlantic blast with some surprise. The West Europeans regarded the performance of Frank Carlucci, the Pentagon's first emissary since the Republic administration took office, as "a bit of a bluster." After pointing out the enormous priority Ronald Reagan attaches to defense matters, Carlucci demanded a categoric increase in the European defense contributions. In the view of observers, he showed a distinct lack of understanding for the European situation.

A German defense expert put it like this: "If the new American Government repeats the mistake of wishing to dictate, we may see some fun and games." The United States could not treat its NATO colleagues "like a fighter plane that is simply being turned around," it was said. The growing pressure on West Europe is shown by the remark of a U.S. senator who bluntly said that the American people would withdraw its military presence from Europe unless the West Europeans raised their defense potential forthwith. "It looks as if the Europeans are to kow tow at America's bidding," one deputy said. He asked whether the United States really imagined that Europe is America's 51st state.

A German military expert delicately reminded U.S. senators in Munich that the Europeans were "complicated allies." Another speaker concurred, and stressed that the Reagan administration evidently did not know how to handle its European allies. There was talk in Munich of renewed "major friction" in the Atlantic alliance. An American speaker called on the Europeans to stop their "endless debates" about arms modernization.

The new medium-range missiles must be deployed first, he said. Only then should one negotiate with the Soviets. The Federal Government wishes to do the very opposite. A Bonn deputy exhorted Washington not to interfere too much in European affairs. After the unfortunate manner in which the new U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger recently rushed into the neutron bomb issue, German defense experts say: "If the Americans keep squeezing the tube in such a one-sided manner, a big new crunch between Europe and the United States may well be inevitable."

MINISTER OF STATE COMMENTS ON EAGLEBURGER VISIT

DW231205 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2105 GMT 20 Feb 81

[Excerpts from correspondent Schweizer interview with Klaus von Dohnanyi, minister of state in the Foreign Ministry, in Bonn; date not given--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] The communist danger in El Salvador was exactly the point to which the representative of the U.S. Government intended to draw attention. Did he convince you?

[Answer] There was no difference of opinion in the finding that the cause of the tragedy in El Salvador is to be found in the history of Central America, in the history of conquest, subjugation and exploitation. It is a different question whether some other factors must be added today; but the cause is to be found in history. What now matters is to support the reformers. It is necessary to make the funds available that will allow these reforms.

[Question] Where are the reformers?

[Answer] Surely they are on all sides. Quite definitely they are among the opposition.

[Question] Why has the humanitarian aid of the European Community been postponed following the visit by Mr Eagleburger? Did the United States exert pressure?

[Answer] No, pressure was not brought to bear. What was and is important is to ensure that the aid we are willing to extend, and which we will extend, will be granted through the proper channels. This is what we discussed once again.

[Question] It is the principle of social-liberal foreign policy that any country of the Third World is entitled to sovereignty and independence. The United States, in contrast, has now declared Central and South America its zone of influence and interest. Can German social-liberal foreign policy go along with that sort of thing?

[Answer] Beyond any doubt our policy--and if I properly understand the dialogue with our American colleague today the U.S. policy as well--is aimed at ensuring the independence of the countries of the Third World and at basing this independence on freedom in these countries. In many cases the road toward attaining this objective is long. It is particularly hard to travel in El Salvador.

[Question] You refer to the independence of the Third World. Could this also mean independence from the United States?

[Answer] Why certainly! Independence and nonalignment mean, above all, freedom from any outside interference. It is a foregone conclusion that it also means independence from the United States and independence from the West. But in this respect we trust in cooperation in peace.

LE MONDE ON EUROPE'S EXPECTATIONS FOR U.S. POLICY

[Editorial: "Francois-Poncet in Washington"]

[Text] The procession of European ministers visiting Washington is part of the American ritual of transferring power. On Monday, Francois-Poncet will follow in his Italian counterpart Colombo's footsteps and his visit will be closely followed by that of Mrs Thatcher (owing to special relations it is the British Prime Minister who will cross the Atlantic), then West German Foreign Minister Genscher.

Europeans expect from any new White House team both greater security and a more open approach--and these are sometimes conflicting expectations.

Greater security means more clarity and a firmer line toward the USSR. De Gaulle was the first to urge U.S. presidents not to concede anything to Moscow in major crises (Berlin, the U-2 affair, Cuba) and Georges Pompidou, at a meeting with President Nixon, stressed the "extreme importance" which he attached to the maintenance of U.S. forces in Europe. Thus, most Europeans were more satisfied than apprehensive to see a tough president succeeding the vacillating Mr Carter.

Regarding the open approach, Europeans hope it will be adopted primarily toward them. In this respect, the Reagan team has made a good start by consulting its allies on all occasions. However, there is also a need for an open approach to the Third World (in a North-South dialogue for instance, which is constantly about to start), and even to the USSR, since nobody in Europe wants a return to the cold war.

It is on two theaters far from Europe that there is most risk of a difference of opinion: southern Africa, where the "new Americans" are not really inclined to encourage the evolution in favor of the blacks and above all in Central America. There is reason to wonder why Washington needed to launch an intensive propaganda campaign in Europe on El Salvador and to make this problem a kind of test of allied solidarity. Whatever their sympathies, the Europeans hardly have the means to influence the military confrontations going on in the region.

Does Washington seriously believe that the Community's dispatch of powdered milk to El Salvador is likely to tip the scales in one direction or another? In these circumstances, the mission to Europe by Mr Haig's assistant, Eagleburger, seemed pointlessly provocative, notably in Germany where Mr Schmidt could have done without this new bone of contention with his own party's leftwing.

It seems that Francois-Poncet is more understanding and is prepared to regard as convincing the evidence of Soviet interference gathered by the CIA. In any case, he will take advantage of his U.S. visit to condemn any interference in the region's affairs. But nonetheless he will advocate a political solution and the implementation of the humanitarian aid program to all populations.

Indeed, most Europeans consider that the solution of Central America's problems, like the rest of the Third World's problems, depends on a policy of reforms and must take account of local conditions. Mr Reagan's "new Americans," however, tend to couch these problems exclusively in military terms and in terms of East-West rivalry without bothering too much about the "subtleties." This difference in approach is an initial hitch in the "allied solidarity" which both sides of the Atlantic are trying to restore.

POLL SHOWS MITTERRAND SECOND VOTING ROUND FAVORITE

NC231813 Paris AFP in English 1759 GMT 23 Feb 81

[Text] Paris, 23 Feb (AFP)--Socialist Party chief Francois Mitterrand would beat President Valery Giscard d'Estaing in the second and deciding round if the presidential election were held now, according to a public opinion poll carried out for LE QUOTIDIEN DE PARIS newspaper.

The poll, published in tomorrow's issue, shows that Mr Mitterrand would win 51 per cent of the vote against Mr Giscard d'Estaing's 49 per cent.

On the first round, the poll showed, Mr Giscard d'Estaing would win between 24 per cent and 26 per cent of the vote, while Mr Mitterrand would have between 22 per cent and 24 per cent. Runner-up would be Gaullist party chief and Paris mayor Jacques Chirac, with between 16 per cent and 17 per cent.

Communist Party chief Georges Marchais would receive between 15 per cent and 16 per cent, the poll showed.

The poll, by the Indice-Opinion firm, was carried out between February 14 and 18. A total of 1,077 French persons of voting age were polled.

MARCHAIS ACCUSED OF VOLUNTEERING TO WORK FOR NAZIS

NC211644 Paris AFP in English 1637 GMT 21 Feb 81

[Text] Paris, 22 Feb (AFP)--The news magazine LE POINT says it has established that Georges Marchais, the French Communist Party's candidate for president, volunteered to work in a repair shop for the German Luftwaffe during World War II.

It added that it has been able to show "with certainty" that Mr Marchais has "misrepresented the truth" about his past.

The magazine, just two months ahead of the French presidential elections, thus has again brought up Mr Marchais's wartime and immediate post-war activities--an issue that has dogged the Communist Party secretary since 1970.

LE POINT said that Mr Marchais cannot ignore the fact that he "freely had himself hired in a repair shop for the German Air Force, the Luftwaffe," and that he "was going to participate in the German war effort."

Mr Marchais has maintained that he was forced to work for the Germans, but LE POINT disputes Mr Marchais's versions of the date of his mobilization, the circumstances of his departure for Germany as well as of his return to France. The party chief's version of his return was described as "highly disputable."

The first attack against Mr Marchais on this issue came 11 years ago from a Communist and former resistance fighter, Charles Tillon, who blamed him for hiding the truth about his life during the occupation.

In 1973, Mr Marchais was accused of volunteering to work for the German Messerschmitt firm in 1942. Officials of various publications were sued for libel, but the counts were dropped in 1977, and an appeal was dismissed in 1978.

A year ago, the weekly news magazine L'EXPRESS referred to what it called proof--a document from Augsburg archives--that Mr Marchais had worked in Germany until the end of the occupation. Mr Marchais had maintained that he fled Germany before that point.

PAPER VIEWS WARSAW SILENCE ON PCI-USSR POLEMICS

[Piero Benetazzo dispatch: "Press Makes No Reference to Present PCI-CPSU Polemic"]

[Excerpts] Warsaw, 16 February--The Polish press makes no reference to the violent polemic between the PCI and the Soviet Union; neither the newspapers nor the television mention it, and requests for answers from official circles meet with a similar unwillingness to talk about it. One party official said brusquely: "Polemics among communists have never done any good."

Today's silence reflects not a divergence, but simply the excessive concern with tactics inevitable in a country that is acting barely within the limits of its geopolitical scope and which feels itself to be the accused party. "I am acquainted with Berlinguer's speech," the chief editor of one Warsaw newspaper confided to me, "but we will not publish it; we are politically too weak to be able to do so. We very much respect the PCI and basically Poland today shows that the historical compromise can work." This is a confirmation of a special bond that can no longer be publicly admitted on account of the present domestic situation.

But could it help if someone spoke on your behalf? I asked. "I am convinced that it could help us a great deal--but mainly for the future. At present we have gained minimal scope for maneuver." Warsaw's silence--due to the need to avoid exacerbating the polemics--can therefore be compensated for by the aggressiveness of a PCI which issues reminders to observe the autonomy of which both parties have been the most convinced and constant advocates.

But the greatest fear is of a damaging break, that would isolate Warsaw, subjecting it to the pressures of a bloc that has suddenly lost a moderate interlocutor, and with it the need for a balance within which the Polish process can find its own scope and guarantee.

"It would not help us," they say in Warsaw: "it would make it more difficult to withstand the bloc's pressures." It is difficult to say to what extent the exacerbation of the tactical aspect--so typical of situations without reference points--reflects a fear of the unknown factor of a "foreign intervention" and to what extent the Polish process is in fact finding its sole interlocutors within the bloc. Warsaw is to some extent living hand-to-mouth and everything is now being staked on the Jaruzelski solution. "We have resolved our problems," the [unidentified] Warsaw paper chief editor stressed: "Even Walesa has admitted it."

PCI DENIES DIVULGING CPSU LETTER ON POLAND

LD231041 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 18 Feb 81 p 15

REPORTAGE ON COUP ATTEMPT IN CONGRESS OF DEPUTIES

Parliament Building Takeover

LD231822 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1814 GMT 23 Feb 81

[Text] Since 1820, [as heard] persons dressed in Civil Guard uniform have been occupying the Congress of Deputies where a session on the investiture of the prime minister was being held. At that time, we repeat, 1820, a person armed with a pistol and dressed in the uniform of an army officer, shouting "All Down!" began shooting in the chamber. Deputies obeyed the order and took cover behind their seats.

A few minutes later, other members of the group took over the microphones in the chamber to call for calm, giving assurances--and these were the words--that nothing was going to happen, and announcing that within 15 or 20 minutes a military authority would appear in the Congress of Deputies to give an explanation of what was happening and also to give concrete orders.

Nobody was injured in the incident and so far the military authority announced by the occupiers has not appeared in the chamber.

Situation 'Under Control'

LD231904 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1835 GMT 23 Feb 81

[Text] It is now 1935, listeners; we are now suspending normal programs to offer you news in connection with the incident at the Congress of Deputies.

Official sources say that the government has the situation under control. At 1915, government sources reported that army troops were at that time in their barracks in the various military regions of the country, as a merely preventive measure, and under government orders. The same sources said that the situation is under government control.

It was also said at that time that it was possible that the captain general of the first military region, [Madrid] was present in the Palace of the Congress of Deputies.

Fifteen minutes after the incident in the congress, the staff of the second deputy prime minister's office got in touch with the staff of Deputy Prime Minister Calvo Sotelo, who was in the congress. Members of Calvo Sotelo's team reported by telephone that in the course of the incident, First Deputy Prime Minister Lt Gen Gutierrez Mellado was hit. The person reporting said: Do not worry, we are all well. At that moment communications from the congress were cut.

'Absolute Calm'

LD231916 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1840 GMT 23 Feb 81

[Text] There is absolute calm throughout Spain. EFE established this at 1930 via its correspondents and offices and also through telephone calls to captains general and offices of civil and military governors.

The interior minister also confirmed that the situation in all military regions is absolutely normal following the serious incident in the congress.

EFE staff in the center of Madrid repeat that there is total normality in the vicinity of the Ministry of Defense, the telephone building, the main post and telecommunications center and the buildings of the various ministries.

Life is continuing as normal throughout Madrid disturbed only by comments arising from the reporting of the incident by the media.

Troops are in their barracks as a simple preventive measure.

[Text] This is Spanish National Radio [RNE] first program. The director of RNE is about to issue an announcement of interest to all:

Good evening ladies and gentlemen. At 1945 a group of soldiers belonging to the army, drove in armored vehicles to the RNE headquarters in the Prado del Rey, Madrid, under the orders of a captain. They headed first to the Spanish Television head office and ordered the director to ensure that programs were broadcast as normal. Immediately afterwards they went to the office of the director general of Spanish Radio-Television [RTVE] a state body at Radio House, and gave instructions for RNE to start broadcasting strictly military music. They issued the same instructions to Spanish Radio Network [RCE]. [independent station] They ordered Spanish Television not to broadcast any news programs.

While in the office of the director general, the captain in charge spoke to various military leaders until, around 2100 he received instructions to evacuate the occupied area and to release the RNE employees to allow them to continue broadcasting [word indistinct]. Throughout all this time [words indistinct] the RNE staff remained calmly at their posts and there were no incidents.

We are now awaiting for normality to be restored in order to restart our news programs. There is nothing else. Thank you for your attention.

Government Statement

[Text] [Passage indistinct] A statement from the government of the nation, made up of under secretaries and secretaries of state. Here is the director of State Security [Francisco Laina Garcia]:

A statement from the government of the nation. The secretaries of state and under secretaries, meeting in session:

The situation created by an act of violence at the Congress of Deputies has so far hindered the normal functioning of the Council of Ministers, the members of which are held in the chamber. In these circumstances, the secretaries of state and the under secretaries of the various ministries have met in permanent session, on instructions from his majesty the king, to ensure the governing of the country along civilian lines and in close contact with the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who are also meeting.

All reports so far received by those who find themselves in political control of the country on behalf of the government agree that the most absolute calm reigns throughout the national territory and that a solution to this brief interruption of parliamentary life is expected soon.

Those who are in full civil and military power in Spain at this moment, under the direction and authority of his majesty the king, are able to assure their compatriots that no act of force will destroy democratic coexistence, which the people freely desire, and which is embodied in the text of the constitution which civilians and the military have sworn to defend.

Occupation of Valencia

[Text] EUROPA PRESS reports that as of 2245, the situation in Valencia was one of total military occupation. Tanks were arriving in the city center by various routes. At the same time, the agency adds, a number of tanks were stationed in the Plaza de Pais Valenciano, the city center. At 2230 another column of tanks was advancing up Avenida de (Bursajot).

According to EUROPA PRESS, the streets of Valencia were totally deserted, in accordance with the curfew ordered by Lieutenant General Milans del Bosch, captain general of the third military region. 9. All state security forces will remain under my authority.

10. I am likewise assuming judicial and administrative powers with regard to the autonomous bodies as well as the provincial and municipal ones.

11. These orders will remain in force for as long as strictly necessary, pending instructions from his majesty the king or the supreme authority. They will come into force from the moment of publication.

Finally, active cooperation is expected of all patriotic, orderly and law abiding individuals with regard to the above directives.

I conclude with a strong long live the king, long live Spain forever.

Resolution in Valencia

LD240126 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0107 GMT 24 Feb 81

[Text] We are just receiving a EUROPA PRESS dispatch which reads as follows:

At 0156 [0056 GMT] sources close to the secretaries of state and under secretaries who had been meeting in the Interior Ministry have confirmed that the situation in the third military region [Valencia region] has been resolved.

The same sources said that the civil governors of the Valencia region have had returned to them the powers which had been taken over by military authorities.

The same official sources also said that, to judge from the way events have developed, the action against the Congress of Deputies building can be regarded as an isolated movement for which Lt Col Antonio Tejero Molina was responsible and that there was no evidence of support for this action.

[Text] [Words indistinct] The occupation of the Congress of Deputies chamber unconfirmed rumors coming from sources close to Jose Aramburu Topete, the director general of the Civil Guard, suggest that the conditions imposed by Lt Col Antonio Tejero Molina for abandoning the occupation of the congress chamber are the dissolution of parliament and the appointment of a military junta to govern the country.

At the same time it has been reported that Lt Col Antonio Tejero Molina has been offered an aircraft to leave the country and that he has replied that he usually gets airsick. In other words, he is refusing to take an airplane to leave the country.

Situation Communique

[Text] The Permanent Commission of Secretaries of State and Under Secretaries which is in continuous session in the Ministry of the Interior, has prepared a communique which we will now read:

Sixteen hours after the hostage taking of the government and the members of parliament who were fulfilling their constitutional duties, calm reigns throughout the territory of Spain except, of course, inside the building. The civil governors of various provinces all report that Spaniards have heeded the appeal for calm and are going about their regular duties. Only in Madrid is there a partial and understandable failure to report for school and centers of education. The Permanent Commission of Secretaries of State and Under Secretaries is continuing to work, in close collaboration with the Joint Chiefs of Staff, in order to best fulfill its obligations as noted in his majesty the king's message to the nation. Plans for solving the hostage situation inside the Congress of Deputies are also being studied. Some of the Civil Guards inside the congress building have begun to leave, and also a group of women deputies have been taken out of the congress building. It is expected that a mass exodus of deputies will take place soon.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff and all military units under their authority are scrupulously carrying out the duties that behoove the Armed Forces by virtue of their constitutional mandate. To this end troops remain in their barracks, where loyalty and discipline are the permanent norm.

His majesty the king has conveyed to the army, navy and air force commands his satisfaction over the conduct of the forces under their authority.

NORWAY

GOVERNMENT WILL WORK FOR NUCLEAR-FREE ZONES

LD181613 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 16 Feb 81 p 6

[Gunnar A. Johansen report: "Akershus Labor Party Supports Nuclear-Free Zones"]

[Excerpts] The Akershus Labor Party annual general meeting adopted a resolution on Saturday [14 February] to support the work for the establishment of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area.

The resolution on nuclear-free zones states that such a solution must be seen as a first step toward a more comprehensive European solution and that efforts to achieve disarmament and detente must be increased. In this connection it was proposed that a special body connected with the Foreign Ministry be set up which will have the task of preparing analyses of the effects of important arms projects on the arms race.

Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland stressed in her speech to the meeting that the government will work actively for nuclear-free zones and to help to bring the nuclear arms race under control. Only if a Nordic solution could be placed in a broader European context would it be possible to reduce the number of these arms in Europe, the prime minister said.

"None of the Nordic countries have such arms, and none of them intends to acquire them. But at the same time there are large quantities of these arms in the immediate vicinity of the Nordic countries. For this reason, only if a Nordic solution can be placed in a broader European context will it be possible to reduce the number of these arms in Europe," she said.

This was also Gro Harlem Brundtland's first appearance before a large gathering since she became prime minister. She did not mention the Alta Project [controversial dam building project in northern Norway] or the Lapps' situation in her speech. However, she did warn against the ideas being put forward by the new liberalism's foremost spokesman, Milton Friedman, in the television series at present being shown in Norway.

"We must combat these ideas and proposals for practical policies. We must avoid similar experiments in Norway and defend the social democratic model," Prime Minister Harlem Brundtland said.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA DISCLOSES NUCLEAR BASES LOCATIONS

NC231833 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 23 Feb 81 pp 1, 15

[Spiros Karatzaferis]

[Text] Because of the U.S. provocation at Drama, we disclose today the U.S. bases in Greece where the Americans are storing nuclear weapons (nuclear warheads and atomic bombs).

On 15 February, ELEVTHEROTIPIA dislosed the existence of atomic weapons in our country and pointed out the areas where they are stored, but refrained from disclosing the exact locations of the storage sites.

Besides the nuclear warheads used for "Honest John" missiles (infantry) stored at the U.S. base at Drama, there are three other U.S. Air Force bases that store nuclear weapons.

1. One of the bases is at Elevsis, in the northern part of the Greek Air Force base. It is called "558" and it stores "Nike Hercules" land-air nuclear missiles (antiaircraft).

2. The Elevsis atomic storage site is the central base serving smaller U.S. bases at Katsimidhi, Keratea, Kriekouki and Imittos. Missiles are installed at these bases which also have small atomic storage sites where a few nuclear warheads for "immediate use" are kept. A total of 160 Americans serve there under the command of a major.

3. The third U.S. base with atomic weapons is at Araxos. Atomic bombs that can be dropped by F-104 are stored here. These atomic bombs are 2 and 1/2 times more powerful than those dropped on Nagasaki.

The Araxos atomic storage site is called "S.A.S" and the U.S. unit "Destasmed" (detachment). Some 30 Americans serve there under the command of a major.

4. The fourth U.S. base which stores atomic weapons is at Tanaghra (S.A.S.). Like the one at Araxos, atomic bombs are being kept there. Thirty Americans also serve here under the command of a major. Americans and Greeks guard the four atomic weapons storage sites. However, their use is under the control of the U.S. Pentagon.

The four American commanders only take orders from the U.S. Pentagon, and disregard the Greek military authorities, as happened at Drama recently. As the Sunday ELEVTHEROTIPIA disclosed yesterday, the U.S. commander took orders from the U.S. center in western Germany to hold "exercises" in the center of the town and thus provoke the Greeks. This action was without the knowledge of the Greek commander or the authorities.

PAPANDREOU ANNOUNCES PASOK'S 'GOVERNMENT MEASURES'

NC231156 Athens EXORMISI in Greek 22 Feb 81 pp 1, 11

[Exclusive interview granted by PASOK chairman Andreas Papandreou to EXORMISI correspondent Dhimitris Maroudhas: "PASOK's First Government Measures--Program for the First 100 Days of Authority"; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou, in an exclusive interview with EXORMISI, called for the "energization of the people into an all-people's election army that would give PASOK an historic victory and sink the rightwing."]

Papandreou then referred to the order of priorities that a PASOK government would adopt during its first 100 days. The first urgent measures would deal with: the economy and inflation, productive investments, the balance of payments, strengthening and stabilization of the economy, establishment of independent Greek defense and foreign policies and a cleansing of the administration through an institutionalized administrative decentralition.

After accusing the New Democracy with being responsible for corruption within public administration, Papandreou stressed that PASOK will deal with the question directly and with determination, stressing: "PASOK will deal harshly with public functionaries who serve alien interests or who undermine progress toward change. At the same time, however, it will honor and reward those who place themselves in the service of the nation and the people."

Answering questions, Papandreou stated, among other things:

"PASOK today embodies the expectations and hopes of our people, who have been betrayed a thousand times; their hopes and expectations for a new start, for the commencement of a new march by our country toward the great change."

"During the '7 years' of political change [1974-81] our people's expectations remained unfulfilled. These were expectations for democratization of the state, for a proud and independent Greek foreign policy, for an improved economy, for a just sharing of the national income among the masses of people."

"During this '7-year' period the rightwing managed to lead the economy to the doorstep of bankruptcy, increase inequality in the distribution of the national income and hand over the country's economic progress to the large monopolies. In addition, the state was undermined by economic interests outside the law."

"With thw sweeping, decisive and historic victory of PASOK in the forthcoming elections, the people for the first time will be in a position to set the foundations for the progress that will lead to change."

"The economy, administration and defense are sectors that demand immediate measures--ones that include the 'short-term' policy of PASOK and that fall within the program for the first 100 days."

"The allegations by the opposition parties that change in our country cannot be achieved without their participation, without a joint government program, is unfounded because a 'joint' government program is, of necessity, the result of compromise--it is a key permitting an escape from obligations undertaken by the majority party. Not only do I accept the fact but I also stress that an absolute majority in the Chamber of Deputies is not sufficient. In order to implement a program for change, it is also essential to have the people's active participation within the framework of local self-government, the trade unions and other organizations. This essential people's consent and participation, however, has absolutely no relation to the establishment of a 'joint' program. It presupposes not a 'joint' program, but a program that expresses the expectations and desires of our peoples. It is such a program that PASOK proposes."

"In the pre-election period that has already started, it is not sufficient that PASOK should simply approach the people. It is also essential that the people should approach PASOK--not only so they will be able to define their desires and expectations and thus contribute to the final formulation of PASOK's government program, but also so they can proclaim their determination to play an active part in the formulation of our country's future course."

"Decentralization--the strengthening of the community, the municipal area and the region--will undoubtedly play a decisive role in reaching our goal of making public administration a state functionary and supporter of the people instead of an oppressor.

I KATHIMERINI ON USSR SHIP REPAIR DEAL NONRENEWAL

NC221751 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 22 Feb 81 pp 1,3

[Text] The Soviets, until today at least, have shown an unwillingness to renew the Neorion agreement which expired last December and which permitted the USSR to repair commercial vessels and Soviet Navy auxiliary ships at the Siros installations. The Soviet stand results from the Neorion administration's decision to repair only commercial vessels and not auxiliary ships at the dockyard.

Simultaneously, however, this unwillingness strengthens the impression that, in the Neorion deal, the Soviet Union gave priority to repair of its fleet's auxiliary vessels and had less interest in servicing its commercial fleet.

The Greek side, on the other hand, by allowing the Neorion administration to sign the agreement, considered it self-evident that this cooperation would give priority to commercial vessels over auxiliary ships of the Soviet fleet. However, the actual implementation of the treaty, as well as the USSR's current unwillingness, show that both sides had, from the start, given different interpretations to the nature of the cooperation.

However, it must be pointed out that after the agreement's expiration on 31 December 1980, the Greek side delayed taking a final decision on the renewal of the agreement, the content of which would most probably influence many developments in the two countries' economic relations.

It should be remembered that often, either NATO as a whole or certain of its member-states individually--and mainly the United States--had expressed discontent about this branch of Neorion activities. This discontent became stronger after our country's entry into the military wing of the Atlantic alliance.

However, diplomatic circles maintained that cooperation with the USSR on ship repair, which to date has brought important benefits to Siros' economy, caused unjustifiable suspicions on the allied side.

It is also worth mentioning that the Neorion and "Sudoimport" agreement signed in 1979 did not differ substantively from other agreements signed by Western countries with the Soviet Union, some of which are also members of the Atlantic alliance. Canadian shipyards, for example, have signed treaties with the USSR to meet repair requirements of a Soviet fishing fleet known for its "peculiar" electronic equipment.

However, despite this indication, it is certain that facilities extended to the Soviet ships by the Western countries are assessed according to geopolitical area, movement and stationing of the Soviet fleet. And it is from this point of view that the Neorion agreement has drawn stronger concern from the West.

INTERIOR MINISTRY DENIES GOVERNORS REASSIGNED

[Text] Ankara, 23 Feb (AA)--The Interior Ministry today formally denied recent press reports about an alleged decree being drafted to reshuffle governors.

There is no such decree of preparation for new appointements among governors, the ministry statement said and noted such groundless reports would "disturb" the peace of mind and reduce the efficiency of incumbent governors, who needed more than ever to function in a peaceful atmosphere. This was a time when an attempt was being made to strengthen the administration and everyone was expected to contribute to that effort.

PRIME MINISTER EXPLAINS 1981 FISCAL BUDGET

[Excerpts] The discussions on the whole of the 1981 fiscal budget draft began today at the National Security Council meeting. Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu made a concluding statement on the occasion during the National Security Council meeting this morning.

In the first part of his statement, Ulusu made a general assessment of the world economy. He noted that, like other developing countries, there was a decrease in Turkey's growth rate in recent years and that the GNP increased by only 3 percent in 1978 and by .07 percent in 1979. Pointing out that measures were taken after the second half of 1980--especially after September--to better exploit resources and eliminate the (?reduced) capacity, Ulusu said that the growth rate for 1980 is expected to be around .08 percent.

The prime minister said that the difficulties encountered in industrialization efforts were further exacerbated by an energy shortage and foreign currency bottleneck and that under these conditions the country was faced with an extremely difficult economic situation. Explaining that efforts have been exerted since 1977 to counter these negative conditions, but that these efforts did not yield the expected results, Ulusu recalled that a new economic stability program was implemented in 1980. The prime minister noted that the necessary amendments to the tax laws were effected in an effort to ensure the benefits expected of this program and to cure the economy.

Ulusu said that a tight credit policy that will least adversely affect the economy was followed in 1980. Noting that the primary goal of the government is to reduce inflation, the prime minister said that as a result of the stability program, significant declines have been registered in the rate of inflation since March 1980, and that unless there are unexpected developments in the world situation it will be possible to reduce the rate of inflation to below 50 percent during 1981. Ulusu said: Controlling inflation, stabilizing the economy, protecting the middle class comprised of law and fixed income groups, and even recreating it, constitute the fundamental principles of our government's economic and financial policies.

Pointing out that this is the only way the country will attain an atmosphere of tranquility and security, the prime minister said that there are still difficulties in the balance of payments, and that exports and workers' remittances could only cover three quarters of the total imports in 1980. Ulusu noted that $844 million of promised loans were transferred to 1981 from the previous year, and that an additional $2 billion in foreign loans is necessary to realize the $9 billion worth of imports for this year.

Noting that the 1981 budget was prepared in accordance with the government's general economic and financial policies, the prime minister said that increasing production and curbing inflation are vitally important. He said the government will take measures to ensure justice in the distribution of income and to spread prosperity, and therefore it is necessary to harmoniously implement its general price, tax, wages, money and credit, investment, foreign trade and minimum and subsidized price policies. He said that great care will be taken to ensure this.

Describing the main characteristics of the 1981 budget, Ulusu said the budget was prepared in a realistic and sincere manner; public expenditures were based on sound sources; and investments in the fields of agriculture, transportation, communications, energy and mining were emphasized in order to ensure the fulfillment of the state's fundamental duties. Pointing out that unfruitful investments that cannot be transformed into production in a short time were eliminated from the program, and that improvements were included comprising all the work conducted in the fields of tax laws and income distribution, the prime minister said that almost half of the transfer payments in the budget were allocated to the public economic enterprises. Explaining that these organizations will cease to be a burden on the economy through improvements in their structures, Ulusu noted that a large part of the payments allotted to these organizations will be used in investments.

Ulusu stated that 42.6 percent of the budget is allocated to current expenditures, 22.2 percent to investment and 33.2 percent to transfer payments. He noted that of the total budget, estimated at 1,498 billion Turkish liras, 1,347 billion will be met by tax revenues, 89 billion by normal non-tax revenues, 44 billion by special revenues and funds, and 18 billion by the special revenues of administrations with supplementary budgets. He said the 60 million Turkish lira deficit will be financed through internal debts.

In the last part of his speech, Ulusu said: This year will be a special one for our country from every aspect. The government is determined to continue its responsible, consistent and effective attitude toward all its economic and financial policies such as public revenues, public expenditures, subsidizing, the balance of payments and money and credit politices. There is no doubt that the government needs the joint efforts and support of all sectors of our nation. However, great care will be taken to ensure that the sacrifices to be made are proportional to the citizens' financial means. Meanwhile, every measure within the possibilities of the budget will be taken to alleviate the difficulties facing low and fixed income groups.

The discussions on the overall budget began after Ulusu's statement. After these discussions, the National Security Council will debate the separate clauses of the budget. The National Security Council started its discussions on the budget draft on 30 January and dealt with the budgets of the investing ministries between 2 and 19 February. The budget bill will go into effect on 1 March after being published in the Official Gazette.

PROSECUTOR ASKS DEATH PENALTY FOR 56 MILITANTS

TA231748 Ankara ANATOLIA in French 1530 GMT 23 Feb 81

According to the indictment, six Americans, seven members of the Nationalist Action Party and two policemen were among those killed by the militants of the MLSPB. Moreover, a call was issued to 11 more members of the organization to surrender to the martial law authorities.

MILLIYET ON GOVERNMENT'S ROLE ON CYPRUS, GULF

NC201437 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 17 Feb 81 p 2

["Viewpoint" column by Mumtaz Soysal: "The Limits of Strength"]

[Excerpts] A foreign diplomat stationed in Cyprus asks: "Can the military administration in Turkey fulfill everything the West wants in Cyprus and remove from power those Turkish Cypriot administrators who would oppose such an action?"

We try to explain to him that no administration in Turkey, including the present one, can ignore the wishes of the Turkish people and do what others suggest. If it attempts to do so, it paves the way for its removal from office. It would be particularly preposterous to dispense with Denktas and replace him by a puppet without taking into consideration the votes of the Turkish Cypriots. A foreign journalist who has come to Turkey to write something about it, asks: "Can the military administration assume the task of guarding Western interests in the Persian Gulf and assign a few highly mobile divisions for this purpose?"

We try to explain to him that no administration in Turkey, including the present one, can brush aside the interests of the Turkish nation and guard the interests of others. If it attempts to do so, it will be digging its own grave. It would be particularly absurd to think that a country whose prime minister stated in At-Ta'if that "the protection of the Gulf is the responsibility of only the Gulf states," would antagonize a vast majority of the Arab states with whom it has been seeking to establish healthy relations, and to undertake responsibilities without the consent of its own people, which would mean getting involved in adventures beyond its own frontiers. No administration, no matter how strong, would like to undertake impossible missions. Determining the limits of what is possible and what is not depends on how much the people are prepared to tolerate, because no power is so strong as the people's majority.

In the majority of cases, what misleads the authoritarian regimes is the fact that their antennas cannot healthily determine what their people can or cannot tolerate, and what their likes and dislikes are. When antennas do not function properly, such regimes tend to take decisions that are disapproved by the majority. And when this is done, willy nilly, the regime becomes tougher.

But from Turkey's point of view, what misleads the foreigners is that the fundamental characteristic of the Turkish Armed Forces--privates and officers alike--is that they are in constant touch with the people, which necessitates the smooth functioning of their antennas.

If we add to this the fact that the 12 September was carried out by an unbroken chain of command, it becomes manifest that the possibility of adopting popular decisions is much higher.

Under the circumstances, to think that unpopular decisions could be taken against the expectations of the majority of our people on such issues as Cyprus, the Persian Gulf, as well as on the date of returning to democracy and the form it will take, would mean a failure to understand Turkey and the Turks.

MINISTERS DECIDE TO SUSPEND FOOD AID TO EL SALVADOR

[Jan Luyten dispatch: "EEC Holds Back Aid to El Salvador"]

[Excerpt] Brussels--European foreign ministers decided in Brussels yesterday to suspend the planned humanitarian and food aid to El Salvador. This aid would have been supplied through nongovernmental agencies. At the same time it was reported from Washington that the U.S. administration is going to increase its support for the regime in El Salvador and has the support of the most important congressional leaders.

The suspension of EEC food aid came about on a proposal from West German Deputy Minister Von Dohnanyi. The European Council of Ministers will now reach a decision about this aid after consultations with U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger.

EEC-CHINA TRADE WEEK TO BE HELD 30 MAR-11 APR

NC171148 Paris AFP in English 1100 GMT 17 Feb 81

[Excerpt] Brussels, 17 Feb (AFP)--The EEC-China trade week run here from March 30 to April 11 by the European Economic Community Commission should allow commerce between the 10-nation Community and China to be given a boost in the sector of light industry, EEC officials said today.

Peoples China has not abandoned the ambitious aims of the "four modernisations" programme launched by Vice-Chairman Deng Xiaoping in 1978, they said. But they recalled that China has just changed its mind on several major equipment projects involving Japan and West Germany.

Fifteen Japanese deals have been suspended including the second phase of the Baoshan steel-works in Shanghai and the chemical works at Nanking. The 15 projects were valued at some $1,500 million.

However, the "readjustment" policy embarked on by the Chinese authorities last year does not jeopardise foreign business in the light industry sector, which is now a priority area, the officials considered.

Attending the trade week in Brussels will be about 100 senior Chinese officials headed by Vice Premier Gu Mu, and some 350 West European business executives.

In discussions they will examine the scope for increased trade in six sectors: light industry, chemicals and pharmaceuticals, textiles, leather and skins, machine-tools and the ferrous and non-ferrous metals industry.

During the first two days Fu Zihe, chairman of the planning commission, Jia Shi, vice minister of foreign trade, and Wei Yuming, chairman of the export-import control commission, will speak on "the effects of economic adjustment on the growth of foreign trade", "prospects for Chinese foreign trade" and "China's priorities for foreign financing".

At the end of the week, Chinese officials will have informal talks with West European businessmen.

DELEGATION FROM EL SALVADOR CANCELS VISIT

LD230853 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 18 Feb 81 p 1

[Cor Groeneweg report: "Salvadorans Not Welcome"]

[Excerpt] The Hague--An official delegation from the junta in El Salvador has abandoned a planned visit to The Hague, because it does not seem to be welcome. Foreign Minister van der Klaauw and Development Aid Minister de Koning plus the second chamber group leaders of the Labor Party, Christian Democratic Appeal and Democrats '66 declined to receive the delegation. Only People's Party for Freedom and Democracy Leader Rietkerk responded positively to a request for a meeting.

The delegation would have arrived in The Hague yesterday and consisted of a top official of the Foreign Ministry in San Salvador, Dr Arguera, and El Salvador Ambassador to Italy Dr Alvarenga.

GOVERNMENT UPHOLDS SUBMARINE DEAL WITH TAIWAN

NC201624 Paris AFP in English 1619 GMT 20 Feb 81

[Text] The Hague, 20 Feb (AFP)--The Dutch Government said today it stood by its authorization of the sale of two submarines to Taiwan despite the threat of diplomatic reprisals by China.

The announcement was made by Vice Prime Minister Hans Wiegel after the Dutch cabinet's weekly meeting. He said the government had notified China "of the decision not to modify its intentions to grant an export license for these two submarines."

The center-right government's move to go ahead with the sale of the submarines, to be built by the Dutch firm Rijn-Schelde-Verolme, came despite parliament's withdrawal of its support of the deal.

The parliament, which had narrowly approved the sale in December, reversed itself after Peking threatened to scale down diplomatic relations to the charges d'affaires level that existed nine years ago.

To protest the proposed deal, China had already begun to re-route its ships from the Rotterdam port it used for its trade with Europe.

SECOND CHAMBER VOTES AGAINST NEUTRON BOMB

[Own correspondent report: "Chamber Rejects Introduction of Neutron Bomb"]

[Excerpts] The Hague--The second chamber yesterday approved by a large majority a motion instructing the government to oppose within the NATO context the introduction of the neutron bom. Only the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy, the Political Reformed Party and the Reformed Political Uniion voted against. According to them, a pronouncement by the chamber is premature and the introduction of the controversial weapon should be brought into the arms control talks.

Only the Labor Party [PVDA] parliamentary group voted for its own motion, embodying the nuclear weapons paragraph of the PVDA election program "response": the dropping of four to five nuclear tasks within 4 years and rejection of the deployment of cruise missiles. Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA] spokesman J. de Boer said in a voting statement that a decision on the cruise missiles was not under discussion, because a decision need not be made until December. He explicitly referred to the CDA stance adopted at the end of 1979 of postponing a decision.

The Democrats '66 [D'66] also voted against a PVDA motion maintaining that in view of the failure to ratify the SALT II treaty, the basis for possible approval of the introduction of the cruise missiles has ceased to exist. The government had at the end of 197 made preparations for deployment dependent on ratification of SALT II. Brinkhorst [D'66] described the PVDA plan for dropping nuclear tasks as "ineffective" for achieving the aim of arms control.

The only nuclear weapons motion that was approved was that of the CDA. This urges making a start with dropping the so-called "short-range nuclear tasks," because their application could lead most rapidly to escalation. But the CDA does want thorough consultation within NATO, so the government had no problem with this viewpoint. The opposition voted against, because, in its opinion, the motion is unclear and presents too many loopholes.

In the voting on the foreign affairs budget, a CDA motion was approved, calling on the government to express Dutch anxiety about U.S. interference in El Salvador. The entire chamber also supported a motion calling on the government to press for the restoration of democracy in Turkey. In the chamber's opinion, the government must also strive for a strengthening of European cooperation, as a reaction to a threatened "directorate" of the big countries (especially the United States) within NATO.

GENSCHER, OPPOSITION REJECT BREZHNEV PROPOSAL

Foreign Minister's Interview

[Excerpts] Bonn, 24 Feb (DPA)--Contrary to Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today rejected the proposal by Soviet state and party leader Leonid Brezhnev for a moratorium on medium-range weapons. In an interview with Deutschlandfunk, Genscher said with reference to the existing Soviet superiority in these missiles: "If the moratorium were accepted, this would not only be a considerable burden on our security but would, above all, also remove the basis for our offer of negotiations which we linked with the decision on counterarming, since there would no longer be any Eastern interest in it."

Genscher stated today that the West in the past had rejected a moratorium "for good reason." "Unfortunately, the situation is such that the enormous missile potential targeted against the West forces us to carry through our counterarming decision consistently." If Brezhnev meant that the USSR now will stop the siting and production of further Soviet missiles, "although this will not remove our need to counterarm, it will however at least be able to make negotiations somewhat easier," stated the foreign minister, who praised the rest of Brezhnev's proposals for a Soviet-U.S. dialogue and confidence-building measures as positive elements.

Mertes Statement

[Excerpt] Bonn, 24 Feb (DPA)--The proposal by Soviet state and party leader Leonid Brezhnev for a moratorium on nuclear medium-range missiles in Europe has met with rejection on the part of the CDU/CSU. The opposition disarmament expert, Alois Mertes, told the press in Bonn today that the imbalance in this field, to the disadvantage of the West, is a threat to peace. With his proposal to freeze atomic medium-range weapons at the present level, Brezhnev has recommended a sham solution which sounds very good but which in reality jeopardizes security.

Mertes believes that differing views are held regarding Brezhnev's proposals by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who recommended a careful examination, and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. The chancellor's position must be regarded as negative because it raises false hopes in East and West. If Genscher rejected the moratorium, then he is right to do so.

Kohl's Comments

LD241836 Hamburg DPA in German 1336 GMT 24 Feb 81

[Text] Bonn, 24 Feb (DPA)--Helmut Kohl, leader of the opposition in the Bundestag, today warned Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt against agreeing to a moratorium on medium-range missiles in Europe as proposed by Soviet state and party leader Leonid Brezhnev. Kohl stated in Bonn today that for the Western alliance, Brezhnev's proposal of imposing "a moratorium now" is unacceptable. The result would be that the Soviet Union's superiority in the field of medium-range missiles would be concretized. This, according to Kohl, would be a clear violation of the West's interest in equality and parity.

If Brezhnev's proposal is accepted, the Western system of levels of deterrence could not be reestablished, said the opposition leader. "NATO's twin decision" of December 1979 would be invalidated as far as the counterarming part is concerned."

The Soviet Union would lose any incentive to enter into any future negotiations with the West on medium-range missiles. Kohl said that the federal chancellor must consider the fact that the new U.S. administration's "sober and realistic assessment" of Soviet policy had been better understood by Moscow than by parts of the Federal Governemnt and SPD. While they were still complaining about the clear langugage of the U.S. President and his colleagues, the Soviet leadership immediately adopted a pragmatic attitude to the new situation. "Both world powers have once again proved that they do not need mediators for talks."

Kohl called on the Soviet Union to stop the production and stationing of medium-range weapons and to respond without delay to NATO's proposal for talks. In this way, a balance in the field of medium-range missiles ought to be reestablished at the lowest level possible by 1983. The opposition leader also gave his assurance that every constructive proposal which promotes peace, security and cooperation on a world-wide basis in Europe will be examined. He welcomed Brezhnev's readiness to hold a dialogue with the United States at all levels, to continue the SALT talks with the new U.S. administration without delay and to extend trust-building measures in the military field to the entire European part of the USSR. Negotiations would show how serious the Soviet proposals are.

OFFICIALS HOLD TALKS WITH POLAND'S KISIEL

[Excerpt] Bonn, 24 Feb (DPA)--The Federal Government will "examine benevolently" Poland's wishes regarding the extension of its international payment commitments. This promise was made in Bonn today to Polish Deputy Premier Henryk Kisiel by Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff. Lambsdorff made it clear, however, that Bonn is only prepared to participate in an overall concept in cooperation with the other Western creditor countries. The socialist countries will also have to do their share in this respect. According to Lambsdorff, the Federal Government furthermore will advocate in Brussels that the organization of EEC food aid for Poland be accelerated.

Also today, the Polish deputy premier discussed the economic and political situation in Poland with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer and Deputy SPD Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski. An exchange of views with two opposition politicians, Walter Leisler Kiep and Alois Mertes, also is planned for Wednesday.

The federal Economics Ministry announced after the discussion with Lambsdorff that Kisiel, who is his country's planning chief, had "given a realistic account of the Polish economic situation and his government's expectations for the next few years." The Polish side also expressed its interest in this respect in increased cooperation between small and medium-sized firms of the two countries in the field of food production and processing. Such projects are also in accord with German interests.

Kisiel stated that during the current year, Warsaw will again have to cut its contractually agreed coal exports to the Federal Republic due to difficulties in the Polish mining industry. Last year, coal exports were reduced by almost 20 percent. The Polish premier said that in 1981, his country will probably only be able to export 1.1-1.2 million tons of coal to the Federal Republic. This is only about half the agreed amount of 2.4 million tons. Poland will try, however, to increase its coal exports. During the discussion, Lambsdorff stressed the special importance of Polish coal supplies in trade between the two countries.

The two ministers agreed during their discussion to hold the next session of the German-Polish Economic Commission in the last quarter of this year in Warsaw. The commission, which last met in the summer of 1979, was originally to have met in the first part of 1980. This meeting was cancelled at short notice by the German side, however, because of Warsaw expressing its desire for credit at short notice.

During the meeting with Wischnewski, the deputy SPD chairman explained to the Polish guest that the Europeans must find ways of helping a friendly neighbor. An economically healthy Poland is an essential factor for prosperous and peaceful cooperation in Europe. The Federal Republic must help where possible in this respect.

Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, in his discussion with Kisiel, emphasized the importance that the Federal Government attaches to the cooperation with Poland introduced by the treaty policies of the 1970's. Genscher said that the allies of both countries also regard this cooperation as advantageous. This is a solid basis for a continuation of the relations, he said. He reminded the Polish deputy premier that the policy of cooperation with Poland is now supported by those who, at the beginning, regarded it with reservations.

The foreign minister praised the determination of the Polish Government to seek solutions to the current questions through a dialogue with the forces concerned.

In the conversation, which lasted around 1 hour, the two politicians also discussed the CPSU party congress in Moscow. Genscher said that the willingness for talks expressed by Brezhnev could influence the climate in a positive way and generally have a stabilizing effect.

GENSCHER READY TO TALK WITH EL SALVADOR'S DUARTE

[Dirk Cornelsen dispatch: "Genscher Wants to Mediate"]

[Text] Bonn, 23 Feb--The Federal Government intends to make every effort to promote the "dialogue between the democratic forces" in El Salvador. According to the Foreign Ministry, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher found himself reaffirmed in this goal by his counterpart from Costa Rica, Bernd Niehaus Quesada. This is why Genscher is prepared to talk with the chief of the military junta of El Salvador, Jose Napoleon Duarte, should the latter come to Bonn. Christian Democrat Duarte has been invited by the CDU.

In the event Duarte visits, a meeting with representatives of the resistance movement cannot be ruled out. Karsten Voig, SPD Bundestag deputy and his Bundestag faction's spokesman in the Bundestag Foreign Relations Committee, at week's end offered his party's support for negotiations. In an article written for the NORDSEE-ZEITUNG, Voigt wrote that since negotiations in El Salvador proper are "linked with the risk of murder" for Guillermo Ungo, the Social Democrat and chairman of the political opposition, the Social Democrats are prepared to offer their good offices for talks in the Federal Republic.

Government Spokesman Kurt Becker told newsmen Monday that the Federal Government is interested in preventing any international conflict from erupting in El Salvador. Washington claims that arms for the guerrilla fighters in El Salvador are coming from Cuba. President Reagan's special envoy Eagleburger last week in Bonn failed to produce "proof" of such arms deliveries.

REPORTAGE ON COSTA RICAN FOREIGN MINISTER'S VISIT

[Text] Bonn, 24 Feb (DPA)--The Republic of Costa Rica has drawn the attention of the Western states to their responsibility for developments in Central America and the search for democratic solutions. After political talks in Bonn lasting 2 days, Costa Rica's Foreign Minister Bernd Niehaus Quesada, speaking to journalists on Tuesday, emphasized that the "disturbing" situation in Central America is a matter concerning all nations that recognize the principles of freedom.

The situation in El Salvador, which is shaken by civil war, was the central theme of Niehaus's talks with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

Both sides broadly agreed that for a peaceful solution in El Salvador the democratic forces of both warring camps must be brought together for talks and that Nicaragua must not be left alone on its path to a democratic future.

Niehaus reacted noncommittally to speculation that German mediation is being considered between the junta, led by Jose Napoleon Duarte, and the political opposition (FDR) in El Salvador. Answering a question on this subject, the minister said that the Federal Republic, like all countries, must support a democratic development. Genscher on Monday offered to talk with Duarte, should the latter accept a CDU invitation.

CDU General Secretary Heiner Geissler expressed his view again on Tuesday that the Christian Democrat head of the junta, Duarte, is standing between the two fronts in El Salvador and seeking a middle, democratic path. Extremists of the right and left are responsible for the bloodshed in the country.

Joint Communique

[Text] Bonn, 25 Feb (DPA)--The Federal Government condemns the efforts of communist states to expand their influence in Central America, even by warlike means. This is stated in a joint German-Costa Rican communique published today at the conclusion of the visit to Bonn by Costa Rican Foreign Minister Bernd Niehaus Quesada.

The communique says Foreign Ministers Niehaus and Genscher reached agreement in assessing the situation in Central America, particularly El Salvador and Nicaragua. "All available political and economic means should be used in El Salvador to unite and strengthen the democratic forces," it said. "The two ministers agreed in condemning the efforts by communist states to expand, even by nonpeaceful means, their influence in Central America."

The two foreign ministers reached the joint view that cooperation with Nicaragua should be continued "in order to encourage and support democracy." The communique further states that Genscher regards Costa Rica as a country which exerts an important influence on the peoples of Central America.

The German foreign minister promised that Bonn will strive within the European Community for improved cooperation between the EEC and the Central American Common Market. Costa Rica's foreign minister stressed his desire for close cooperation between the EEC and Central America to "strengthen the weakened economies of countries affected by the internal unrest in Central America." At the same time, he expressed his government's desire to set up a European Community mission in San Jose.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON EAST-WEST RELATIONS

LD231025 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 9 Feb 81 p 4

[Per Forslind interview with West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher: "Dialogue With the East Must Not Be Broken Off"--date and place not given]

[Text] "If the stipulations concerning 'confidence-building measures' are not expanded to include the whole of the European part of the Soviet Union, it would be meaningless to hold a European disarmament conference."

Hans-Dietrich Genscher, leader of West Germany's liberal FDP Party and foreign minister in the Bonn government since 1974, stressed this in an interview with SVENSKA DAGBLADET. The West German foreign minister is coming to Stockholm on Monday [9 February] for a 2-day official visit. European security policy and discussions on proposed disarmament conferences will be central in Genscher's talks with Swedish Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten.

Today, there are five different proposals for a European disarmament conference and the various proposals are being investigated at the European security conference's second followup meeting now taking place in Madrid. One of the central questions here is an adjustment to the Helsinki meeting's final document which is intended to extend the area now covered by the so-called confidence-building measures.

The Helsinki participants agreed to give notification of major military maneuvers to other participants at least 21 days in advance. But an exception is made for the Soviet Union which only needs to give advance notification of maneuvers which take place in an area within 250 km of its border with another European state.

Foreign Minister Genscher said that the Helsinki meeting's final document was based on the assumption that security in the whole of Europe is indivisible and that all the participating nations were of equal standing. All participating nations' combat forces stationed in Europe must therefore be subject to the same limitations. To make an exception here for the Soviet Union--Europe's largest military power--and ignore the major part of its European territory would conflict with the aim of the confidence-building measures and could only create new distrust.

Confidence is also geopraphically indivisible, he pointed out, and stressed that the West German Government together with its allies in NATO aheres unshakably to France's proposal for a disarmament conference.

The French proposal requires that the confidence-building measures must be applied across the whole of the European Continent, including the entire European part of the Soviet Union. Without such scope for the confidence-building measures, a disarmament conference could not be able to fulfill its goal. It would be pointless, Genscher said.

The coalition in Bonn between the Social Democrats and the Liberals--which is more than 11 years old--is now undergoing one of the seemingly unavoidable crises for most coalitions. One of the problems is about the question of defense and arms, for the Social Democratic leadership is being subjected to increasingly violent criticism from the party's leftwing groups for its decision to allow nuclear-armed medium-range missiles to be stationed on European territory.

Is there a danger here that the Soviet Union might misjudge the stability of the Western alliance?

Foreign Minister Genscher said he did not think so. The Soviet Union knows that the parties represented in the Bundestag share the government's determination to adhere to the decision and deploy these arms and, in connection with this, negotiate with the Soviet Union on arms limitation, he said.

For this reason, the GDR would be succumbing to an illusion if the East Germans thought that they could affect the decisions on arms that are taken within the Western alliance, the foreign minister said.

As far as West German relations with the GDR are concerned, Genscher said that all attempts to broaden bilateral cooperation are of necessity influenced by the general climate of East-West relations, since the two German states are part of different alliances and social systems.

The foreign minister is very cautious in deciding the extent to which the crisis in Poland has an effect on relations between the two Germanies. But he said that when assessing developments in Poland it is of course of importance whether the Warsaw Pact states continue to refrain strictly from any involvement.

The two German states, he said, have by virtue of their position a special responsibility for actively ensuring peace in Europe. Both should therefore try to realize the Helsinki resolutions to the full and build further on their bilateral cooperation.

Hans-Dietrich Genscher admitted that the international climate has undoubtedly become more difficult and beset by crises. The Afghanistan crisis casts a broad shadow over Europe. We cannot and will not accept it, he said, when asked what was left of the West German Government's Ostpolitik after Afghanistan and Poland.

Especially in politically difficult times, it is an unavoidable requirement that the dialogue between East and West not be broken off but be continued, and that all parties respect the agreements they have entered into. The Bonn government will therefore continue to follow the road along which it has already embarked, since no people in Europe feels more strongly than the Germans the tensions which are due to the fact that the continent is divided.

This is a policy which is now being observed by new eyes in Washington where Ronald Reagan has begun his term with harsh words to the Soviet Union. The new U.S. administration has already caused great embarassment in Bonn through the defense secretary's hint that the United States could reassess its views on neutron bombs in Europe, a statement which the secretary of state later asked his allies to forget.

GENSCHER WEIGHS EEC COOPERATION WITH MIDDLE EAST

[Text] Bonn, 25 Feb (DPA)--The European Community is to be more specific about its offer of participation in a system of international peace guarantees in the Middle East. Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher said in an interview with DPA today that the current contacts of The Netherlands, as acting president of the Community, with Middle East countries also serve this goal.

What the contribution of individual European states would be depends, according to Genscher, "on their different international positions and also on their internal legal system." Genscher indirectly excluded the possibility of German participation in a possible peace force: "The self-limitations which we Germans impose on ourselves are well known."

In the opinion of the foreign minister, a European-Arab foreign ministers' conference, considered desirable according to the EEC Middle East statement issued in Venice last June, must "be prepared very carefully in order to do justice to its importance." Genscher pointed out that both sides agreed last November to an immediate resumption of the practical Euro-Arab dialogue and that the mixed working groups already had started their joint consultations.

Asked about Bonn's attitude toward the PLO, which is currently chairman of the Arab League Council, Genscher replied: "The Federal Government has for a long time supported the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination. It is for them to decide by whom they will be represented in negotiations."

The federal foreign minister announced that the European Community will pursue its offer of comprehensive cooperation to the Arab Gulf states. This involved bilateral agreements and direct contacts with the countries concerned, including Iraq, said Genscher. Baghdad is not one of the group of six Gulf countries which recently agreed on close cooperation between each other in view of political developments in the region.

Genscher said the Federal Government regards with interest the decision to set up a cooperation council of the six Gulf states. The group has not yet fully constituted itself, however, and will probably deal first with questions of internal coordination.

Genscher blamed the 1980 deficit of DM10 billion in the Federal Republic's trade with the Arab states largely on the increases in the price of crude oil. "We will have to fully utilize our economic policy apparatus to reduce the gap between our expenditure on oil imports and our income from exports," the minister said.

In the political field, the Federal Republic could give effective aid to the German economy by strongly pursuing its idea of comprehensive and long-term partnership with the Arab world. "This joint realization--that the well-being of both our regions is closely interrelated--is a good basis for trusting cooperation in all fields, especially economic relations."

REPORT ON SAUDI INTEREST IN TORNADO REAFFIRMED

LD240014 Hamburg DPA in German 1720 GMT 23 Feb 81

[Text] Bonn, 23 Feb (DPA)--The Federal Government, in spite of a denial by the government in Riyadh, continues to believe that Saudi Arabia is interested in buying the Tornado multipurpose combat aircraft developed by the Federal Republic, Great Britain and Italy.

Government Spokesman Kurt Becker told the press in Bonn on Monday that the Federal Republic accepts the account of the British Government. Becker confirmed during the weekend that Riyadh had approached London regarding its interest in the Tornado.

At the Saudi Arabian Ministry of Defense on Monday, press reports were denied when it was announced in the Federal Republic that Saudi Arabia had expressed an interest in buying the aircraft.

DIE WELT ON 'LINKAGE' BETWEEN TANKS, SAUDI OIL

DW201341 Bonn DIE WELT in German 20 Feb 81 p 6

[Commentary signed Kem.: "The Dependence"]

[TExt] One of today's reports actually ought to make the reader shudder with excitement, even if it turns out not to be true. The vision of a linkage between taking care of 40 percent of German oil demands for the next 10 years and supplying German tanks to Saudi Arabia has an apocalyptic quality. This picture becomes particularly impressive if one views the alternative scenario: The government would have to take out of its own hide a substitute for the 40 percent of Saudi oil because its "grassroots" does not want to supply tanks to Saudi Arabia or to build nuclear powerplants. Thus, nothing would obstruct the way back to nature, to the ecology-promoting destruction of the German industrial landscape and the rush into unemployment. The vision of a German tank deal with Saudi Arabia, enforced by oil pressure, is naturally unrealistic and obscene. But it is useful in any case; it casts a clear light on the potential dependence of the decisionmaking structures of German domestic policy on international developments. It demonstrates in a hair-raising way what a grotesque situation, close to being blackmailed, a state, whose "supporting" groups and parties have merely ideological worries with regard to its future, can get into.

SCHMIDT WILL VISIT SAUDI ARABIA IN APRIL OR MAY

[Text] Bonn, 20 Feb (DPA)--Chancellor Schmidt will visit Saudi Arabia in April or May. This approximate date was mentioned by Government Spokesman Becker at a news conference in Bonn today.

Becker also denied reports that the chancellor favors the FRG supplying Saudi Arabia with armored vehicles in the interest of saving jobs. The government spokesman emphasized that the current discussion about German arms exports are concerned with "a question of principle" and not merely with an export permit for German tanks.

Becker once again stressed Bonn's vital interest in "the world's biggest oil-producing region remaining stable and not being subjected to somebody else's will." The cessation of Saudi oil supplies would be a catastrophe for the German economy.

Concerning speculation that Riyadh might link its oil deliveries with the tank deal, the spokesman pointed out that Saudi Arabia only recently concluded a new delivery agreement with the German Veba group without any conditions. The German Veba and UK Wesseling groups have agreements for direct deliveries by Saudi Petromin by passing multinational groups.

SPOKESMAN ON ARMS DEALS WITH CHILE, SAUDI ARABIA

[Excerpt] Bonn, 24 Feb (DPA) --Deputy Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl described a report in DIE WELT about the alleged export of submarines ordered by Chile via U.S. firms as "absurd." Ruehl told DPA that the Federal Government has no plans of this nature.

The decision to grant an export licence is still being studied by the Federal Cabinet. The newspaper reported that Americans were to act as purchasers for the submarines under construction at the Howaldt docks. The U.S. partners then were to sell the German submarines to Chile.

Ruehl stressed that the Federal Government knows nothing about the firm Krauss-Maffei having already placed provisional orders with supply firms for the production of Leopard II tanks to meet an order from Saudi Arabia. DIE WELT carried reports about such orders. The conclusion drawn from this is that the tank manufacturers in Munich are counting on a positive decision from Bonn. According to Ruehl, there is presently no indication or cause to think that the Federal Government's decision will be either positive or negative in this respect. The Federal Government's thorough examination of the weapons export licence policy will continue.

CSU CHAIRMAN FAVORS ARMS EXPORTS TO SAUDI ARABIA

[Text] Bonn, 24 Feb (DPA)--According to Friedrich Zimmermann, chairman of the CSU group, the United States favors export of German tanks to Saudi Arabia. In an interview with the magazine QUICK, Zimmermann called on Schmidt to decide the question of arms export before his planned visit to Saudi Arabia in the spring. Zimmermann said: "The chancellor should not go and then think about it afterwards."

Zimmermann confirmed the magnitude of the recent Saudi interest in armored vehicles from the Federal Republic. It involves 300 Leopard tanks, as well as 1,500 armored personnel carriers and mechanized antiaircraft guns. He emphasized his approval of this export arms deal and called for a long-term agreement on cooperation "with what is for us a vital partner." The Saudis are prepared to supply up to 40 percent of the oil needed in the Federal Republic for 10 years. Over and above the DM10 billion tank deal, they want to buy installations [anlagen] in the Federal Republic for an additional DM10 billion. In addition, the Federal Republic is being offered an unlimited amount of credit.

OFFICIALS COMMENT ON ATTEMPTED COUP IN MADRID

[Excerpt] Bonn, 24 Feb (DPA)--The failure of the attempted coup in Madrid caused great relief on the part of the Federal Government and parties in Bonn, which have followed Spain's road to democracy with sympathy and good feeling. The Federal Government congratulated Spain on successfully foiling the attack on freedom and the constitutional monarchy. Deputy Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl stated that the Federal Government's previously uttered hope, that the new Spanish democracy would not find its constitutional order shaken by this attack but would stand this test of strength, was confirmed.

Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (SPD) said in an interview tieh Deutschlandfunk today: "We all can only hope with all our hearts that the constitutional institutions, particularly the king, will very soon be able to reestablish constitutional order so that Spain can continue along its democratic course."

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE VIEWS BREZHNEV SPEECH

[Commentary signed Ein.: "Brezhnev's Offer"]

[Text] The event was not the outstanding matter. Brezhnev can afford to have somebody else read parts of his basic speech over television. The world will have to carefully analyze individually what the Kremlin chief had to say. Spontaneously, however, one can already say that the general impression is that his invisible discussion partner was Ronald Reagan. The policy of firmness demonstrated by the White House is having its effect. It has been understood in Moscow that this America is no longer the America of Carter. It is out of respect for the new American administration and not as a routine matter that Brezhnev has indicated the wish for a summit meeting. He did so even though Washington has made it clear that such meetings are of no use if they are merely designed to serve as a political show.

One can call this giving in. The slandering of the imperialists, the verbal attacks on the Americans--that is a ritual. Soviet strategy uses the word--like Mao--as a weapon. In reality, however, they are trying to develop the basis on which they want to negotiate with the other nuclear giant. One naturally wants to isolate the other. It is easier to deal with an America that is separated from its friends, than with a Western world power which is simultaneously the leading power of the Atlantic alliance. This was the reason for the verbal offer: the Russian readiness to give up the stationing of SS-20 missiles, if NATO will renounce the deployment of Pershing II missiles and cruise missiles.

Brezhnev suggested that once before. This time, however, the "timing" is better. A restless Europe pressured by leftist ideologists likes to hear such siren songs only too well. The Kremlin need not keep its own promises until the Europeans have made up their minds. This means in practice that the Soviets can calmly continue to build their missiles while the disunited West keeps postponing NATO's dual decision.

This Russian tactic is quite skillful. But betting on the weakness of the Europeans is one thing, predicting the reaction of the Americans is another. Brezhnev has challenged Reagan, intentionally or not. The President will understand that it is now a matter of taking over the leadership in the alliance. If America remains firm its partners will not be able to give in.

FDP LEADER DISCUSSES NEUTRON ISSUE, NATO DECISION

[Text] Bonn, 21 Feb (DPA)--FDP General Secretary Guenter Verheugen has spoken out against the discussion on the introduction of the neutron bomb, newly revived by American Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger. Speaking on Sudwestfunk, Verheugen said on Saturday that a revival of the neutron debate, which would inevitably lead once more to the introduction of irrational elements into the public debate, is not in the German interest.

Verheugen is emphatically in favor of adhering to the twin NATO decision regarding the deployment of new medium-range missiles in Europe and the simultaneous negotiating offer to the Soviet Union, which has caused controversy in the PSD. Anyone jeopardizing this decision or one of its component parts is today in fact jeopardizing the alliance.

The twin decision contains the hitherto first and sole American obligation within the alliance to conduct arms limitation negotiations--an obligation encompassing explicitly European security interests in what is for Europe and the Germans the most important geographic area.

International developments require a general stocktaking within the NATO alliance, Verheugen believes. The clearer and more purposeful the alliance partners' definitions of their concepts, with all due respect to each other, the stronger and more homogenous would be the resultant common policy by the partners. The Federal Republic ought to show in this once again its understanding for the fact that the United States takes on certain strategic tasks to safeguard raw materials in the Gulf region, but should also point out that the FRG considers the demand for extending NATO's precisely defined area of protection a strain on the alliance.

ARMY INSPECTOR DENIES REPORTS ON RESIGNATION

[Text] Bonn, 22 Feb (DPA)--The inspector of the army, Hans Poepeli, has denied newspaper reports that he intends to resign because of possible imminent drastic cuts in the army budget in order to finance the Tornado combat aircraft. Poeppel today told DPA: "I can say that for the time being I will not resign." In addition, he had "first to wait for the closed meeting. I can make no comment at all on anything before this." The closed meeting mentioned by Poeppel is the conference at the Defense Ministry planned for the beginning of March, at which a decision will be reached on arms planning for the coming years.

BILD AM SONNTAG and WELT AM SONNTAG had reported on Peoppel's alleged intention to resign. BILD AM SONNTAG reported that Poeppel made an announcement to this effect in an interview with Munich journalists. The army inspector states that he had no interview with Munich journalists nor has he spoken to others about resignation.

The WELT AM SONNTAG report stated that in the army alone by 1985 there will be a shortage of almost DM7 billion for previously planned projects. This emerged from a "secret explanatory report" on the defense budget. Particularly affected by the cuts are newly-developed tanks and antitank weapons.

FOREIGN MINISTER SUPPORTS EAST-WEST SUMMIT

[Excerpt] Leonid Brezhnev's wink in the direction of the West apparently has been well received by the Americans. The Soviet number one made an appeal for dialogue and implicitly proposed a summit soon with President Reagan. General Haig called this a very interesting suggestion. The head of American foreign affairs had, in fact, just held nearly 5 hours of talks with his opposite number Jean Francois-Poncet. The French minister also picked out the Soviet number one's wish for dialogue, in favor of a summit conference. He stated at Bertrand Vannier's microphone: France has been proposing this for a long time, but not to the detriment of Europe.

[Begin Francois-Poncet recording] France has relations at different levels, including at summit level, with the Soviet Union. It is quite natural for the United States to have similar relations. This naturally does not mean that the problems affecting France or those which could affect the destiny of Europe can be dealt with by the United States and the Soviet Union in the absence of the European side. I believe that one must see that bilateral summits are useful but that at a certain stage, as the president of the republic has proposed, a broader conference will be necessary to achieve the stabilization of East-West relations which appears to us to be quite necessary. [end recording]

DEFENSE MINISTER VIEWS U.S.-NATO RELATIONS

[Unattributed report: "Lagorio: 'West Really Is Weaker'"]

[Text] Rome--The opening of military careers to women, international terrorist connections and the Reagan administration's relations with its NATO allies are the subjects discussed by Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio in an interview with the weekly OGGI. "I believe that the new U.S. President will urge a greater commitment from all the allied countries," the defense minister says, explaining, however, that "there is no room for impositions in the Atlantic alliance; no country has limited sovereignty. Therefore, the United States can make proposals, but no more."

With regard to Reagan as an individual, Lagorio observes: "Yes, he is brusque, perhaps too much so. But it must be borne in mind that the U.S. President is grappling with a major problem--the general weakening of the West, in relation to which the Warsaw Pact has not even considered responding by reducing its own forces, but has increased them." The minister asserts that "if we want detente and East-West disarmament we must negotiate, and to succeed in negotiations you must have good cards in your hand. It would be good for everybody if we were to establish a better balance among the forces at large."

With regard to womens' military service Lagorio announces that the Center for Higher Military Studies will hand him its proposals in this connection at the end of February: "I believe that by June I will be able to submit a bill to the Council of Ministers." The minister explains that "it will not be an obligatory draft service or a special closed womens' corps, with its own generals, officers and troops. I have in mind rather the opening of military careers to women, in the same way as they are now open to men."

With regard to international terrorist connections, Lagorio says that whoever "invokes proof is mistaking politics for a legal trial. A judge needs proof to make an arrest. In politics it is different; even an allegation can carry enormous weight."

'DIPLOMACY 80 GROUP' HITS POLICYMAKING MACHINERY

[Text] Rome--Heir to what in the seventies was called the "Democratic Farnesina," "Diplomacy 80" now constitutes the most vigorous "critical current" within the Italian Foreign Ministry and is perhaps the group that views most lucidly the problem of how to pursue a less lazy and conventional foreign policy than the kind pursued by Italian governments in recent decades.

It mainly comprises young officials belonging to the so-called "leftwing area," among whom a clear impatience has emerged with the methods (or rather lack of method) of our diplomatic action. Indeed, its small magazine (also called DIPLOMATIA 80) is very polemical with regard to interference in the country's foreign policy by parties and other pressure groups, and even more polemical with regard to the inertia with which the Foreign Ministry's executive bodies have now adjusted to such interference.

We put some questions to the Diplomacy 80 Group concerning the ministry's internal situation and the trends in our international action.

In Forlani's reply to Parliament following the debate on foreign terrorist centers, a clear, if not indeed glaring shift in foreign policy was apparent. The analysis of an aggressive and expansionist Soviet Union seemed almost identical to the one outlined by the new U.S. administration, while the relationship with the "balanced" position of the major European partners seemed weaker.

[Question] To what extent was our Foreign Ministry involved in this change of course?

[Answer] We say that as a structure (namely, the services that should provide a picture of, reports on and information about the implications of the international situation) it was not involved at all. The Foreign Ministry is now an extremely fragmented body--an agglomeration of groups and substructures which operate in complete detachment from the ministry's two principal mechanisms, the Executive Center and the peripheral network of diplomatic missions. Consequently, what little foreign policy we do formulate takes shape within the network of ministerial cabinets, subcabinets, diplomatic counsellors, personal advisers or shadowy figures distributed among the president's office, the prime minister's office, and certain other ministry buildings--the whole closely linked with the parties and other, primarily economic, pressure groups.

[Question] So who does what, and how, at the Foreign Ministry?

[Answer] Some work is done by the minister's office. But the plans which it draws up are merely fragmentary and above all detached, as I said before, from the ministry's real structures. Then they are touched up by various people (some ambassadors, a few high-level officials), none of whom acts in accordance with his formal functions but in a purely personal relationship with the minister and his office. The result is that a greater influence is exerted on important issues by certain channels parallel to the diplomatic structure, ranging from the prime minister's office to the National Hydrocarbons Agency--to give two examples--then by ministry officials. This was entirely apparent in the case of our treaty with Malta....

[Question] What were the agents that led the Italian Government to offer economic and defense guarantees for Malta's neutrality?

[Answer] This decision too was taken in circles outside the Foreign Ministry. At the time, the fact that we were shouldering the burden of a binding guarantee of Maltese neutrality might have seemed like an isolated freak event in national policy. In fact, inspiration for the move came from outside, probably from Washington. In fact, the initial plan was quite different: the guarantee of Malta's neutrality should have stemmed from a joint commitment by Italy, France, Algeria and Libya. At one point this plan was abandoned and was replaced by a real hodgepodge--a guarantee of defense too burdensome for us and an excessive economic undertaking for a single country, when it is known that our policy of cooperation with developing countries is certainly not as strong as it should be.

[Question] What are the consequences of this state of affairs within the ministry?

[Answer] The officials' frustration at the repeated forms of interference and the fragmentary nature of the decisions and plans eventually diminishes the motivation of even the most committed. The reaction is a depressing one--a diminished attention to what is happening outside and an exacerbation of the internal struggle for the allocation of a few privileges. An extraordinary amount of effort is wasted in this struggle--all for the sake of the post of minister counsellor or ambassador to London, which is famous as the capital where there is the least work to do.

DEFENSE MINISTER ON NUCLEAR WEAPONS DEPLOYMENT

[Text] Defense Minister Azevedo Coutinho yesterday told the parliamentary committee at Sao Bento Palace that the government is currently not in favor of the deployment of nuclear weapons in Portugal. In his statement during that committee's proceedings, Azevedo Coutinho also stated that he is convinced that the plan concerning a possible request for facilities for the stationing of a U.S. aircraft carrier in Portugal has been dropped. The minister recalled that with the joint authorization of the government and of the armed forces general staff, a team of experts visited Portugal in 1980 to study possible bases for a U.S. aircraft carrier.

PCP SECRETARY GENERAL ON CONSTITUTIONAL REVISION

[Text] The PCP will advocate the institutionalization of the military personnel's role in political life, thus preventing the "governmentalization" of the armed forces. In this connection PCP will submit three proposals to the Assembly of the Republic aimed at the setting up of a constitutional court, of another body to function on a consultative basis vis-a-vis the president of the republic and of a third body, headed by the head of state and including the chiefs of staff, which will be assigned regulatory and administrative duties with respect to the armed forces.

These stances were disclosed yesterday by PCP leader Alvaro Cunhal during a meeting with journalists to inform them of the guidelines issued by his party's Central Committee with respect to the revision of the constitution, and which also point toward direct opposition to any attempts to provide "cover" for the "unlawful conduct of the Democratic Alliance government and of its majority."

Moreover, the legitimacy of the present government is disputed by the PCP, which suggests its dismissal and the formation of a new government, which "is only possible" with the Communists' participation. Alvaro Cunhal also believes that the present parliamentary majority "has lost its previous electoral, social and political basis," citing in support of this assertion the results of the 7 December election. Because the Democratic Alliance "does not represent the Portuguese peoples choice and political will," the PCP leader believes that "the holding of an interim election in the more or less near future" is necessary.

In addition, talking about the international situation, Alvaro Cunhal rejected the hypothesis of a Soviet intervention in Poland, emphasizing that "the crisis is grave, but the Poles are in a position to resolve it internally, despite the fact that the situation is being exploited by all the external forces interested in combating socialism."

In the PCP secretary general's opinion, "those who are talking about intervention are the people who most strongly oppose the policy of detente, seeking to reap political dividends and create conditions for the exacerbation of the international situation."

Army Major Arrested

LD241730 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 24 Feb 81

[Text] An army major has been arrested in connection with the incident in the congress, according to reliable sources quoted by EUROPA PRESS. The major involved arrived last night at the congress building leading a convoy of military police. Then he went into the building with the police and their vehicles. The sources say that the man involved is an army major belonging to the staff of the Brunete Armored Division to which the military police belongs, but he had no direct command over the forces of the military police. Inside the congress, the major spoke with Lieutenant Colonel Tejero and decided to remain inside the building, leaving the military police practically leaderless. Apparently the arrested major is married and has nine children.

Sources close to the Ministry of Defense told EUROPA PRESS that by Tuesday afternoon this was the only arrest of a military officer to have occurred, although the possibility of more arrests once the legal investigation starts is not being discounted. [Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish at 1900 GMT on 24 February reports that "Infantry Major Ricardo Pardo Zancada is the army officer who was arrested this afternoon in connection with the assault on the Congress of Deputies building."]

[Text] The Bulgarian parliamentary delegation that is on an official visit to Cyprus has reiterated Bulgaria's support for the Cypriot people's struggle.

In a statement made today, after the delegation's meeting with House President Mikhailidhis, Bonev, head of the delegation and chairman of the Bulgarian National Assembly, stressed that his country is in favor of a just solution to the Cypriot problem. With such a solution, Bonev added, the preservation of independence, territorial integrity and the nonalignment of the Republic of Cyprus must be safeguarded. The chairman of the Bulgarian National Assembly also praised the friendly relations between Cyprus and Bulgaria and stressed his country's interest for peace and cooperation in the Balkans, Eastern Mediterranean, Europe and the world.

House President Milhailidhis stated that during the meeting there was an exchange of views on closer parliamentary cooperation between Cyprus and Bulgaria. Mikhailidhis also briefed the Bulgarian delegation on developments in the Cypriot issue, and explained the serious difficulties being confronted in the intercommunal dialogue. Mikhailidhis added that he expressed the respect and gratitude of the Cypriot people toward the government and people of Bulgaria for their firm support in the Cyprus struggle. The president of the republic expressed to Bonev the Cypriot people's gratitude for Bulgaria's consistent support in their struggle for freedom and vindication. He also referred to the close relations between Bulgaria and Cyprus, stressing that cooperation between them was being developed satisfactorily in all sectors.

Referring to the Cypriot issue, Kiprianou said that the government exerted every possible effort for a peaceful solution to the problem. However, he added, there is unfortunately no indication whatsoever of a change in Turkey's stance, which continues to be intransigent. He said: We will continue our efforts and the dialogue until we secure a just solution to our problem.

Bonev conveyed a warm message of friendship from Bulgarian President Zhivkov to Kiprianou, stressing that the parliamentary delegation's visit would contribute to the further development of friendly ties between Cyprus and Bulgaria. Bonev also reaffirmed his country's position on the Cypriot issue, which, as he stressed, remained unchanged. Bulgaria, he said, supports a just and peaceful solution to the problem and a united, independent and nonaligned Cyprus. He also said that the Greek and Turkish Cypriots must be left to settle the domestic problem by themselves without foreign interference.

The Bulgarian parliamentary delegation, which is on an official visit to Cyprus following a House of Representatives' invitation, was accompanied by Bulgarian Ambassador Bochev.

TALKS SLOWED BY PENDING ELECTIONS IN NORTH

NC230935 Nicosia I DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek 23 Feb 81 p 1

[Text] The intercommunal talks have been conclusively placed on ice. They have been virtually put off in view of the elections Denktas is preparing in the occupied areas. The Turkish Cypriot interlocutor, Onan, personally told our representative, Yeoryios Ioannidhis, that there is absolutely no prospect for any further fundamental discussion during the preelection period.

Onan also told Ioannidhis at their last meeting that: 1. The Turkish side is in no position to submit any proposal on any issue.

2. The severe competition between the Turkish Cypriot parties in itself makes any agreement on specific issues impossible, even if such an agreement were reached.

The elections in the occupied areas will be held under normal conditions in June, which means:

--The intercommunal talks are virtually postponed or will be continued only formally, and they will enter a fundamental phase only during the second half of 1981.

The United Nations has been briefed on the prevailing situation, and it is now seeking ways to close the gap that has been created. In the end, it is quite likely that a postponement will be announced. It is most likely, however, that meetings will continue, even if only to discuss procedural matters. Of most importance is that after June, when the talks will be restarted, we will once again be faced with the dilemma of whether the Cyprus issue should or should not be placed before the UN General Assembly.

HURRIYET Report on Talks

[Ziya Akcapar report]

[Excerpts] Nicosia, (HURRIYET)--As a result of the tough and intransigent attitude of the Greek Cypriots toward the "varosha" and the "practical measures" issues, the intercommunal talks have reached a deadlock. However, thanks to a new method suggested by the Turkish Cypriot negotiator, some progress has been made on the constitutional issue, which is in fact the most difficult aspect of the Cypriot dispute.

At the intercommunal meeting held yesterday at the UN-controlled Ledra Palace Motel, Turkish Cypriot Negotiator Umit Onan stated that the constitutional views expressed by both sides were now open, and added that a new approach was essential.

Starting from the fact that the federation should be a biregional, bicommunal federal republic, the Turkish Cypriot proposals stress these points:

1. The federal legislative organ should be composed of a 30-member federal assembly. Turkish and Greek Cypriots should be equally represented and decisions should be unanimously taken.

3. The head of the federal state should be elected from among the six-member federal council for 1 year on a rotating basis.

4. If decisions at the federal council are not taken unanimously and if the divergencies cannot be eliminated, the 30-member senate should undertake arbitration. The federal senate should be composed of 15 Turkish Cypriots and 15 Greek Cypriots.

At yesterday's session, the Greek Cypriots also advanced similar views on matters concerning the fundamental structure of the state, but they appeared to oppose numerical equilibrium, suggesting different ratios.

According to the proposals of the Greek Cypriot side:

1. The federal assembly should be composed of 12 Turkish and 48 Greek Cypriots.

2. The federal council, which in essence is the central executive organ, should be composed of 40 members, 8 Turkish Cypriots and 32 Greek Cypriots.

3. The head and deputy head of the state should be directly elected by the voters.

4. If a senate has to be formed, its representation should be 25 percent Turkish Cypriot and 75 percent Greek Cypriot.

It was decided at yesterday's session to adjourn the intercommunal talks for a week.

DRAMA INCIDENT CONSIDERED CLOSED BY GOVERNMENT

NC241541 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 24 Feb 81 p 1

[Text] The government considers the question regarding the U.S. provocation at Drama as "closed." It also appears to be satisfied with the U.S. Embassy assurances that the events were due to a "misunderstanding by junior officers." It is also considered certain that the questions arising from this unacceptable U.S. action were discussed during President Karamanlis' meeting yesterday with Defense Minister Averof. In this connection, a communique released by the Office of the President of the Republic simply says that Mr Averof briefed Mr Karamanlis "on questions concerning his jurisdiction."

In the meantime, both the government and the U.S. Embassy have declined to comment on the reports carried by Sunday's TO VIMA that the Americans who carried out the exercise at Drama are guarding nuclear arms in Greece. Yesterday the government spokesman simply recalled a past statement by the defense minister that "whatever we say about the existence or nonexistence of nuclear arms in Greece, the national interests would be harmed."

Although no answer was given to questions about the exercise of control over the activities of U.S. military forces outside the four well-known bases, the negotiations on the status of these bases are being resumed today at the Foreign Ministry. Yesterday a government source assured TO VIMA that the incident at Drama strengthens the Greek side in its demand to considerably reduce the activities associated with the U.S. bases in Greece.

KKE-Interior Comments

[Text] Despite U.S. attempts to play down the Drama provocation, it remains a clear violation of our national sovereignty and it points up the serious responsibilities of the government for the uncontrolled actions by the Americans on Greek territory.

The above was stressed, among other things, in formal inquery submitted to the Chamber of Deputies yesterday by KKE-Interior parliamentary spokesman Mr L. Kirkos. He asked the foreign minister and national defense minister: "Why does the government--through its entire policy (reintegration into NATO, persistence on maintaining bases, and so forth)--create the prerequisites for the violation of our sovereign rights and the uncontrolled actions of the Americans."

Meanwhile, yesterday the government refrained from confirming or denying that the platoon that carried out the "antinuclear exercise" in the center of Drama belongs to the U.S. 558th Artillery unit" with headquarters at Elevsis airport, and that the platoon's mission is "to guard (at Drama) nuclear shells on Greek territory."

The government has also refrained from commenting on yesterday's reports in ELEVTHEROTIPIA that nuclear arms are stored by the Americans at Elevsis, Araxos, Tanagra and elsewhere. Answering a question, a government spokesman confined himself to recalling the national defense minister's statement that every confirmation or denial of reports about the existence of nuclear arms in Greece "is detrimental to national interests."

TA NEA SEES NATO PRESSURE IN 'NEORION' DECISION

NC241256 Athens TA NEA in Greek 23 Feb 81 p 16

[Excerpts] It appears that the government, under NATO pressure, is changing the basis of its agreement concluded with the Soviets to repair commercial and Soviet Navy auxiliary vessels in Neorion on Siros Island.

In view of the signing of the new agreement, the previous one expired in December, Greece's proposal precludes repairs being made on Soviet Navy warships. It is not yet known whether the Soviets will accept the Greek proposals, but it is almost certain that they have expressed disappointment over the proposed new agreement.

Certain diplomatic observers do not preclude the fact that the change in the Greek stance on the Neorion issue is owing to NATO and U.S. suggestions, as they were always discontented with the "facilities" that Greece granted to the Soviets to repair their vessels at a Greek shipyard. It appears that this discontent was strengthened after Greece's entry into NATO.

A government source questioned last night affirmed the report that the Greek side has proposed to the Soviets the repair of only commercial vessels at Neorion.

MITSOTAKIS, FRANCOIS-PONCET TO MEET IN PARIS

NC241635 Athens NEWS in English 24 Feb 81 p 4

[Text] Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis will make an official visit to Paris at the invitation of his French counterpart in early March, ministry sources said Monday. They said that besides discussing bilateral and international issues, Mitsotakis will also express to Francois-Poncet the Greek Government's views of Greek-Turkish relations.

The Greek-Turkish question in relation to France arose following talks between France and Turkey in Paris earlier this month, during which Paris reportedly agreed to offer extensive military aid to Ankara. Mitsotakis is expected to put over the Greek Government's view that a ratio of six to ten should be maintained between Greece and Turkey respectively in all aid given by France and other European countries, the sources said.

The issue of the balance of power in the Aegean is one on which Athens is very sensitive and the longstanding differences between the neighboring NATO countries have brought them to the brink of war at least twice in the last six years. They are at odds over airspace and seabed rights in the Aegean and the thorny issue of the divided island of Cyprus. The Greek Government has shown intense interest in the terms agreed on between the French and the Turks but has so far made no official move, the sources said. They added that during his visit Mitsotakis is expected to attempt to ascertain the amount of aid which Paris has agreed to give to Ankara.

AVEROF INTERVIEWED ON RELATIONS WITH TURKEY

NC241857 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 22 Feb 81 pp 1, 11

[Interview granted by Greek Defense Minister Evangelos Averof to HURRIYET correspondent Cem Basar in Athens--date and place not given]

[Text] Question: Successive developments such as the change of administration in Iran, the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, Iran's provocation of the United States by holding U.S. diplomats as hostages, the Iranian-Iraqi conflict, and the Polish issue which may explode at any moment, have created certain perils in the region where Turkey and Greece live as neighbors, complicating relations between the two countries. How can the present atmosphere of distrust, which is capable of paralyzing Turkish-Greek relations, be dispersed?

Answer: You are presenting this issue in its correct perspective. Despite the Helsinki conference and the peace and disarmament talks, the international horizon seems to be fraught with more dangers than most periods of the cold war. Let us not forget that since then, several regional wars have broken out, leaving behind rancour, and changing large areas of the map.

Meanwhile, a new problem, the energy problem, has shaken the economy of both big and small countries. Under the circumstances, cooperation between Greece and Turkey becomes more imperative than ever before. To achieve this, the atmosphere of distrust must, as you have rightly put it, be eliminated. As this is a sensitive and complicated issue, it tends to provoke the peoples on both sides of the Aegean. However, it is difficult to say how this situation can be resolved. At present, it is extremely difficult for me to provide an urgent answer to your question.

Question: Certain unfortunate developments have pushed Turkish-Greek relations into a deadlock. Only those who wish to hurl Turkey and Greece over the precipice stand to benefit from such a situation. In that case, can't the two countries dissociate "strategy" from "diplomacy" and create a "joint defense force" by welding their armed forces within or outside the framework of NATO? If this is possible, what are the tasks that both sides should undertake?

Answer: This has already begun to materialize. Though not completely adequate, there is an undeniable softening in the atmosphere. The complete separation of the "military" propositions from the "political" ones is not plausible. These two elements are so interlinked by nature that they cannot be dissociated. Under the circumstances, we must try to create the best possible defense force.

Question: Is is possible for Turkey and Greece to reach an understanding on the solution of their defense cooperation problems? What do Turkey and Greece stand to gain from such an agreement?

Answer: I cannot imagine how a defense agreement conducive to the "settlement of the disputes and other problems" between the two countries can be concluded. At the moment, we do have a defense agreement under NATO. Cooperation within the framework of the NATO alliance, could, for various reasons, be just as useful as other alliances for the "settlement of disputes."

Question: Turkey and Greece are making every possible effort to maintain good relations with their Balkan neighbors. However, how much can we depend on our Balkan neighbors who are pursuing a course which is ideologically different? In the event of a war between the East and West, who will be on whose side? Aren't there eyes that covet Greece's territory as much as they covet Turkey's territory? In that case, can't Turkey and Greece, as two neighbors cherishing identical ideologies, be farsighted enough to make certain preparations?

Answer: You are approaching the issue from the right angle. Greece has indeed established very good relations with its northern neighbors; the ideological differences do not bother us. These relations have been developed to such an extent that it is not likely that our neighbors would attack us on their own volition. However, as you have stated, no one can possibly guess beforehand how things will develop if the two worlds become involved in an ideological war. Therefore, in addition to our great defense resources based on our old and new fortifications, we are also part of the NATO alliance which would go into action in the event of an extensive war.

Question: Since the issues between Turkey and Greece are of a technical nature, resolving them may take time. Neither side has gained anything in the past 6 years spent in disagreement. If this state of affairs persists, not only will the damage increase, but the artificial atmosphere of enmity will poison the peoples of both countries who are in reality friendly to each other. Is it not possible, we wonder, for the "politicians" of both sides to refrain from indulging in demagoguery, at least for the sake of the territorial integrity of their countries and the security of their peoples?

Answer: You are absolutely right. As the issue concerns our peoples, it is serious and multilateral. I refrained from dwelling on it when you asked your first question, but we must dwell on it now. We must decide on what kind of solution we can find. I feel courageous enough to give you a general answer. First, I believe that we should abandon the idea that we can resolve all or the major part of our differences in a short time. If a package deal on very sensitive issues fails to produce a positive result in a few months or in 1 or 2 years, it is futile then to expect this package deal to be successful at all. But a long and sterile period of expectation is perilous. We must, therefore, advance step by step.

Second, for such a gradual success, both sides must establish those points on which they believe a compromise solution is possible, leaving behind those points on which they feel they cannot retreat. There may be forms of settlement which may appear palatable to one side and unpalatable to the other. Such issues can be referred to a predetermined arbitration. In the event of such a realization, we need to make a start which would be worth celebrating. We can then proceed to resolve other issues in an improved atmosphere and with a newly-born confidence. At this moment, I have only provided the general outlines of a method. I am confident that many issues can be resolved only through arbitration. However, we must, above all, realize that friendly relations are essential for our countries and we must tackle this situation with courage, realism and patience and by refraining from demagoguery.

Meets With Turkmen

TA241630 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1545 GMT 24 Feb 81

[Excerpt] Ankara, 24 Feb (AA)--The members of the Western European Union (WEU) assembly, currently in Ankara, called on Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen today.

Addressed by Evren

TA241750 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 24 Feb 81

[Excerpts] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren has said that Turkey considers itself an integral part of democratic and free Europe and wants to remain so. He made this statement today during an address to a Western European Union [WEU] assembly delegation which he received at the offices of the chief of the General Staff in Ankara. In his address, General Evren said that democracy was paralyzed in Turkey prior to the 12 September operation.

Explaining work undertaken since 12 September, General Evren said: As we promised, since the very first day we took over, we have been determined to restore real democracy in the country. Let there be no doubt about the fact that we shall turn over power to a democratically elected new administration. All our work is planned and programmed and the scheduling is being carried out according to that plan and program.

General Evren continued: During our investigations on allegations of torture it was determined that some of them were unfortunately true, and legal action was immediately taken against those responsible.

The general concluded his statement as follows: We are expecting our friends to trust us and to assist us in the restoration of democracy in Turkey. Turkey is an integral part of democratic and free Europe and intends to remain so. I am convinced that you will appreciate that this cannot be achieved only by our own efforts and that you will exert efforts in a constructive way.

VOTCP CARRIES TCP STATEMENT ON U.S. POLICY

TA210910 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 21 Feb 81

[Statement by the Central Committee of the Turkish Communist Party]

[Text] The most aggressive circles of imperialism, led by the new U.S. administration, are exerting efforts to intensify international tension and to follow a policy of confrontation with the socialist countries. The United States is imposing on Western Europe its new nuclear missiles. In addition to all this, the Reagan administration is announcing its plans to develop the neutron bomb and deploy it in the countries of Western Europe. In socialist Poland, the imperialist circles are inciting the counterrevolutionary centers and are encouraging them. In a bid to broaden NATO's area of influence, the Pentagon has put its rapid deployment force--established for an eventuality in the Gulf area--under the command of NATO Commander in Chief General Rogers. The expansionist U.S. circles are planning to create a bloc in our region by the participation of reactionary countries in the Middle East. It is by such efforts that they are undermining peace and security in Europe and in our region.

As usual, the imperialists are trying to hide their aggressive and hostile policies under a smokescreen of an uproar of anti-Sovietism and anticommunism, by distorting the facts and by trying to justify their own stands. The CIA and other imperialist centers are supporting armed aggression against the nationalist liberation movements, and the fascist and leftist terror groups in capitalist countries.

They are also arming the counterrevolutionaries, and then are attempting to accuse the Soviet Union of inciting terrorism. They try to describe as terrorist the national liberation movements in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

The United States and the ruling circles of NATO are intensifying their policies of pressure and blackmail on Turkey. This stand was more obvious when Turkey opposed Israel's expansionist efforts. Disregarding our national pride, 69 U.S. senators grossly intervened in our internal affairs, asking in a letter that Ankara change its stand toward Israel and inviting it to join in efforts for the establishment of an aggressive bloc between Egypt and Israel. Haig as well as Luns are forcing Ankara to involve Turkey in imperialist plans in the Gulf. Provocative NATO military exercises are being carried out on Turkey's border with the Soviet Union. Speaking on behalf of NATO [Turkish] General Guneral fuels anti-Sovietism in his statements. All this gross policy of pressure and blackmail is directed at linking Turkey more tightly with imperialism, at using Turkish soil as an aggressive area against its neighboring countries, and at undermining Turkey's good relations with its neighboring countries.

The persistent social and economic crises in our country, are creating a very dangerous climate that can be exploited by the expansionist imperialist circles in a bid to achieve their aims. The approval by the ruling National Security Council of the bilateral slavery agreement signed with the United States and the way it is shamefully begging for aid from imperialists are great obstacles to Turkey's pursuing a dignified and independent foreign policy.

In spite of the fact that a number of officials and militants have been detained, the Nationalist Action Party [NAP] followers are preserving their positions within the armed forces and the state machinery. There are circles that are actively supporting them. The reactionary press is fueling an anti-Soviet and anticommunist campaign. Heavy pressure and terror are being exercised on anti-imperialist and democratic forces. These developments are making it easier for the imperialists to dominate our country.

Washington is trying to fortify the most reactionary and pro-American forces within the armed forces and the junta and their followers in a bid to disrupt the Turkish policy tendencies toward a more realistic policy based on commonsense.

In a provocative statement, the Italian president accused the Soviet Union and the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] with being involved in terrorism. This was followed by terrorist attacks directed at [Turkish] officers. These were efforts to cover up the junta's antidemocratic pressures; the blood-stained savage tortures; the cruelties of the counter-revolutionaries, CIA and the National Intelligence Organization [MIT] and the existence of the fascist NAP as well as to justify oppression and to distract public attention from terrorism.

As has been announced on several occasions, the TCP opposes terrorism. Terrorism is definitely incompatible with Marxism-Leninsim and the lofty ideals for which the communists wage a struggle. In fact, not only communists but all democratic forces--led by the class trade unions--as well as workers' parties and progressive intellectuals that oppose terror, are under heavy pressures from the military. The TCP is struggling aginst these pressures. It wants to eliminate the centers that incite terrorism. An end must be put to subservience to imperialism if the sources of terror are to be eradicated. To this end, reaction must be eliminated and substantial and democratic changes must be devised. It is to this end that the TCP is waging its struggle. The TCP is appealing to all anti-imperialist and democratic forces for unity of action in a bid to curb imperialist pressures on Turkey, to weaken the position of the most reactionary and pro-imperialist forces within and outside the junta, to isolate them and to move toward democracy.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee. 19 February 1981.

U.S. ECONOMIC POLICY SEEN DAMAGING INDUSTRY

LD241659 Brussels LE SOIR in French 20 Feb 81 pp 1,7

[Marc Rozen article: "Belgian Industry Affected by the 'Shock' Program Proposed by Reagan"]

[Text] Reduction in the federal budget, tax cuts, severe cuts in the social budgets, increase in military spending, greater control over the money supply; these are the main points in the economic program put forward by President Reagan with a view to reviving the U.S. economy.

The consequences of this "shock" program for the European countries, particularly Belgium, are generally negative on the monetary and also the industrial plane.

It is primarily at monetary level that the Reagan effect will most cruelly be felt. Indeed, the President has asked the Federal Reserve (the U.S. central bank) to reduce the money supply at any cost, giving carte blanche to its Chairman Mr Volcker, who has several times stressed the need for high interest rates. The level of those rates has already caused the dollar's recent strength, which is having repercussions on the stock exchanges. In this latest report the Belgian National Bank complained about the constraints which these U.S. rates are placing on the level, which it regards as too high, of lending rates in our country. Indeed, the high price of credit is having a negative effect on domestic investment.

Nonetheless the National Bank experts think that the U.S. interest rate level is not having a negative influence on the Belgian inflation rate.

In addition, the new U.S. image which Reagan's measures are expected to create--a great, strong, hard-working and competitive country--should attract international capital to the United States in search of profitable investment, notably in the form of long-term investments. Belgian enterprises with an international vocation which are already present in the United States (Bekaert, Solvay, Union Miniere) should increase their presence on the other side of the Atlantic at the (further) expense of domestic investment, which is already inadequate.

Tax deductions for depreciation, a gift from the President to the business world, should increase companies' net profits and encourage them to invest, especially in foreign countries. But in view of its high labor costs Belgium seems in a poor position to attract these new investments. For some years the Americans have been markedly reducing their job creating investment in the industrialized countries.

Reagan's economic program should also result in a considerable return to protectionism in the United States. "A sound domestic economic policy is the only precondition for a sound policy on the international plane," the President states--a remark which should worry our exporters. Belgian sales to the United States (glass, carpets, special steels), encouraged by the dollar's rise would certainly be penalized by the protectionist commercial measures which might be introduced by the new administration, which takes less of a free trade line than the previous administration.

As can be seen, the Americans are not the only ones gnashing their teeth at their President's tough remedies.

GOVERNMENT RESPONDS TO BREZHNEV'S PROPOSALS

LD251508 Hamburg DPA in German 1436 GMT 25 Feb 81

[Text] Bonn, 25 Feb (DPA)--The German Federal Government rejects a "freezing" of medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe because of the existing Soviet superiority but would, however, welcome a stop to the production and deployment of these weapons in the Soviet Union as "useful for future negotiations."

This was announced by Government Spokesman Kurt Becker today following the cabinet session as the Federal Government's statement on the recent proposls by Soviet state and party leader Leonid Brezhnev.

The Federal Government gave the reason for Bonn's counterproposal for a unilateral Soviet halt to deployment as being that, according to the West's information, there are at present 200 SS-20 missiles stationed in the Soviet Union, each of which has three targeted nuclear warheads. There are also 450 SS-4 and SS-5 medium-range missiles. "These approximately 1,050 Eurostrategic nuclear warheads are largely targeted on West Europe," says the statement. "NATO has no counterbalance to these in West Europe. No consideration can be given to consolidating this imbalance."

According to Becker, however, Bonn welcomes the readiness expressed by Brezhnev to continue arms control talks, particularly the SALT talks on limiting strategic arms, and to include the entire West European region of the Soviet Union in a zone for confidence-building measures. The government also regards in a positive light the readiness for talks expressed by U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Washington's intention of consulting with its European allies.

The Federal Government's reply goes on to say that Bonn continues to abide by the 1979 NATO twin decision which provides for the stationing of a total of 572 U.S. medium-range weapons in Europe and at the same time proposes negotiations with the SOviet Union on a mutual limitation of medium-range systems in Europe at the lowest possible level.

In connection with its counterproposal for a stop to the Soviet deployment, Bonn pointed out that NATO's twin decision did not plan for the installation of Western systems before the end of 1983. The Bonn government expects U.S.-USSR talks on establishing a balance of medium-range weapons to be continued as soon as possible.

Regarding Brezhnev's demand that the zone for confidence-building measures be extended on the Western side if the entire European area of the Soviet Union is included in such a zone, Becker said that this raised the question as to what the term "further West" means. The Federal Government, together with its allies, will try to obtain clarification at the CSCE conference in Madrid. Becker said that the Western allies will have to hold a series of bilateral consultations to form their opinion on Brezhnev's proposals. No Western summit meeting has been broached. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt had a telephone conversation on Tuesday evening with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

In the view of Manfred Woerner, vice chairman of the CDU/CSU Parliamentary Group, the West should spell out forthwith its ideas for disarmament in the field of medium-range weapons and thus seize the initiative for negotiations with the Soviet Union. This initiative should include a request to the Soviets to stop at once the production and deployment of its SS-20 missiles. The gradual reduction of the Soviet lead in arms should be demanded. The various steps in this process must be verifiable.

The FDR today welcomed the Federal Government's statement on Brezhnev's latest proposals. FDP spokesman Josef Gerwald said that it showed clarity and firmness on matters of substance and a desire for talks, negotiations and cooperation. That applies particularly to the stopping of the excessive Soviet medium-range missile buildup which Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has repeatedly called for since 1979.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON SPAIN, BREZHNEV SPEECH

DW251344 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0618 GMT 24 Feb 81

[Excerpts from reporter Krawitz interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Reports from Spain have naturally created worry. How do you assess the situation?

[Answer] We have observed with great sympathy the beginnings of the young Spanish democracy and we have supported the path to democracy through our readiness to accept Spain into the European Community. All of us can only hope from the bottom of our hearts that the constitutional institutions and particularly the king will succeed very quickly in reestablishing constitutional law and order, permitting Spain to continue on its democratic path.

[Question] Two essentials seem to have come about at the 26th CPSU congress. First, the readiness to have a summit meeting and second, the moratorium on medium-range arms. Would you welcome the Europeans advising their American partner to hold a summit meeting between Reagan and Brezhnev?

[Answer] Actually, I see three important elements in that speech. First, Brezhnev reacted positively to the West's readiness--which has been stressed repeatedly lately--regarding talks, negotiations and cooperation. Such an atmosphere of talks can have only a stabilizing effect in the current difficult international situation. I believe that the statement the American President made in the presence of the federal chancellor and myself last fall, namely, that he would devote whatever time is needed when it comes to negotiations on disarmament, demonstrates that Washington sees very clearly the necessity to negotiate and that it will do so.

The second important element of the speech is that the Soviet general secretary reacted positively for the first time to the Western suggestion to include confidence-building measures for all of Europe in the framework of a European disarmament conference, from the Atlantic to the Ural mountains. So far that has been rejected in part by the Soviet side, at least as regards the inclusion of the Soviet area. It would constitute important progress if this turned out to be the case at the Madrid negotiations. We need to find out in these negotiations what was meant by the condition that was involved. But I believe that one has to consider this statement by the general secretary as one of the most positive elements of his speech.

Then there is the moratorium you mentioned. This pertains to medium-range arms. It must be said in this respect that the West has so far not deployed any missiles. A moratorium would mean that the Soviet superiority would be fixed, a superiority which already exists due to the growth of medium-range missiles, their production and stationing, with the ensuing threat to West Europe. The West has, therefore, rejected such a moratorium in the past for good reasons. These reasons are today even more grave.

If one were to accept the moratorium, it would not merely be a considerable burden to our security, it would also deprive of its foundation the offer of negotiations we have linked with the counterarming decision, because then there would no longer be any interest on the part of the East.

But if General Secretary Brezhnev in saying moratorium means that the further stationing and production of Soviet missiles will be stopped, it would not eliminate the necessity of our counterarming, but it would at least facilitate negotiations somewhat. This will have to be determined.

Unfortunately, however, the situation is such that the enormous missile potential directed against the West forces us to implement our counterarming decision consistently. I believe that it is now important to pursue that part of negotiations which contains our negotiating offer quickly and immediately by continuing the Geneva medium-range talks.

[Question] If I understood you correctly, you attach great significance to the offer to extend the area of the confidence-building measures up to the Ural Mountains.

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] If this is the case, would you be prepared, under certain circumstances, to enter once again into the debate on the deployment of the medium-range missiles after all?

[Answer] Well, the former has nothing to do with the latter. The confidence-building measures are significant primarily for the conventional sector. In this respect, we have always advocated the view that if the other European states make their whole territories subject to these measures in order to reduce mistrust, it is necessary for the Soviet Union to subject the European part of its territory--and this is what counts--to reducing mistrust as well. This is one side of it. The other is that each month the Soviet Union has deployed new medium-range missiles targeted on West Europe. If we were to say: moratorium, meaning both sides do nothing, this would be tanamount to the continuation of the Soviet threat with the West remaining helpless in the face of its medium-range weapons. This would unhinge the alliance decision of December 1979 and, I repeat, it would neglect our security, on the one hand, and deprive negotiations of their basis, on the other. What is important now, therefore, is to initiate the negotiations. If the Soviet Union on its own part does not propose to continue its arms lead any further, then this does not relieve us of the need to continue our counterarming, pending the achievement of negotiated results. But, it would facilitate negotiations in any case.

But as I said, the proposal of a moratorium has already been rejected in the past, for very good and well-considered reasons. Unfortunately, these reasons have in the meantime even gained in importance as a result of the further growth of Soviet missiles.

[Question] Supposing the reports are true, Chancellor Schmidt stated to the SPD Executive Board yesterday that a deployment pause should not be rejected from the outset. You have pointed out on several occasions that the counterarming decision must be upheld as before. Has the opinion-forming process in this regard not been concluded yet?

[Answer] Well, the chancellor and I naturally adhere to the counterarming decision. This is a decision of the government just as it is a decision of the entire alliance. We would not even dream of undoing it. I suppose the chancellor referred to what I said as well, namely, that it would be useful if the Soviet Union would discontinue its advance armament now at long last so as to prevent the threat from becoming even more serious in a period when we do not have one single missile deployed on the Western side. It is common knowledge that the earliest deployment time will be 1983. If the Soviet Union is really interested in achieving arms control and arms limitation in that field, then it must do two things: first, negotiate and, second, refrain from continued arming, instead reducing and destroying the missiles.

FRG SET TO MEDIATE IN EL SALVADOR CONFLICT

[Text] Bonn, 25 Feb (DPA)--The Federal Government will take an active mediating role to solve the internal political conflict in El Salvador and try to bring together democratic representatives of the two sides in the civil war for talks in the Federal Republic.

After a discussion of this subject in the Federal Cabinet, Government Spokesman Kurt Becker today expressed the hope that representatives of the two groups in El Salvador will soon visit the Federal Republic. Becker did not give a date which also depends on the scheduled visit by the Christian Democrat president of El Salvador, Jose Napolean Duarte, to a Christian Democratic world conference in Brussels.

According to Becker, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher conveyed this intention to mediate to U.S. special envoy Lawrence Eagleburger, who visited Bonn twice last week. Becker again underlined that the Federal Government will use every opportunity to contribute to political stability in Central America. The government spokesman drew attention in this respect to the fact that a critical situation exists in El Salvador, which is regarded very seriously by the United States. Furthermore, the two major parties in the Federal Republic, the SPD and the CDU, maintain separate relations with sections of both groups in El Salvador.

In the statement which Becker gave to the press, the Federal Government expressed understanding for U.S. concern at the developments in El Salvador and the influence of communist states on internal conditions in the country. The Federal Government opposes all use of violence in El Salvador, whether from the right or the left.

Becker could not answer a question about when the Federal Republic's development aid to El Salvador would be resumed. It was interrupted last year due to the danger faced by the FRG's experts. This subject was not discussed by the cabinet.

CABINET DISCUSSES UK SUPPLY OF TORNADO TO RIYADH

[Text] Bonn, 25 Feb (DPA)--In the Federal Government's view, many questions have to be clarified in the event that Britain supplies Tornado combat aircraft to Saudi Arabia. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker told the press in Bonn today that the cabinet in discussing the topic today broadly agreed that this issue impinged directly on the efforts of the Federal Government and the ruling parties to develop new guidelines for German arms exports. No decision has been made.

Becker said that Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will leave on 27 April for Saudi Arabia. However, no inference can be drawn from the date that a policy decision on Bonn's attitude on arms exports will have been made by then. The formulation of new guidelines for arms exports has raised an unusually large number of aspects which have not previously been in the foreground. Thus, they must be thoroughly considered, which will require some time. The Federal Government does not consider itself under a deadline and is not prepared to have a date imposed on it.

The government spokesman said that the cabinet has not discussed how Great Britain learned of the alleged Saudi interest in the Tornado plane. There were contradictory reports.

The Riyadh government has denied that it wants the Tornado plane. It is still not known whether the Saudis have in fact approached London. It is understood that Britain wants to initiate consultations with Bonn and Rome in order to achieve, if required, the consent of its partners for a possible contract with Riyadh.

Italy, the Federal Republic and Britain are building the Tornado plane. Under their contract, the two other partners must agree if one of the manufacturing countries wishes to sell the plane to other state.

DER SPIEGEL PUBLISHES PUBLIC OPINION POLL

[Editorial report] Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German on 23 February on pages 30-32 presents in narrative and diagram form the results of a public opinion poll carried out on its behalf by the Bielefeld Emnid Polling Institute in mid-February and compares the results with a poll made by the same institute in April 1980. The journal, which cautions in a footnote that wherever in diagrams the results do not add up to 100 percent, this is due to the ommission of "lacking or other data," notes that "for the first time in 12 months, the Federal Government in February 1981 no longer has a majority backing it among the people. Yet Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is just as popular as he was in the election year of 1980."

This result, which appears to be "contradictory" at first glance, came up in the Emnid poll among 1,006 men and women representing all Federal Republic citizens over age 18.

The first diagram reflects the popularity rate of various German politicians on the basis of a system of marks ranging from plus 5 to minus 5 as against the corresponding results obtained in April 1980 (included here in parentheses). Thus, Chancellor Schmidt holds a rate of plus 2.1 (plus 2.1) whereas Helmut Kohl of the CDU has plus 0.9 (plus 0.7); Willy Brandt of the SPD has minus 0.2 (0.0) and SPD floorleader Herbert Wehner has minus 0.8 (minus 1.0). As for the three Bundestag parties, the CDU/CSU leads with a popularity rate of plus 1.3 (plus 0.7) ahead of the FDP which shows plus 1.0 (plus 0.8). The SPD has plus 0.5 (plus 1.1).

It is the opinion of 62 out of 100 FRG citizens, says DER SPIEGEL on the basis of the Emnid findings, that "the SPD today is worse than it was a year ago." The CDU/CSU, in contrast, offers a better picture than in 1980. The verdict of 100 interviewed persons was:

	SPD	CDU/CSU
"Is Better Today Than It Was a Year Ago"	3	37
"Is Exactly the Same Today"	34	55
"Is Worse Today"	62	8

The SPD is considered "worse today" by 37 out of 100 SPD voters; 85 out of 100 CDU/CSU voters; and 57 out of 100 FDP voters.

The journal goes on to report that confidence in the Federal Government has decreased, yet only "a minority" believes today that the present opposition would make a better showing after a "change in power." The rate of approval "by and large with the policy of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt" is diagramed as having changed as follows:

April 1980		February 1981
55	"Agreed"	43
25	"Disagreed"	34
19	"No comment"	23

Asked to express their degree of agreement with the Federal Government in the form of school report card marks, every third person interviewed in April 1980--but every other person interviewed in February 1981--chose one of the three worst marks. The marks were:

April 1980		February 1981
5	"Very good"	0
28	"Good"	17
33	"Satisfactory"	30
19	"Adequate"	29
10	"Inferior"	18
3	"Inadequate"	4

The journal adds in this diagram that the average mark each was 3.1 for April 1980 and 3.6 for February 1981. As for the current popularity of the parties and their presumable percentage result in Bundestag elections "if they were held next Sunday," another SPIEGEL diagram shows the CDU/CSU leading with about 50 percent followed by the SPD with barely 40 percent and the FDP just coming close to 10 percent.

The government coalition, DER SPIEGEL goes on to report on the basis of Emnid's findings, is more popular than a grand coalition or a "bourgeois" coalition would be. The diagram shows the preferences of 100 interviewed persons as follows: 46 for and SPD/FDP coalition, 10 for a coalition of CDU/CSU and SPD and 42 for a coalition of the CDU/CSU with the FDP.

Emnid's public opinion poll on behalf of DER SPIEGEL also deals with the currently topical issues of nuclear energy and German arms exports as well as with the "demand" of 24 SPD Bundestag deputies to cut the Bundeswehr budget by DM1 billion and use the funds for development aid.

DER SPIEGEL says on the basis of the opinion survey that the majority for the construction of nuclear power stations in the Federal Republic has increased by 2 percent between April 1980 and February 1981.

The 100 persons interviewed answered to these questions as follows:

"Build more nuclear power stations so as to preserve prosperity"

April 1980	February 1981
56	58

"Discontinue building nuclear power stations as the danger is too great"

April 1980	February 1981
42	38

DER SPIEGEL reports that nuclear energy opponents were asked in addition what should happen with the nuclear powerplants already in opperation. The result was:

"These nuclear powerplants should continue operations"

April 1980	February 1981
22	18

"They should be closed down"

April 1980	February 1981

According to the magazine, the survey showed that FRG citizens advocate the delivery of tanks to Saudi Arabia whereas they reject the delivery of submarines to Chile. The percentage figures for the tank deliveries were: the Federal Republic "should deliver," 57; it "should not deliver," 41. Of 100 persons interviewed, those objecting to such deliveries in the CDU/CSU were 33, SPD 49, and FDP 43. As for Chile, 45 percent of the persons interviewed said the Federal Republic "should deliver" the submarines, while 54 percent said it "should not." Of those opposing submarines for Chile, 39 percent were CDU/CSU voters, 68 percent were SPD voters and 60 percent were FDP voters.

Asked how the DM1 billion, which 24 SPD Bundestag deputies want cut from the defense budget and added to the development aid funds, should be used, 56 out of 100 people said the funds should be used for the Bundeswehr and 43 persons felt they should go into development aid. In the Emnid survey reported by DER SPIEGEL, the party breakdown with respect to retention of the DM1 billion for the Bundeswehr was: CDU/CSU voters, 67; SPD voters, 47; FDP voters 60.

Current international problems and European Community issues are expected to be the central topic of their talks, above all Genscher's initiative for a closer political association of the Community.

COLUMNIST NOTES NEED FOR GERMAN-U.S. ACCORD

[Jan Reifenberg editorial: "Reagan and Europe"]

[Text] Some 5 weeks ago, Ronald Reagan took office as the 40th President of the United States. The clear but sometimes still rough outlines of Washington's future policy have become visible. The new American President is taking time to develop his foreign and defense policies in every detail. Europeans would be well advised to respect that. Reagan is not a dreamer and not a naive person trying to improve the world. He will not follow Moscow's allurements. He will not discuss the abandonment of basic democratic principles which are irrefutable for him. He will resume the dialogue with the Soviet Union only if the latter adheres to certain rules and if it, most of all, stops its unrestricted expansion of its sphere of influence.

This president will not negotiate from a position of weakness on arms limitation, he does not want to give Moscow a lead in certain strategic arms. He believes that only a militarily strong America, equipped with a credible power of deterrence can go to the negotiating table. Reagan has therefore from the very beginning used a clear language toward the Kremlin, leaving no doubts for the Soviet leadership about his position. In all this, he is supported by the majority of the American Congress and the people.

These are the conditions under which the continuous dialogue has begun in Washington--beginning with the visits of French Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet and British Prime Minister Thatcher. The starting points are positive in both cases, just as Nixon in his time. Reagan and his advisers respect the independence of France. Although Paris remains outside NATO's military integration, it is considered a partner who makes remarkable defense efforts, who takes part actively in the Persian Gulf region which is of vital importance for the West and who pursues detente policy vis-a-vis the East with a clear realization of its limits. The times of lasting irritation between the oldest allies on both sides of the Atlantic are over. On the French side, one appreciates the special liking of Republican governments in Washington for bilateralism. The effect of basic feelings can also be seen, which stem from the history of both countries since the end of the 18th century.

Margaret Thatcher and Ronald Reagan agree so much in their basic attitude that their meeting is being called prior to its beginning in Washington a "political love festival" and it is said that the "special relations" between London and Washington are being stressed, relations which often have been said to be dead.

All this does not rule out differences of opinion on methods, but the basic conservative attitudes of Reagan, Giscard d'Estaing and Margaret Thatcher safeguard far-reaching agreement from the very beginning.

It was no coincidence that it was at Munich that Mr Carlucci, the U.S. deputy secretary of defense, expressed Washington's expectation last week at a defense policy meeting concerning joint efforts with the allies and that Washington presented evidence on arms supplies from Cuba and East Europe to the El Salvador rebels first to Bonn. The Federal Republic remains for Reagan and his aides a pillar of the alliance. This means that Bonn's action will be considered in Washington as something by which to measure the continuity and effectiveness of the alliance. Special significance is therefore attributed to Reagan's meeting with Genscher in the coming weeks as well as to his later meeting with Federal Chancellor Schmidt. Both sides will have to have frank talks and face urgent questions. Much will depend in this connection on the German side's not attempting to tie down the President to a time schedule for future East-West negotiations, or its approach to the extend and contents of further arms limitation negotiations. The President has time. He is not pressed to have a meeting with Brezhnev which would be just a show without substance.

Washington expects an implementation of NATO's 1979 decision to counterarm. It would consider any watering down of this joint decision as an incorrect yielding detrimental to the West.

Washington realizes very well that Bonn will have greater difficulties in this matter than Paris or London, the extent of the chancellor's disputes with the leftwing of his party is known here. Reagan knows the difficulties resulting from German partition and the Berlin problem. The President and his advisers would therefore consider "Finlandization" on German soil a very great danger to the alliance. So the German side must outline priorities. Possible objective differences of opinion must not be discussed in public. Reagan is convinced that America and its European partners want the same thing in the end. The more they agree, the more success is expected from an American point of view in establishing the "rules of the game" with the Soviet Union and the more energetically future problems can be handled contained in the term "North-South."

NEWSPAPERS WEIGH BREZHNEV PROPOSALS, REACTION

DW241000 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 24 Feb 81 p 3

[Commentary signed HHG: "Still Too Weak"]

[Text] Summit meetings can be useful if they sanction agreements or at least open the way toward them. Unfortunately, however, almost all prerequisites are missing in this respect between East and West, and particularly between the world powers. At some time, Moscow and Washington must make a new beginning.

What Soviet state and party chief Brezhnev has offered in this respect at the opening of the 26th CPSU Congress is helpful in a limited way. His suggestion, which is not new, for both sides to refrain from deploying any more medium-range missiles does not meet Western conditions. The Soviet Union would keep the missiles it has already deployed, while the other side would not be permitted to even begin deployment.

The offer to talk about Afghanistan is equally insufficient because Brezhnev wants to discuss only the "international aspects" of the problem. The sovereignty of the country must be preserved. That means in USSR language to discuss Pakistani and Western interference or the demilitarization of the Persian Gulf instead of mainly discussing the withdrawal of the Soviet.

It would still be a mistake not to examine what Brezhnev means and whether there are possibilities for negotiations. He does not want to fully disrupt talks with the West, that is obvious. He many consider his offer to improve information on maneuvers and troop movements and to extend the application of this in both East and West as evidence of good will. It is here that one can most likely see substance for new work by diplomats, if the military politicians of the West are not the only ones setting the tone at the moment.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE

[Commentary signed Ein.: "Contradictions"]

[Text] The event is the commentary in itself: The federal chancellor considers a careful examination of Brezhnev's suggestions to be necessary. He considers the moratorium on the stationing of medium-range arms in Europe as particularly interesting. Foreign Minister Genscher, however, rejects the limited mutual renunciation of stationing these arms systems. Contradictory statements have also been made in Washington by those politically responsible.

Secretary of State Haig considered the idea of the Kremlin chief to possibly call a summit conference as "very interesting." The spokesman of the Department of State, however, had stated a few hours earlier the official opinion that the suggestion "could possibly be a tactical maneuver" by the Soviets. Haig's change of opinion is said to have come about after a talk with the French foreign minister. Francois-Poncet's interpretation comes closer to that of Schmidt than that of Genscher. Democracies naturally do not talk with one tongue. Sovereign states work out their agreement in an open society. Yet the question is justified as to whether this breadth of spontaneous reactions does not appear to be extended too much?

QATARI AMIR ACCEPTS INVITATION TO VISIT

[Text] Bonn, 25 Feb (DPA)--Amir Khalifah ibn Hamad Al Thani, the ruler of oil- and gas-rich Qatar, has accepted an invitation to pay a state visit to the Federal Republic of Germany. Diplomatic sources in Bonn said today that the date for his visit has not yet been fixed. State Secretary Guenter van Well of the German Foreign Office recently visited several Gulf states and it is likely he discussed details of the visit while in Qatar.

At present, Qatar, compared to other Gulf states, is not a major energy supplier to the Federal Republic. German imports from Qatar in 1980 totalled DM96.3 million while exports totalled DM170 million. Apart from oil, Qatar possesses an estimated one twelfth of the world's natural gas reserves. German industry has commissioned feasibility studies on transporting liquid natural gas by tanker from the Gulf region to Europe. According to business sources, Qatar is interested in such a project and, according to unconfirmed reports, wants arms deliveries in return, including patrol boats which the Federal Republic already exports to other Gulf states.

INTEREST RATE IN SOVIET GAS DEAL QUESTIONED

[Text] The German banks participating in the financing of the pipes for natural gas deal with the Soviet Union are looking for a more flexible interest rate formula for the envisaged DM10 billion credit, informed finance quarters say. The concept so far mapped out on the German side is based on an interest rate of 9.75 percent, whereas the Soviet side wants to concede only essentially lower interest rates.

CABINET COMMUNIQUE ON FOREIGN POLICY ISSUES

[Excerpt] The president of the republic held a cabinet meeting at the Elysee Palace 18 February. At the end of the meeting, the following official communique was issued:

East-West relations: The foreign minister reported to the cabinet on the state of East-West relations. Discussing the work of the Madrid meeting, which is attended by representatives of the 35 countries which signed the Helsinki Final Act, the minister recalled that the French delegation is playing an active part with the intention of achieving specific and balanced results.

It is putting forward and defending in particular the French plan for a conference on disarmament in Europe announced by the president of the republic to the United Nations--a conference which is receiving wide support in principle among the "35" and which can only be successful if its objective is clearly defined. That is the aim of the mandate submitted by France in Madrid. It specifies that the conference's objective in the initial phase should be to adopt a coherent series of confidence-building measures which are militarily significant, binding and applicable on an equal basis to the European territory of all participating states, in other words to the whole of Europe. An agreement is necessary on these points for the conference to be able to pave the way for the effective limitation and then reduction of the level of armaments in Europe in the second phase.

The foreign minister informed the cabinet of France's aid to the Afghan refugees, most of whom have sought asylum in Pakistan. He stressed that France is showing its solidarity with all these troubled populations and their host country. In 1980, the government supplied 5,000 tons of wheat, contributed to the international children's fund program and participated in the EEC countries' emergency aid. The Afghan populations' exodus has led to the current presence of 1.5 million refugees in Pakistan. This requires a greater effort from France. The government decided to immediately dispatch 12,000 tons of additional wheat to the Afghan refugees.

PREMIER BARRE MEETS WITH TUNISIA'S MZALI

LD251127 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 Feb 81 p 34

[Text] Tunisian Prime Minister Mzali, who arrived in Paris on an official visit on 18 February, is to have new talks with Mr Barre on Thursday. He also will give a dinner in Mr Barre's honor.

French-Tunisian relations are "excellent in every respect," Mr Mzali stated following a private talk with his French colleague.

In a speech which he made on Wednesday during a dinner given for the Tunisian prime minister, Mr Barre stated that their concept of international relations has made France and Tunisia "condemn in a similar spirit any foreign interference in general and in particular the interference to which Afghanistan was subjected 1 year ago and Chad more recently."

After recalling France's proposal for a conference on noninterference in Afghanistan and its support for the implementation of the Lagos agreements which rule out any foreign intervention in Chad, Mr Barre added: "France is too conscious of the perils threatening peace not to seek to encourage anything that can preserve among nations stable relations consistent with their independence and dignity. This is on its part a sign of neither weakness nor sycophancy toward anyone. It has proved this by devoting considerable resources to its defense and by assisting all friendly countries which have asked for help."

Mr Barre called Tunisia a "clear-sighted, courageous and resolute" country and assured his guest that he would find in France some "very sincere friends" willing to seek "ways of constantly developing profound cooperation between the two countries."

Mr Mzali replied that France's and Tunisia's analyses of most problems "which have made the international scene explosive are close, if not convergent." Both countries, he stated, believe that world peace and concord "cannot be preserved unless the flagrant and scandalous injustices which continue to strike at the dignity of Eastern and African countries are removed." "With reference to this," he added, "it would be useful if we continued our talks on the Palestinian question."

After stating that "President Giscard d'Estaing has opted for a new, dynamic and creative policy worthy of France's traditions," Mr Mzali added that "thanks to this new style, France has helped to impart a new impetus" to the North-South dialogue.

According to the French side, the two ministers' talks centered on the Mediterranean, the Maghreb, Africa and the At-Ta'if Islamic conference. Bilateral questions (setting up of a Tunisian-Arab-French investment bank) and problems connected with EEC-Tunisian relations also were discussed.

LE MONDE VIEWS PLANNED U.S. DEFENSE SPENDING

[Editorial: "Pentagon Spared]

[Text] It is no surprise to learn that only one ministerial department, the Defense Department, is spared by the government austerity program announced by Mr Reagan. Continuing similar appeals made by Mr Carter, the Republican candidate, the President has for months denounced the extent to which the United States lags behind the USSR in the arms sphere and called for a vigorous effort to catch up.

For the first stage, the increase is gradual and seems modest: $1.3 billion more for the current fiscal year, making a total of $157.9 billion, a $7.2-billion increase for 1982, $20.7 billion the next year and so on to reach $63 billion more than Mr Carter's long term plans by 1986. This effort will go hand in hand with a new war on waste in the vast "military-industrial complex" financed by this budget; the government in this way hopes to glean $300 million this year and $2.9 billion next year. But the intention in so doing is at most to make a small reduction in the rate of a general increase deemed necessary by everybody, or virtually everybody.

Mr Reagan's assertion that the Soviet Union "has invested $300 billion more than us in its armed forces since 1970" cannot be checked in any way in view of the little that is known about the Soviet military budget and the difficulty of making comparisons. Mr Carter suggested that the USSR has been increasing its war effort by 4 to 5 percent each year in real terms for around 15 years and that its share of Soviet GNP was estimated at between 11 and 15 percent. These last two estimates seem more plausible and even rather below the mark in view of the result of that effort in the various spheres of "military hardware."

Mr Reagan is right to assert that the USSR has secured a numerical advantage in the sphere of strategic nuclear missiles, tactical aircraft, submarines, artillery and air defense equipment. Although he has not yet specified what use he will make of the new funds requested for the Pentagon, what is known of current plans shows a paradoxical tendency to start by strengthening the strong areas of U.S. defense--those in which the United States clearly has the advantage. For instance, there is a great deal of discussion in Washington about constructing one or even two new types of strategic bomber, while the Soviets have rather neglected this component of their arsenal. Similarly, Mr Reagan is apparently planning to start work on two new nuclear-powered aircraft carriers while the USSR, with only two ships of this type, comes way behind the U.S. armada of 13 existing aircraft carriers.

The disparity between the two camps' programs thus makes any definitive judgment on the balance of forces and the respective advantages even more problematical. U.S. superiority in accuracy, miniaturization and electronics is not disputed nor is the Soviet advantage in the sphere of "big batallions" and supermissiles. However, account must be taken of the "dynamics" of the current efforts and of the necessarily fragile parity which the two camps might reach in a specific sphere. What is known of the Soviet effort, pursued chiefly in Europe thanks to the years of "detente," explains more than any other factor, the strength of the Western reaction which Mr Reagan intends to lead.

PCF REPORTEDLY PURGING CRITICS OF MARCHAIS LINE

LD251524 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 25 Feb 81

[Summary] The French Communist Party is purging its ranks. It currently is debarring from membership various militants who are critical of the line followed by Georges Marchais. The party is refusing to renew a certain number of membership cards for 1981 and this particularly affects militants engaged in drafting the petition entitled "For Union Is Struggle." This petition calls for withdrawal from elections in favor of another candidate and for the Union of the Left. Communist (Guy Bois), a municipal councillor in Antony, has just received a letter from his section, calling on him to renounce everything he has done within the framework of this movement. Former leader of the Communist Youth Organization Gerard Molina is going through the same experience. The same is also true of a number of intellectuals and academics who refused to sign appeals to vote for Georges Marchais. Catherine Clement, writer and journalist, has also just been debarred from the Communist Party in which she has been a militant since 1968. Leaders at PCF headquarters consider these dissidents to be intolerable.

LE MONDE PUBLISHES POLL ON 'PRESIDENT'S IMAGE'

LD251037 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 Feb 81 p 9

[Text] The weekly magazine LES NOUVELLES LITTERAIRES has published in its 19-26 February edition an opinion poll carried out from 26 through 31 January during which 1,603 people aged 18 and over were interviewed. This inquiry mainly was concerned with the president's image. At the end of his 7-year term of office, 4 percent of the people interviewed believe that Mr Giscard d'Estaing has been a "great president," 36 percent that he has been a "quite good president," 36 percent that he has been a "rather average president," 19 percent that he has been a "mediocre president" and 5 percent voiced no opinion. Some 58 percent believe that he is "rather liberal" and 24 percent that he is "rather authoritarian."

One of the questions asked refers to "the affairs in which some politicians have been implicated." Of the people interviewed, 37 percent believe that they have been "more serious" during the current 7-year term of office than those which occurred under Georges Pompidou (29 percent deem them to have been "equally serious," 5 percent "less serious" and 29 percent expressed no opinion). Thirty-two percent deem them "more serious" than the affairs which occurred under Charles de Gaulle (22 percent believe that they have been "equally serious," 10 percent that they have been "less serious" and 36 percent expressed no opinion).

It appears from answers to a third question that "the accusations raised against Valery Giscard d'Estaing in connection with the so-called diamonds affair" will not influence the way in which the people interviewed will vote--2 percent of the people who had intended to vote for him have stated that they now intend to vote "for another candidate," whereas 2 percent who had no intention of voting for him now say that they will vote for the present head of state.

LD260214 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1830 GMT 25 Feb 81

[Excerpts] The result of the vote of confidence sought by Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo to become prime minister was announced during the final stages of the investiture debate in the Congress of Deputies by Ladelino Lavilla, president of the Congress of Deputies. The announcement was made as follows:

[Begin recording] Silence please! Votes cast: 344; votes for: 186; votes against: 158. The confidence of the chamber is therefore granted to the proposed candidate for prime minister, Don Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo y Bustelo. [applause] [end recording]

Those who voted in favor of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] candidate were the UCD parliamentary group, the democratic coalition, the Catalan minority and members of the Mixed Group, Aizpun, Clavero Arevalo and Gomez de las Roces.

Those who voted against were the Socialist, Communist, Basque and Andalusian groups and the Mixed Group members Pii Sunyer, Torres Salvador, Andres Fernandez, Sagaseta, Bandres, Garcia Perez and Blas Pinar.

The three members of Herri Batasuna [Basque radical left coalition] were absent. They do not attend parliamentary sessions. Three members of the Socialist group, Francisco Vazquez, Guillermo Galeote and Luis Fuertez, were unable to attend because of illness.

The session began after 1700 this evening with the speech by the president of the Congress of Deputies, Landelino Lavilla, to the congress plenum following the incidents which occurred on Monday evening and Tuesday morning.

Now listen to Landelino Lavilla formulating the institutional declaration:

[Begin recording] The Congress of Deputies, the Spanish parliament, has suffered, and withstood, a grave and brutal attack. The representation of the Spanish people, the freedom and independence of deputies and the very authority of this presidency have been disregarded and mistreated by force of arms.

Without having a complete knowledge of the roots of the incident and an appraisal of its effects, this is not the time for words to be turned into an uncontrolled vehicle of the natural indignation with which we have lived during difficult hours of uncertainty and humiliation. It is, however, the time to reprobate and energetically condemn incidents such as that which occurred, incidents which, whatever their declared or hidden motives, lend scant service to Spain and to the future of its coexistence. It is the time to urge a strict investigation into who was responsible. It is the time to proclaim our faith in the constitutional order and declare openly that today a genuine shout of "long live Spain" means the same as shouts of 'long live the constitution: and "long live democracy." [applause] And it is the time to recognize and thank the decision and the steady hand of his majesty the king who has guaranteed... [applause, followed by a shout of "viva el rey" and the deputies response of "viva"]...who has guaranteed constitutional order and assured our release.

It is the time to recognize the loyalty and discipline of the armed forces who, with great patriotism, obeyed his majesty the king. It is the time to underline the work carried out in a difficult situation by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Permanent Commission of Secretaries of State and Under Secretaries who acted effectively in collaboration with the Joint Chiefs of Staff. [applause]

It is also the time to congratulate you and the chamber for the resoluteness and calm dignity with which you confronted the difficult situation, taking pride in the responsible composure which the circumstances demanded, and to thank the media for their efforts and efficiency, the media who, with their calm reports, contributed so much to calmness inside and outside the chamber. [applause]

It is also the time to thank the good general conduct of the staff of this chamber and, in particular...[applause]...and, in particular, that of those who maintained their efficient and loyal service in such abnormal circumstances.

Finally, it is the time to stress the firm and positive conduct of the Spanish people, whom we represent, and to express thanks for the multiple gestures of sympathy and encouragement which the Congress of Deputies has received and which I want to symbolize for its special importance in the Council of Europe.

We have lived through an unusual experience. I am sure that from it we will be able to take renewed strength to assure freedom, to coexist in democracy and to tackle with firmness and security the construction of the best future for all Spaniards. Many thanks. [applause] [end recording]

NEW PRIME MINISTER REJECTS COALITION GOVERNMENT

NC252106 Paris AFP in English 2100 GMT 25 Feb 81

[Text] Madrid, 25 Feb (AFP)--Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, invested as prime minister here today with an absolute majority in parliament, dismissed Socialist calls for a coalition government saying that it would take too long to form such a cabinet.

Speaking to the press after the vote--which gave him 186 votes in the 350-member Cortes--Mr Calvo-Sotelo said that the aborted coup which interrupted the scheduled investiture debate on Monday, "was not a serious threat to democracy".

Before the session got underway, a shout of "long live the king" rang round the Cortes. Deputies right across the political spectrum leapt to their feet and cheered King Juan Carlos for a full minute, Communist leader Santiago Carrillo as enthusiastic as any.

The king's appeal to the armed forces to respect Spain's then-untested democratic constitution is held both here and abroad to have played a crucial role in averting the military coup.

Mr Calvo-Sotelo won an absolute majority today thanks to support from the right-wing democratic coalition and Catalan deputies.

He failed to achieve this majority at a first vote on Friday and at today's session a simple majority would have sufficed.

Speaking after the vote, opposition leader Felipe Gonzalez, secretary-general of the Socialist Workers' Party, called for a coalition government and confirmed that he was ready to serve under Mr Calvo-Sotelo.

The Socialist leader said that democracy was best served by a broad-based government and drew applause even from some majority deputies.

But speaking to the press after the investiture, the new prime minister confirmed a pledge to draw his cabinet solely from his own Democratic Centre Party.

Mr Calvo-Sotelo -- taking over from fellow Democratic Centre member Adolfo Suarez who resigned at the end of January -- said that he had no need of support from the Socialists as he already had a majority in the Cortes.

He added that he would begin consultations tomorrow and intended to form a cabinet as soon as possible. He dismissed hopes of working out a coalition as taking too much time.

Asked whether he planned to consult the military before announcing a cabinet, the new prime minister said he had "no such intention".

Mr Calvo-Sotelo, 54, held various portfolios under Suarez and was named vice-premier responsible for economic affairs last September.

With an engineering background and a solid liberal reputation, the new prime minister is best known for his thoroughness. "If you win, you win. If you lose, you quit", he remarked recently of his view of government.

PCE ISSUES STATEMENT ON CONGRESS EVENTS, SOLUTIONS

LD251630 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 25 Feb 81

[Text] The PCE Central Committee has been meeting and has issued a statement, the contents of which is summarized for us now by Pedro Fernandez Cespedes:

The PCE has reached the following conclusions about the events in the Congress of Deputies and in the military district of Valencia. First, the PCE feels that the stance adopted by his majesty the king was very positive in frustrating the coup d'etat, which was not simply the action of a madman like Lieutenant Colonel Tejero but, in the view of the Communists, has important ramifications in other sectors of the army.

The meeting which his majesty the king held yesterday with the leaders of the main parties in parliament is described by the PCE as very important. Among other reasons, this is because King Juan Carlos appealed for understanding and cooperation between the various political forces.

The events which occurred were of extraordinary gravity, and in addition to regarding them as a flagrant assault upon the constitution the PCE sees them as a general test exercise which must now be clarified; responsibilities must be laid where they belong and the law must be complied with.

To prevent this from happening again, the PCE declares that a government with a broad-based majority, which is capable of tackling the democratization of the state and providing solutions to the outstanding problems, is needed.

to sum up, the party insists the transition period has not yet ended, and what is needed is a Union of the Democratic Center [DCD] - Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] coalition government with an agreed program, because in the view of the PCE, a single-party government of the UCD would be out of step with the new political situation.

It follows from this, and they have said as much, that the PCE will this afternoon vote against the candidature of Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, insisting on a different solution, namely, on a bloc of progressive forces, a united bloc.

FIRST DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER ON RESIGNATION PLANS

LD251410 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 25 Feb 81

[Text] Lieutenant General Gutierrez Mellado, first deputy prime minister with responsibility for security and national defense in the outgoing government, considers that he has now served his purpose in the government and that the latest events will not cause him to change this conviction unless uncontestable reasons of state should arise. Authorized sources say that he will therefore not be in the new government to be formed by the new prime minister. It is known that Gutierrez Mellado has already begun packing his personal belongings at his Moncloa Palace office.

The same sources say that Lieutenent General Gutierrez Mellado has received numerous congratulations on his conduct during the first minutes of the occupation of the congress building.

NORWAY

BRUNDTLAND ON DISARMAMENT, NUCLEAR-FREE ZONES

LD261103 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 24 Feb 81 p 5

[Liv Hegna report: "Brundtland: Nuclear-Free Zone Constructive Notion To Bring About Changes in Europe"]

[Excerpt] An intensification of Norwegian efforts for peace, human rights and disarmament were the main messages which Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland delivered in her address to the Labor Party National Women's Conference yesterday. She also stressed that a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries is "a constructive notion to bring about changes" as far as the nuclear arms situation in Europe is concerned. The women's conference also spontaneously, set up an Alva Myrdal Fund and Chairwoman Aud Blegen Svindland received almost 2,000 Kroner as an initial contribution.

Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland stressed in her address that work for disarmament will call for greater efforts and resources in the future:

"We must strengthen both our administrative and technical capacity and increase political insight," Mrs Brundtland said and added that she considered that so-called consequence analyses [konsekvensanalyser] would be a useful tool in this context:

"In the security policy field consequence analyses will serve both to open up the decisionmaking process and ensure that arms control and disarmament would be taken into consideration at an early stage of planning," Gro Harlem Brundtland said.

The prime minister also said that there would be no disarmament against the will of the nuclear powers, but that even though Norway, as she said herself, has limited influence in the larger context, this will not limit our using this influence. She said Norway must play an active role in NATO to promote detente. The work of the relatively newly established Palme Commission for Disarmament, in which Norway is represented by the prime minister, UN special sessions and the CSCE were other areas which Gro Harlem Brundtland underlined as of particular importance for work for disarmament and detente.

"There are many who see the need for mutually balanced reductions as an obstacle to real progress in the work of disarmament. It is not difficult to understand the sense of powerlessness and the frustration which spreads when people are faced with the brutal and seemingly inevitable course of developments. But it is nevertheless an important departure point that we always remember that real and lasting results require reciprocity. Otherwise we will not be able to achieve security," she said, but stressed that this must never be "an excuse" for a lack of initiative.

Prime Minister Brundtland also touched on the subject of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries. She referred to the action program from the special UN session on disarmament, which encourages the establishment of nuclear-free zones as a step along the road toward the goal of a post nuclear disarmament world. Gro Harlem Brundtland stressed that as well as the strategic arms in Europe which concern the United States and the Soviet Union in particular, there are other categories of nuclear arms which must be included in negotiations within Europe:

"A nuclear-free zone could be an initiative for Nordic collaboration in the work to create broader arrangements in Europe," Gro Harlem Brundtland said.

The prime minister said that a positive contribution to the development of the Third World is a part of security policy:

"If we do not succeed in improving the economic and social conditions in the poor countries, we will continue to have sources of new conflicts and new tension," she said.

AFTENPOSTEN ASSESSES BREZHNEV CPSU CONGRESS SPEECH

[Editorial: "Brezhnev's Invitation"]

[Text] The time is obviously gone when CPSU congresses, which according to the party's statutes are held to fix future policy, were able to surprise the world with more radical changes of course in the Soviet Union's domestic or foreign policy. In our era we have to go as far back as the 20th congress, exactly 25 years ago, to find an example of a profound new trend actually originating from a national assembly of the most powerful communist party in history. Nikita Khrushchev's "secret" speech at that congress which demolished Stalin was the last bold sally in the direction of reforms which pointed to new paths in the internal and external development of the Soviet state.

President Leonid Brezhnev's keynote opening report to the 5,000 party delegates was thus a copy of the initial stages of the last three congresses under his leadership; it was intended to reflect a stability which in the view of the leadership obviously leaves nothing in terms of fundamental new assessments to be desired. But developments in Poland in particular show that new ideas are needed because as long as stability means stagnation the pressure toward the implementation of social reforms will not let up.

As far as relations with the West were concerned Brezhnev showed greater flexibility and imagination than in his treatment of the Soviet Union's and Eastern Europe's internal problems. Without abandoning any of Moscow's fundamental stances, principally the unchanged "conditions" for a withdrawal from Afghanistan, the CPSU leader sent out several invitations in the direction of Washington and Western Europe. They included a proposal for a summit with Ronald Reagan, a moratorium on the deployment of new nuclear missiles in Europe and an expansion of the confidence-building measures between NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

Proposals presented in such general terms need to be both deepened and explained. There can be no doubt that the issues which Brezhnev raised, especially missile rearmament, are matters of the greatest concern for people in the West, as our domestic debate makes perfectly clear. Unfortunately, we have seen no signs of a corresponding debate in the Soviet Union, where the leader's speeches are the only guiding principles. It is therefore to be honed that Brezhnev's congress report, and the proposals it contained, will ultimately confirm that there is a great and genuine concern over developments in the Soviet Union too. And this can only be shown through negotiations, both on Brezhnev's proposals and the West's views.

In the long account of Moscow's foreign policy which the Soviet leader gave to his party colleagues, and here many echoes of the past were unmistakable, we prefer to attach the main emphasis to his invitation to a dialogue. After the verbal clashes between the new U.S. President and the old leadership in the Kremlin, the time should have arrived for a clarification of real positions. And this too can only be done at the negotiating table.

NEORION SHIPYARD ENDS REPAIR OF SOVIET VESSELS

[Text] The shipyard of Neorion on the Aegean island of Siros has stopped repairing Soviet naval auxiliary vessels, the president of the company said Tuesday.

Ioannis Kalimassiotis said that a contract between the shipyard and the Soviet company Sudoimport to repair naval auxiliary vessels ended Dec 31, 1980 and has not been renewed. Kalimassiotis said that the shipyard proposed to the Soviet company that it continue repairing merchant vessels only, but it has received no answer.

Political observers attribute the change to pressure from the Greek Government, NATO and the United States after the country returned to the military wing of NATO last October. NATO and the United States objected to the original contract signed in September 1979, which the Greek Government had called "completely commercial."

At least four Soviet naval auxiliary vessels had been repaired at the Neorion yard under the contract. Under the terms of the agreement crews from the ships undergoing repairs were permitted to go on shore leave. Some observers feared that this was the first step towards granting home-port facilities to the Soviet Mediterranean fleet.

KKE, SYRIAN COMMUNIST PARTY ISSUE COMMUNIQUE

["Text" of joint communique issued on 19 February in Athens by the KKE and the Syrian Communist Party]

[Text] Following the invitation by the KKE Central Committee, a delegation of the Syrian Communist Party's Central Committee visited Greece, consisting of comrades Daniel Ni'mah, member of the Syrian party Central Committee Political Bureau, (Mahir 'Antzatzih), member of the party's Central Committee and Isma'il Zaza, secretary of the party's Control Committee. During their stay in our country, the Syrian Communist Party delegation was received by KKE Central Committee Secretary General Comrade Kh. Florakis and had talks with a KKE Central Committee delegation composed of Comrades A. Ambatielos, member of the political Bureau; N. Kiriakidhis, alternate member of the Political Bureau; O. Kolozof, V. Venetsanopoulos and Sp. Khalvatzis, Central Committee members. The talks were conducted in a cordial and comradely atmosphere, and briefings were given on the situation in the two countries and their parties' activities. There was also an exchange of views on international issues, especially in the Mediterranean area, the Near and Middle East, and on issues of the international communist and workers' movement.

The Syrian Communist Party delegation briefed their Greek comrades on Syria's current key role, on the general national and anti-imperialist road it follows as a people, as a regime and as a national front, and on the fact that this road constitutes the principal link in confronting U.S. imperialist plans in the struggle for the elimination of the Camp David agreements, the disclosure of the European "initiative," the Jordanian option and any similar activity, the support of the Arab Palestinian people's struggle, the Egyptian national movement, the Lebanese national movement and so forth.

The delegation noted the dimensions of the conspiracy confronting Syria from sides such as imperialism, Zionist and Arab reaction, the linkage of this conspiracy with internal reactionary activity and especially its basic force, the Muslim Brotherhood gang. The delegation said that people of all classes--workers, farmers, intellectuals and honest soldiers and officers--have struck a serious blow at this foreign-dominated gang, which is a great victory not only for the country's internal serenity but for its overall national policy.

The delegation stressed that the decisive and final blow to all forms of internal conspiracies against Syria--inspired by foreign support--dictates that the economic and social foundation of this conspiracy be eliminated by striking at the positions of this parasitic bourgeois class and completely eradicating it. Progressive economic and social measures must be intensified and expanded to the benefit of popular masses with the standard of living, housing and living conditions improved, the democratic freedoms of the labor class, workers and intellectuals, and national progressive parties and forces extended, and the role of the national progressive front in the various sectors of the country's life extended and intensified. The delegation stressed to the Greek comrades that the treaty of friendship, signed between Syria and the great Soviet Union, was of special and great importance to the Syrian Arab people and to the entire Arab national liberation movement.

The Syrian Communist Party delegation briefed the Greek comrades on the work of the party's 5th congress and on its big results in all sectors; on the decisive struggle waged by all party organizations to implement the course determined and stressed by the congress, with the goals of stabilizing Syria's national line, defending the claims of the broad popular masses and bringing the country back to the road of social progress.

The KKE delegation briefed the Syrian guests on the struggle of the workers and of all the Greek people in the context of the new situation following the country's return to the NATO military wing, on the people's vital demands for ridding the country of the government of the right, and on the creation of prerequisites for a change with a view to the upcoming parliamentary elections. The KKE delegation specifically stressed the significance of the KKE struggle to strengthen the unity of the working class with all anti-imperialist, antimonopolist democratic forces for the defense of national independence, the repulsion of attacks by the monopolies, the withdrawal of the country from NATO and the EEC, and the dissolution of all U.S. and other bases on Greek soil, in order to promote detente and peace in the world.

The two parties ascertained that the international situation has recently deteriorated dangerously. This deterioration is due to U.S. imperialism's cold war activities, its blunt attacks against detente and the principles of peaceful coexistence. The new U.S. administration has increased international tension through a number of cold war activities in trying to give a further push to the arms race. Thus, in addition to the decision in install new nuclear missile weapons in Europe--after reneging on already signed agreements, not ratifying the SALT II agreement, and strengthening the aggressive system of bases throughout the world, especially in the oil-producing areas and others--U.S. imperialism has announced its intention to produce and install the neutron bomb in Europe thus bringing the mortal danger of a calamitous thermonuclear war even closer. The imperialists are being aided in their plans by the Beijing leadership.

The Syrian Communist Party and the KKE specifically noted imperialism's aggressive activity in their area. They noted that the gathering of large naval, air and other forces--used for direct intervention--is creating an abnormal situation. These forces are a serious danger to peace in the area; they threaten the national independence of the people and are planning to steal the people's resources. At the same time, aided by the Zionists, Egypt and Arab reaction, they are generating plans--expressed in the Camp David agreements and the agreements between Egypt and Israel--to eliminate the Palestinian resistance, to divide Lebanon, to slander the Front for Stability and Resistance and to destabilize the progressive Arab countires, especially the Syrian Arab Republic, the main resistance force in the area. The two parties believe that the only existing way to repel the intensifying imperialist intervention in our area is the common struggle of all anti-imperialist democratic and patriotic forces in the Mediterranean area, especially of the eastern Mediterranean, Middle and Near East and the Persian Gulf.

Only through such a broad unity, together with the help and solidarity of all socialist countries and all progressive anti-imperialist forces of the world, can the plans of the imperialists, Zionist and Arab reaction be ruined, can a general and equitable solution to the Middle East problem be imposed on the basis of UN resolutions, can Israel be forced to withdraw from the lands it occupied during the 1967 war and the national rights of the Palestinian Arab people be recognized, including the right to return to their homes and establish their own independent state.

With this opportunity the two parties consider Comrade Brezhnev's plan concerning the guarantee of Persian Gulf security, which he announced during his visit to India, as a great help to the people of the area in their struggle for the defense of their independence and the salvation of their wealth. It eliminates all the pretexts upon which U.S. imperialism relies for strengthening its presence in the area and justifying its aggressive activities.

The two sides express their strong uneasiness concerning the continuation of the war between Iran and Iraq. They believe that this war only serves U.S. strategy and causes harm to the interests of the two brotherly peoples of Iraq and Iran and all Arab people, deepens dissension in the Arab world, and diverts the Arab people's attention from their basic battle against U.S. imperialism and Israeli aggression. The two brotherly parties denounce this war and ask for the immediate termination of hostilities and the solution of all differences through peaceful means on the basis of mutual respect for the principles of national independence and sovereignty.

The two parties express their solidarity to the people of Cyprus who are struggling for a just solution of the Cyprus problem on the basis of UN resolutions which call for a unitary, independent, sovereign, territorially integral, demilitarized and nonaligned Cyprus. They also express their support of the People's Republic of Afghanistan, in the struggle it is waging against the activities and interventions of U.S. imperialism, the Beijing leadership and reaction to its internal affairs. They support Comrade Babrak Karmal's proposals for the solution of the Afghani issue.

The two brotherly parties denounce the continuous barbarian Israeli attacks against southern Lebanon and the Palestinian refugee camps, as well as the strengthening and encouragement of U.S. imperialism and its agents in the area. The two brotherly parties declare their internationalist solidarity with the Iraqi Communist Party and with the Iraqi national and democratic forces, Arab and Kurdish, in their just struggle.

The KKE and the Syrian Communist Party support the heroic people of El Salvador who are struggling for their national liberation and condemn every foreign imperialist intervention. They also express their solidarity with all the people of the world who are struggling to gain their national liberation and democracy against imperialism, Zionism, racism, fascism and every form of oppression that is being exercised against them.

The two delegations express their solidarity with socialist Poland and the brotherly PZPR which are struggling to overcome their internal difficulties. They condemn every effort to intervene by imperialism and reaction, which are exploiting the Polish People's Republic's temporary difficulties and are trying to strengthen the forces of internal counterrevolution.

The two parties stressed that with regard to the current international conditions, it is even more necessary to strengthen the unity of the international communist and labor movement, the struggle against every anticommunist and anti-Soviet manifestation, the joint action of all democratic and progressive forces for the relaxation of international tension for peace and socialism. The two delegations confirmed once again the close comradely bonds which exist between the two parties and the two peoples and stressed their joint will for developing them even more to the benefit of the parties and the peoples of Greece and Syria, for the domination of detente, peace and social progress, and for socialism.

VOTCP CALLS ON LEFTISTS TO CONTINUE STRUGGLE

TA221049 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 22 Feb 81

[Text] Members of the Revolutionary Path organization [Dev-Yol] and the Revolutionary Left organization [Dev-Sol] and young revolutionary friends from other deviationist leftist groups:

The sovereign class wants to see you faced with a dilemma: Either your destruction through degenerated suicical activities in line with the plans of the counterguerrilla organization that serves the interests of the most reactionary and aggressive forces, or retirement from [word indistinct] wait in activity hoping for better days in the future. Neither of these paths is a solution. This is not the time to retire in despair and to expire. Our country is faced with great dangers and maybe even darker periods. It is impossible to renounce any force that is capable of struggling and any person that really aspires for a revolution.

Revolutionary friend, the deviationist leftist movement to which you belong is going through a multifaceted crisis. You may seek the reasons for this crisis in the arrest of your administrators, in junta measures and in military operations. However, is this all? The most important point is the helplessness of deviationist leftism in the face of current problems. Deviationist leftism does not currently have a convincing reply to the question "What can be done". No doubt you set on your path with lofty goals. Deviationist leftism was telling you that you could activate the masses through terrorist methods. At present are you not further away from your goal? As every revolutionary faced with a failure should do, you are probably asking yourself "where have we gone wrong?"

Above all, my friend, you had a faulty compass. You were far away from Marxism-Leninism. You were under the false impression that through determination and [words indistinct] you could accomplish everything on your own. You considered yourself the center of the world. You did not value the experiences of the masses.

However, You (?contradicted) the guiding gains of the Soviet Union and the socialist countries that have realized the revolution and have implemented Marxism-Leninism and you accused them of revisionism. Is it not inevitable that this erroneous theoretic basis would prove to be a failure in practice as well? No doubt, you could not have established healthy and lasting ties with the masses. Let us have a look at the basic principle that prompted you to direct yourselves toward the masses, namely the principle of shaking the masses with terror and thus activating them. Lenin said the following regarding these views: Is there not a sufficient amount of oppression and tyranny in our lives to render activists unnecessary? It it not obvious that those who have not been activated by the Russian regime of oppression will remain passive in the face of a struggle waged by a handful of terrorists against the government?

With the help of Nationalist Action Party [NAP], affiliated murder networks, terror in our country reached a level well above that expected by you and all other deviationist leftist individuals and groups. Did terror shake the masses and recruit them to the revolutionary side? Lenin said that terrorist activities show that revolutionary forces rather than government forces are being destroyed. What have you gained from sacrificing so many victims, the loss of the revolutionary movement? You managed to establish various limited ties with the masses. These ties have now been sacrified in the name of adventurist forces. We are all going through a difficult period. These are days of trial. The strength of the ties with the masses is revealed during such periods. Have a look at the regions that you call "liberated areas". Your effectiveness has been wiped out like letters on sand. This happened because you have not trusted the people. You did not chose to learn from the people and above all from the struggle from the working class. You disdained the methods of the working class. In so-called "liberated areas" you were content with carrying out individual acts of heroism and your duels and you did not unite with the people, having had enough fascist terror, are justly opposed to terror acts of all kinds. The fascist and neofascist circles that instigated terror and NAP murders now wish to exploit the people's just reaction against terror. They are encouraging attacks against all democratic circles under the banner of "struggle against terror". All those who are not collaborators and who are not politically blind should now realize that terror under the current conditions serve only the enemy.

Young revolutionary friend, break the circle of hopelessness that the enemy has forced upon you. Turn toward the masses and the working class. Adopt their methods of struggle. Learn from their experiences. Those who aspire to a revolution should trust the working class. All those who dedicate their revolutionary energy to the working class will be supported by the struggling workers and the communists. As stated by Comrade Bilen on the occasion of the anniversary of the death of the 15 [Founding Members of the Turkish Communist Party], communists will do all that is necessary in order to save the young honest revolutionaries from the bloody quicksand they have been pushed into.

DE VOLKSKRANT LAUDS 'MODERATE' BREZHNEV REPORT

[Editorial: "Brezhnev"]

[Text] Relations between the Kremlin and the White House should be the backbone of the international political order. Attempts to negate this reality--as Carter tried to do--lead irrevocably not only to deterioration in Russian-American relations, but also in the political climate of the whole world. This Kissingeresque consideration is the nucleus of Brezhnev's speech to the 26th CPSU Congress.

Despite the verbal cold war between Washington and Moscow, the Soviet leadership seems to want to continue to follow the old trusted road--international detente on the basis of Soviet-U.S. cooperation. Brezhnev's moderate attitude must convince the Reagan administration of the desirability of this.

Brezhnev's wish to meet Reagan soon--by comparison, Carter had to plead for his "summit" for 2 and 1/2 years--shows how very serious Moscow is about getting onto a good footing with Washington again. U.S.-Soviet summit talks and Moscow's preparedness to reopen the already finalized SALT II agreement in any case hold out the promise of an improvement in the climate in the international arena. However, we should bear in mind that the Russian presence in Afghanistan remains a serious obstacle in any efforts to improve relations between the superpowers.

New, and somewhat surprising, is Brezhnev's offer to include the whole of European Russia in the framework of European security through a system of military confidence-building measures. At the CSCE Madrid conference the Russians have up to now opposed a French proposal which provdes for similar measures "from the Atlantic Ocean to the Urals." The Western nations,including--by the narrowest margins--the United States, have made this a condition of their participation in a European disarmament conference. In this respect this significant territorial concession from Moscow is gratifying. It has in any event brought a European disarmament conference a step closer, and also brought us the chance of the survival of the detente process.

GENERAL WARNS AGAINST RENOUNCING OF COUNTERARMING

[Text] Hamburg, 26 Feb (DPA)--Bundeswehr inspector general, General Brandt, today warned against one-sided renunciation of counterarming. In a lecture at the Overseas Club in Hamburg, Brandt stressed that counterarming offers a chance of entering into disarmament talks with the USSR.

The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has shown that the USSR was prepared to run greater risks than the West had estimated. Western yardsticks in assessing Kremlin policies obviously were wrong. With the USSR basing its claim to power exclusively on military means and keeping strategic weapons (SS-20's) aimed at Europe, awareness is growing in the Federal Republic that it could be blackmailed by military means, Brandt said.

The Federal Republic therefore is particularly interested in the NATO strategy of preventing war by a credible deterent. The other side should realise that if need be these means would be used. In Brandt's view, these include nuclear weapons.

FINANCE MINISTER DISCUSSES AID WITH TURKEY'S OZAL

[Excerpts] Bonn, 26 Feb (DPA)--Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoeffer met yesterday evening in Bonn with Deputy Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal. They discussed Turkey's desire for a new financial aid program by the Western industrial countries.

According to the ministry today, during the 90-minute discussion, Matthoeffer made it clear that the Federal Republic was prepared, in principle, again to participate after 1979 and 1980 in such a program. Ozal also has held talks on financial aid with the governments and international organizations in the United States and Japan. Before his visit to Bonn, Ozal met in Paris with OECD secretary general Emile van Lennep.

Matthoeffer and Ozal, who drew attention to his country's economic situation which late has improved, also discussed the internal political situation in Turkey, the return to parliamentary democracy and the question of human rights.

PAPER EXAMINES BONN AS EL SALVADOR MEDIATOR

[Bonn correspondent Dirk Cornelsen editorial: "Bonn As Mediator"]

[Text] Most newspaper readers a few weeks ago probably did not even know exactly where El Salvador is located. In the meantime, however, the small Central American country has made the headlines. The reason for this is not a suddenly aroused interest in people suffering from a civil war and gross social injustice, but "big world politics." The new U.S. Government is inclined to set an example on this small country's territory, which Washington considera a "sphere of influence" or, put less politely, the U.S. "backyard," so as to contain "world communism."

Unlike Afghanistan, the Soviets have not invaded El Salvador, nor have the Cubans. The fact is that the United States supports the ruling junta in economic terms and with arms. Washington, in turn, charges the "communists" with supplying arms to the junta opponents, these opponents, however, being only partly communists. To this extent, the joint statement by Foreign Minister Genscher and his Costa Rican counterpart has a small blemish: This statement condemns the "efforts of communist states" to extend their influence on Central America also with "nonpeaceful means." Genscher and Niehaus do not, of course, "condemn" the fact that the Americans also endeavor to maintain their "influence," that is, their de-facto hegemony, in this region in order to prevent the Soviets from obtruding themselves there.

This also indicates some differences between Foreign Minister Genscher and Social Democratic cabinet members in the assessment of the situation in El Salvador. But obviously, politicians of all parties in Bonn are agreed that only a political and not a military solution is possible for this conflict and that, to this end, the democratic politicians in both camps in El Salvador must be brought to one table. For, unlike Nicaragua where an evil dictator by the name of Somoza was confronted by a broad popular front, the junta in El Salvador is headed by a Christian Democrat who himself was once the victim of the reactionary former government party but whom some people regard as the mere liberal "front" of the reactionary military men in the junta.

Thus, while Washington fears another "Cuba" in El Salvador, the European allies see the danger of another "Vietnam" for the Americans if they continue to bet on the military card and fail to seek a political solution by including the democratic forces in the opposition. The allies have also familiarized the U.S. President's special envoy during his tour of Europe with their objections. It is impossible to tell now, however, how much Washington will be impressed.

Likewise, it cannot be predicted whether the mediation efforts of the Federal Government and of leading Social Democrat leader in El Salvador, Guillermo Ungo, elicit pessimism. But perhaps the active engagement of Bonn will not remain totally devoid of effect on Washington after all. Bonn with its weak forces will be unable to achieve peace in El Salvador, let alone against the U.S. Government. Yet, it should be persuaded to actively seek a political solution via negotiations. Leading opposition politicians in El Salvador lately aslo have advanced publicly in Bonn their desire for talks with Washington. Should the Europeans succeed in concerted action to dissuade the Americans from their erroneous course, this would already be a considerable accomplishment.

DIE WELT VIEWS 'CONDITIONS' OF BREZHNEV 'OFFER'

DW251443 Bonn DIE WELT in German 25 Feb 81 p 6

[Text] Brezhnev offers the West a comprehensive "active dialogue" and reaps joyous commentaries in the United States as well. But this must not become a dialogue under Soviet preconditions.

For example, the moratorium for Eurostrategic weapons proposed by Brezhnev pertains to talks between Washington and Moscow which are conducted on the American side under close participation of the European allies. Stripped of all the trimmings, such a moratorium means that the Soviet missile lead in Europe is to be perpetuated and the NATO counter-arming decision unhinged.

This "offer" is aimed at sore spots in the Atlantic alliance and, not least of all, also at such spots in Bonn. Genscher can still hear Wehner's comment that the Soviet armament in Europe was "defensive." He is aware of the quarrel over the counterarming decision in the chancellor's party and he takes note of the fact that Schmidt and Wehner comment on the Brezhnev speech optimistically rather than clearly as to its substance. This is why the foreign minister has once more tied the Bonn government down to the counterarming decision in a very public way.

If such muscle flexing is already required in Bonn, then it is necessary to recommend urgently that the Western allies first come to terms on a clear marching route before they enter into the "active dialoge" with the Soviet Union. This would harbor a great chance for establishing a common line between the United States of Ronald Reagan and the Europeans.

FRG-GDR BORDER COMMISSION AGREES ON MEASURES

[Text] Weimar, 26 Feb (DPA)--The joint border commission of the Federal Republic and the GDR during 2-day consultations in Weimar has adopted a program for the maintenance of frontier waters this year. It provides for 147 measures, 52 of which are to be one-time projects. Last year, 139 water management measures were taken.

The head of the federal German delegation, Irmgard von Rottenburg, stated in Weimar on Thursday at the conclusion of the 55th session of the commission that the talks on protection against flood water on the Elbe also were continued. The basic differences of opinion on the course of the Elbe frontier between Lauenburg and Schnackenburg apparently are not effecting decisions on flood water protection. Frau von Rottenburg stressed that the frontier information offices, set up by both sides so that information about cases of damage or difficulties in the border region can be reported more quickly, recently have been used to a greater extent. An agreement was signed in Weimar, in which the rules for establishing, marking and documenting the frontier are comprehensively compiled for the first time.

The next meeting of the border commission is set for 26 and 27 May in Eutin. In addition to representatives of the Federal Interior Ministry and Ministry for Inner-German relations, the federal German delegation includes officials of the federal laender bordering on the GDR and the federal border protection service.

OFFERGELD RETURNS FROM YAR, COMMENTS ON AID

[Text] Bonn, 26 Feb (DPA)--Federal Minister for Economic Cooperation Rainer Offergeld said he is satisfied with the results of his 4-day official visit to the YAR. In an interview with DPA today, Offergeld said that his talks showed that not only good, but friendly relations exist between the Federal Republic and North Yemen. As a nonaligned state, North Yemen is an "important stabilizing factor" in the Middle East.

During his visit, Offergeld met with President 'Ali Abdallah Salih and many other government officials. He also signed two agreements on financial and technological cooperation worth DM35.7 million. Offergeld said that Bonn's aid was praised "amost extravagantly" during the talks. The FRG came in for special praise because it has granted aid without conditions and has not tried to force the country into one-sided political dependence. Bonn so far has made more than DM400 million available to North Yemen, one of the world's poorest countries. The Federal Republic is its largest benefactor after Saudi Arabia. Offergeld announced that the Federal Republic's development aid in North Yemen would in the future concentrate more on agriculture. Up to now, the development of the infrastructure, for example road construction, has been the main priority.

PRESS TO PARTICIPATE IN EUROPEAN TELEVISION GROUP

[Text] Frankfurt, 25 Feb (DPA)--German newspapers are perpared in principle to participate in the development of a new European television company which is to broadcast, via its own satellite, programs in French, German and Dutch, probably from mid-1985. This is the outcome of a special delegate conference of the federation of German newspaper publishers in Frankfurt on 25 February. The initiative for a European satellite television company has come from Conpagnie Luxembourgeoise de Telediffusion, which has invited newspapers to participate. The German press is to have an influential say not only in the German program but also in the European project as a whole. The television broadcasts would take in large parts of France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Benelux countries. In line with the target area, the program is to reflect the European spirit.

FOREIGN MINISTER ON REAGAN MEETING, U.S. TIES

Radio Interview

LD261026 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] Jean Francois-Poncet spent an hour with President Reagan in the White House yesterday. The official communique speaks of an extraordinarly friendly atmosphere. That says it all. The French foreign minister spoke to our special correspondent (Bertrand Vanier):

[Begin recording] I was especially impressed by the sincerity, the simplicity, the firmness of the new President of the United States. I was also very impressed by the importance he gives to Europe's point of view. I think that we have at the White House an interlocutor who will listen to what the Europeans have to say, and I see someone who understands and appreciates the position and the policy of France. Of course, Europe is Europe. France is France and (?things and possibilities) are not necessarily the same. I thing that what is needed, and what this administration is disposed to understanding, is that the alliance which unites us leaves room for diversity and for the independence of the various partners. [end recording]

FRANCE-SOIR Report

LD271107 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 25 Feb 81 p 9

[Michel Lemarchand report: "France Is an Important Associate For the United States"]

[Excerpt] Last night, channel two television viewers had 90 minutes to form in turn an opinion of the American and French diplomacies with reference to the international situation and to appraise the excellence of relations between the two countries.

In fact, first, Alexander Haig and, later, Jean Francois-Poncet answered questions put to them by Jean-Pierre Elkabach and Alain Duhamel during the "cards on the table" program. The two ministers had a 2-hour meeting in the afternoon and are to meet again today. But last night they spoke separately and, as it were, "submitted their reports." Jean Francois-Poncet, who began his remarks with a short statement on the Madrid events ("It would be tragic if the democratic process were called into question again.") takes the view that France's relations with the United States are set fair. Washington, the minister recalled, has long sought only proteges. It now seeks associates and, looked at from this viewpoint, France is an important associate but an associate which has preserved its independence."

Asked about El Salvador and the new American administration's forceful statements aimed at checking Soviet aid to the guerrillas (through the intermediary of Cuba), he expressed the hope that American warnings will be heeded. "We condemn this interference." he stated, adding that, even though some reforms may be needed in that country, order has to be restored before they can be initiated. "No reforms can be implemented while insecurity prevails," he emphasized.

East-West relations, reactions to Leonid Brezhnev's proposals for an "active dialogue at all levels," the situation in Poland and the Afghan crisis also were discussed. The two ministers had already discussed these subjects during the day. Jean Francois-Poncet concluded: "My visit has shown that France plays an important role in the world because it pursues an independent policy, a clear-sighted policy whose aim is peace within a framework of security and dignity."

GISCARD RECEIVES NEW SRV ENVOY, COMMENTS ON TIES

NC262006 Paris AFP in English 1953 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] Paris, 26 Feb (AFP)--France shares Vietnam's hopes of a peace zone in Southeast Asia but this objective can only be attained by "mutual respect of the independence, territorial integrity and identity of each country in the region," President Valery Giscard d'Estaing said today.

The president was speaking after accepting the credentials of new Vietnamese ambassador in Paris, Mai Van Bo, who represented North Vietnam in France before the country was reunited in 1975 and was a key negotiator in the 1968-1978 Paris peace talks.

Noting that "difficulties" remained between France and Vietnam, Mr Giscard d'Estaing said that nobody was in better position than the new ambassador to assess current relations and smooth the path to closer cooperation. The president touched on the subject of the repatriation of the bodies of French troops killed in the Indochina war, saying that a solution to these "humanitarian problems" should be found without delay. He said that relations between Paris and Hanoi must be viewed in the light of the current situation in Southeast Asia, although France was as eager as Vietnam to see the region become a zone of "peace, stability and cooperation, free from outside interference."

MITTERRAND DISCUSSES FRENCH-CHINESE RELATIONS

LD260933 Paris L'UNITE in French 20 Feb 81 p 5

[Claude Estier interview with PS presidential candidate Francois Mitterrand in Beijing: "Francois Mitterrand Talks About China"--date not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] This is the second time that you have had the opportunity to visit modern China. During your first trip 20 years ago, you were received by Chairman Mao Zedong. Today Mao is dead. You wanted to visit his tomb but it is closed. Do you see that as a symbol of what has been happening in this country for the past 20 years?

[Answer] Of course things have changed in 20 years. There have even been two revolutions which have brought about abrupt and at times violent changes. Different teams have followed each other and there have been clashes of ambition. Have the people merely been spectators? Not entirely. They too were actors in their way during the cultural revolution, urged by different groups to espouse ideologies which were not necessarily theirs. I am meeting some of the same people today: Deng Xiaoping was already CCP general secretary when I came in 1961, but his career was then interrupted several times inasmuch as he was disgraced on several occasions before attaining his present position....

[Question] Does he strike you as the regime's most powerful man at present?

[Answer] I do not know enough about the Chinese situation to say that. But all the indications are that he is--his confidence, his vivacity, his humor and the impression given by his relations with other people. All the signs indicate that he is the driving force. But aside from Deng Xiaoping, whole new teams have appeared and the main indication to which I could point is that, compared with the days of Mao who received me in his house at Hang Cho in 1961, the country seems to have emerged from the period in which ideology reigned supreme, and people are trying to tackle current problems in a way which is different from the one we in the West know, living as we do under the domination of managers. My impression is that for the four main directions he has chosen, Deng Xiaoping is trying to surround himself with men of 50 or 60 years of age, which seems very young here, in order to ensure that they run the economy according to rules which are fairly similar to ours although this is a communist society inspired by Marxist-Leninist principles.

[Question] Have your talks with the Chinese leaders left you with the feeling that China is worried about the course taken by the international situation and the threat of world war?

[Answer] This is a subject which Deng Xiaoping constantly raises: The Soviet Union is, according to them, expansionist and hegemonist. The Soviet Union is strongest and it now has the men, arms and objectives which the United States lacks, and it would take an alliance between the United States, China and a finally united Europe to counter that power. That is the argument. Of course, many points in this argument are valid, but distinctions must be made. It certainly seems as if Deng Ziaoping has no reason to fear an attack on China. He thinks that Europe is the weak link and he urges us to organize and resist this Soviet hegemonism. This way of looking at things may also contain a little spite or at least cunning, the aim being to divert the Soviet Union's main attention to the West. However, it is a world view which should be considered.

[Question] Did it seem to you during these talks that the Chinese leaders are interested in the political battle in France and that they expect a change from the forthcoming presidential elections?

[Answer] The leaders are discreet on this point. The argument "we do not interfere in other countries' internal affairs" predominates and that is only natural. Moreover, I would never have asked such a question. Perhaps it would be better to think about what could be called the people's reactions. Several of us experimented and some journalists who were with me reported those experiments. They had the opportunity to question people during chance encounters in the course of their visits and they asked them if they knew what France is and where it is. Many did not know whether France was in Europe, America or Asia. Thus, they have a very confused idea. However, by some curious paraody, when you questioned them further, you found that France means something to them, as if it were distinct from its geographical position and had taken on a symbolic, or even ideological, significance. They know that France exists and that it has a particular message. That message is not identified with a conservative and rather sleepy France, which is the impression given by the present government. France is identified with movement, universal proposals and progress. I repeat that all this is rather confused, but naturally you feel that there is hope. I do not want to make too much of this, but the mere fact that the idea of France has penetrated here and in this way is fairly indicative of the direction our policy should take.

[Question] Do you think that if you were elected president of the republic next May, it would make it possible to bring a different image of France to these countries--I am thinking of China and of Korea which we also visited.

[Answer] It would certainly bring a different type of relations. We are still living under the reign of conventional diplomacy which is a little cold and indifferent and follows patterns which date from a different century. It seems to me that French diplomacy has taken little account of the development of the Third World, of what are known as the nonaligned countries, and that it is failing to notice the birth of the world which will be dominant in the 21st century. I feel that what you learn from socialist encounters opens your eyes better to these problems.

[Question] So a socialist France would be more capable of conveying that message?

[Answer] If I did not think so, I would not be doing what I am doing.

COMMUNIST 'MANIFESTO' TURNS AGAINST MARCHAIS

LD262218 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Excerpt] There are new upheavals in the French Communist Party. Only 2 months away from the first round of the presidential elections, 70 personalities claiming to belong to communism are publishing an open letter whose subject is quite clear.

They say the party can no longer be confiscated [as heard] by a small group of leaders. The text later becomes even more precise: The communists complain to the Communist Party of what they call "its sectarian reliance on the workers." They openly desire a return to the strategy of the Union of the Left. In short, they clearlyturn their backs on Georges Marchais, a particularly interesting phenomenon.

As Arlette Chabaud says, the list of the contestants represents a motley collection. One can find all sorts: [Chabaud] Indeed, all sorts of Communists have signed the manifesto and I do not use this in a perorative sense--old militants with some 50 years within the party; young people, some still members of the party. Others have left it and yet others have been thrown out, most of them intellectuals who have occupied or are still occupying responsible positions. The signatories want, as you said, a return to the Union of the Left. They also reject any subordination to the policies of the Soviet state, insist on a recognition of the autonomy of the trade unions and of the "movement of May 1968" and, finally, demand democracy within the workers' movement. The text thus gathers various personalities and while it condemns the current Communist Party line, particularly the stand toward immigrant workers, it does not ask voters not to vote for Georges Marchais in the first round of the presidential elections.

[Text] Left Radical Movement [MRG] Chairman Michel Crepeau reaffirmed at a press conference on 24 February that he will maintain his candidacy for the presidential election "to the end" if the MRG extraordinary congress, due to take place in Versailles (Yvelines) on 28 February, votes for his candidacy by a two-thirds majority. Mr Crepeau explained that his presence is necessary "because a majority do not want the PCF and many French people distrust the PS." In these circumstances, the MRG candidate could be "a catalyst in the revival of the center left" and thus "add" to the left and its candidate, who will face the right's candidate in the second round.

Recalling that his candidacy is not intended "to be in conflict with the PS," Mr Crepeau stressed that "if Francois Mitterrand cannot govern with the Communists, he will have to draw support from the center left." Turning to the possibility of the National Assembly's being dissolved if Mr Mitterrand is elected, the mayor of la Rochelle stated: "It would be crazy to dissolve the National Assembly without first having proportional representation adopted, thereby ensuring that there is no need to be indissolubly linked to the PS and creating the right conditions for a new majority." Regarding those Left Radicals who are hostile to his candidacy, Mr Crepeau indicated that, once his candidacy has been decided by the congress, "those who do not respect that decision will be placing themselves outside the party."

LE MONDE CITES POLL ON CANDIDATES' CAPABILITIES

[Text] LE NOUVEAU JOURNAL of 20 February carries an opinion poll conducted by Public S.A. on 11 and 12 February on a representative national sample of 1,000 people aged 18 years and over. According to this poll, Giscard d'Estaing is "the most capable" of "improving the French people's lives" (23 percent). He is ahead of Mitterrand (22 percent), Marchais (13 percent), Chirac (13 percent) and Debre (4 percent). The head of state also leads on the question of "making the French economy more competitive." With 22 percent against 20 percent for Mitterrand, 14 percent for Chirac, 11 percent for Marchais and 3 percent for Debre. On the question of who is "most capable of representing France in the world," the president achieves his best score (35 percent) while Mitterrand, Chirac, Marchais, Debre and Mrs Garaud have 21, 11, 9, 3 and 2 percent respectively. Twentytwo percent of those questioned regard the Socialist candidate as "the most capable" of "fighting unemployment," compared with 20 percent for Marchais, 15 percent for Giscard d'Estaing, 12 percent for Chirac and 3 percent for Debre.

PAJETTA PROBABLY WILL NOT ADDRESS CPSU CONGRESS

LD251914 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 25 Feb 81

[Text] Soviet authorities are examining the first U.S. reply to Brezhnev's proposal for a summit meeting. Here is a report by our correspondent Jas Gawronski, speaking from Moscow:

U.S. reaction to Brezhnev's speech was examined here with attention, the spokesman of the Soviet No 1 said in reply to a question on the possibility of a Brezhnev-Reagan summit. He added that the Kremlin is not putting forward any preconditions for a dialogue--also at summit level--with the new U.S. administration. Moscow, with great difficulty, is hiding its desire to relaunch a dialogue with the United States.

There were few speeches by foreign delegates at today's CPSU congress session. TASS carried summaries of the speeches by the Yugoslav and Portuguese delegates. They were not particularly interesting. There is increasing doubt, however, as to if and when Gian Carlo Pajetta will speak. The French representative spoke yesterday--not Marchais, who stayed at home for the presidential elections. Delegates of minor parties also spoke. According to some reports, negotiations are going on between the Soviets and the Italians about the text of Pajetta's speech, and it cannot be excluded that the Italian representative will be allowed to speak, but outside the congress in a large factory. It is said that the return of the Spanish delegation to Madrid after the attempted coup d'etat was also due to the fact that it was not allowed to address the congress.

PCI'S PAJETTA ON BERLINGUER'S ABSENCE FROM MOSCOW

LD261413 Paris LE MATIN in French 23 Feb 81 p 8

[Marie-Delphine Bonada interview with PCI Directorate member Gian Carlo Pajetta in Rome: "An Italian in Moscow"--date not given]

[Text] LE MATIN: If the Soviet Union were to invade Poland while you are attending the CPSU congress in Moscow, what would you do?

Pajetta: That question does not strike me as very relevant, and I would answer that I never ask myself the question. But I can say that I was in the USSR with Comrade Luigo Longo when the invasion of Czechoslovakia happened. We immediately returned to Italy. But before leaving we find time to tell the Soviets that we deplored what had happened.

LE MATIN: An important meeting between Eurocommunists and Eurosocialists has just been held in Madrid. Did you discuss Poland?

Pajetta: Of course, and not only the communists present but also the social democrats and socialists were all convinced that a process of renewal in Poland is not only necessary but is already under way and must be followed with sympathy and interest. We are all convinced that this is a problem to which we can make a contribution without its being interpreted as interference. Nonetheless, it is a Polish problem and it is up to the Poles alone to solve it.

LE MATIN: With regard to interference, what do you think of the CPSU's letter published by the Italian weekly PANORAMA which accuses the PCI of interference in Polish affairs?

Pajetta: We have already said that there have been verbal and written exchanges with the Soviets. We have expressed the same anxieties in these exchanges as we have demonstrated in public.

I do not understand why the fact that differences of opinion exist should cause a scandal. It would be scandalous if a document was discovered which said: "Beware, we are going to write some things in the newspapers, but it is not what we think."

LE MATIN: There have already been instances of previous PCI secretaries general not attending the CPSU congress. Why is Berlinguer not going this time? Is there a political reason.

Pajetta: I do not really remember the reasons why Togliatti and Longo did not go to Moscow. But it was not for political reasons. There are no political reasons this time either.

LE MATIN: But this time neither Marchais, nor Carrillo nor Berlinguer are going. Surely this is not a coincidence?

Pajetta: Perhaps. But in any case there has been no consultation between the three and, if they are not going to Moscow, each is doing so for specific and different reasons.

LE MATIN: What do you think of the PCF's rather xenophobic election campaign?

Pajetta: The French Communists say that that is not true. Moreover, I have observed in the past few days that they have successfully fought the expulsion of an African trade union member. Unfortunately differences of opinion are exaggerated during election campaigns. That is the price you pay for democracy. The different parties are already throwing all their feeling into the election campaign and elements of unity, which nontheless exist even in France, are being eradicated. If there were in addition to be interference by foreign parties to make things worse, it would be unacceptable. I cannot even accept the wording of your question.

COUNCIL OF REVOLUTION COMMUNIQUE CRITICIZES PSD

LD260344 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2330 GMT 25 Feb 81

[Text] The eighth congress of the Social Democratic Party [PSD] has been the subject of a communique released about 1 hour ago by the Council of the Revolution, still in session at this moment. The communique was read to the media by the council's acting spokesman, Major Vasco Lourenco:

[Begin recording] At its meeting of 25 February 1981, the Council of the Revolution was briefed on the closing session of the PSD congress where it was represented by a delegation of three councillors, following an invitation extended to the council by the PSD.

The Council of the Revolution takes note and regrets the discourteous manner in which its delegation was received and feels bound to highlight the fact that the integrated strategy motion approved at the congress stated that the PSD will continue not to accept the Council of the Revolution as a democratic interlocutor, which, apart from constituting a manifest contradiction to the invitation extended, appears to reflect the party's wish to persist in attitudes of overt (?confrontation) between institutions constitutionally enshrined in the present democratic regime. Such attitudes are in no way compatible with the need for a normalization of public life, which is indispensable for the consolidation of Portuguese democracy.

PSD Replies

LD262140 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1930 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] The PSD today reaffirmed that it regards the Council of the Revolution as an unnatural body in a democracy. In a communique released late this afternoon by the PSD Standing Committee in connection with the Council of the Revolution's communique issued yesterday on the way the council's delegation was allegedly received at the closing session of the PSD congress, the PSD challenges the council's view that its delegation was received in a discourteous manner.

The PSD points out that, despite its views on the need to disband the Council of the Revolution, this does not prevent the party from treating the council as an organ of sovereignty which the council in fact still is.

PS STATEMENT ACCUSES PCP OF INTERFERENCE

LD261321 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 18 Feb 81 p 3

[Excerpt] The Socialist Party [PS] has accused PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal of commenting "with complete impertinence" on "aspects of the PS' internal life." "Such interference," a PS Press Office note states, "cannot pass without protest."

"The PS' internal affairs concern only the Socialists," the communique also states, adding that "matters have not yet reached the stage of involving the PCP or any rightwing party."

Rejecting such "interference," the PS Press Office asserts:

"The Socialists will know how to resolve their present differences by means of a democratic debate, strengthening their party and helping to increase the number of those who see in democratic socialism the response to the country's problems."

The PS' Lisbon Urban Area Federation (FAUL) has also criticized Alvaro Cunhal's statements.

In a communique issued by its secretariat the FAUL "warns" PS members against what it terms an "anti-PS campaign which is under way, on the part both of the right and the pseudoleft," and adds that "party members will make their decisions irrespoective of what releases Dr Alvaro Cunhal most."

The PCP secretary general maintained Monday that Mario Soares' line is leading the PS toward seeking alliances with the Democratic Alliance.

PCP Denies Interference Charge

LD261323 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 19 Feb 81 p 3

[Text of PCP Information and Propaganda Section 17 February note "Concerning 'Interference'"]

[Text] 1. Under the pretext of allusions to the crisis in the PS contained in the document on the political situation approved by the PCP Central Committee, various accusations of interference by the PCP in the PS' internal affairs have been disseminated.

2. These accusations obviously do not have the slightest foundation and are being leveled on the basis of clear speculation and a crude falsification of the PCP's stances.

3. In fact most news media, including a morning newspaper which today was conspicuous for such speculation, published reports on the PCP press conference which include statements by Alvaro Cunhal whose purport clearly rebutted the above-mentioned speculation and accusations of interference.

4. The PCP confined itself, as is its right, to describing and commenting on Mario Soares' political line, something which constitutes perfectly normal conduct in Portuguese policical life.

Those who apparently confuse the ascertaining of actual situations and political assessments with interference in other parties' lives are in fact revealing that they share a very restricted concept of the country's democratic life.

5. Let is also be added that a minimum degree of objectivity and impartiality makes it necessary to conclude that the allusions made by the PCP to the PS' current crisis are highly correct and judicious, when compared, for instance, with statements made over the last few years by PS leaders with respect to the PCP, its internal life and its leaders.

6. The clear lack of foundation for the accusations which are being leveled against the PCP clearly indicates that some people, with a complete lack of scruples, are seeking to use the falsification of the PCP's stances in the party political maneuvers in which they are involved.

AVANTE! HITS 'DEMANDS' OF SOLIDARITY UNION

LD261509 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 19 Feb 81 p 7

[Text] A great effort to surmount the current situation of instability emerges as the basic reason for the government reshuffle in Poland. Curiously, there appears to be complete unanimity with respect to the need for this. Is it a merely formal unanimity? Undoubtedly, just like the Polish United Workers Party [PZPR], the Polish people wish to surmount the current difficult situation along with the strengthening of socialism, which does not mean that everybody is striving in this same correct direction.

New Polish Prime Minister Jaruzelski stated in his first official speech: "The government will work honestly and consistently for socialist regeneration and for socialist democracy. It will combat the distortious stemming from the past, call to account those responsible for them and prevent all that is negative and contrary to socialist ideology. This is also the reason I firmly state that it is this government's constitutional duty to defend the values of our state's system and that the people's power should have sufficient strength to bar the way to people and processes whose aim is to turn back the wheel of history and whose goal is counterrevolution."

This is how the Polish Communists' and government's central concerns are defined--concerns connected with the need to surmount past mistakes, but also with the need to resist provocation at the internal and external levels. As the PZPR first secretary emphasized when presenting the new government: "Today, when the country faces enormous economic and social difficulties, when anarchy is spreading and discipline is decreasing and when we must face up to a disruption of production and, at the same time, overtly antisocialist, and even counterrevolutionary statements, the task of governing the state is becoming increasingly difficult and complex."

The current situation in Poland is undoubtedly due partly to the mistakes and deviations denounced by the PZPR itself. In addition, it means that the process of fully restoring the workers' confidence in the PZPR and in the government headed by the PZPR is not completely over. But is also has other causes. The spiral of demands which has recently been witnessed reflects the above-mentioned problems and also indicates the clear presence of provocative action--also within Solidarity. It is not by change that Solidarity leaders publicly described the results secured in the 31 January negotiations as the first stage "of the struggle to achieve the trade union's social demands." It is not by chance that curious reports are appearing (moreover, reappearing) that the "independent trade union movement" is preparing a "purge" of its members belonging to the PZPR. It is not by chance that commentaries are appearing, such as in the FRG newspaper FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU, asserting that "the new trade unions perceive their own role in a totally political manner and would like to develop if not into a second political center then at least into a body of institutional supervision of the party leadership."

A "truce" has now been agreed, but it is a truce which is apparently dependent, according to dubious statements by Solidarity leaders, on the Polish Government's acceptance of constantly reiterated demands.

It is also clear that, despite the apparent unanimity with respect to the urgency with which it is necessary to surmount the crisis in Poland and halt the escalation of disruption of the country's socioeconomic life, there are in fact different stances and, in particular, very different aims between those who are striving to defend socialist Poland's future and those who are attempting to use the weakening of the people's confidence for ends contrary to the real interests of the Polish people and the Polish working masses.

OFFICIALS MEET WITH CAPE VERDE FOREIGN MINISTER

[Text] Cape Verde Foreign Minister Silvino da Luz, who has been in Lisbon since Sunday, after taking part in the Nonaligned Movement conference in New Delhi, was received yesterday by both the president of the republic and the prime minister. In addition, during the meeting on Monday with his Portuguese counterpart, Andre Goncalves Pereira, the Cape Verde minister discussed, among other specific issues, cooperation between the two countries, Portuguese financial aid for the projects to enlarge and modernize Praia harbor and the training of skilled personnel.

Speaking to journalists at the conclusion of his meeting with General Ramalho Eanes, the Cape Verde minister stated that his contacts with the Portuguese authorities serves to "strengthen the friendship which has now been established, in accordance, moreover, with that which has been pursued by the leaders of Portugal and Cape Verde."

Also according to Silvino da Luz, "stock was rapidly taken," during the meeting with Minister Goncalves Pereira, "of aspects of the cooperation between the two countries." Matters connected with "galvanizing that cooperation" were broached. "We found complete readiness on the part of the Portuguese foreign minister to strengthen the ties of cooperation and friendship between the two peoples," he said.

Silvino da Luz also referred to Cape Verde's situation, specifically the priority aims of his government, which recently underwent a far-reaching reshuffle. He stated in this connection that his country's leaders, who now have "the experience of 5 years in power," intend to consolidate national independence and lay the foundations for Cape Verde's economic independence.

With respect to his country's relations with Guinea-Bissau, following the coup led by Nino Vieira, the Cape Verde minister recalled the stances adopted at the last congress of the African Independence Party of Guinea and Cape Verde, in which a new party--the African Independence Party of Cape Verde--was set up, completing the political separation between the two countries. However, he emphasized that Cape Verde wishes "to maintain the best possible relations with Guinea-Bissau, just as with Portugal."

The foreign minister returned to his country early this morning.

DEFENSE MINISTRY REPORTS ON COUP INVESTIGATION

LD270056 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] The Ministry of Defense has issued via its Information and Public Relations Office the following statement:

The army chief of staff has ordered the dismissal and subsequent arrest of Maj Gen Alfonso Armada Comyn, army deputy chief of staff, in connection with his actions on 23 and 24 February and on the basis of the results so far of the investigation into the events surrounding the assault on the Congress of Deputies. On the basis of this investigation, there are signs pointing to an unconstitutional attempt by him to take over the position of prime minister. The investigation will justly apportion responsibility and in the 1st and 3d military districts corresponding judicial proceedings are already under way. To continue this task, the government, in consultation with the Supreme Council of Military Justice and within the terms of article 147 of the Code of Military Justice, has decided to appoint Jose Maria Garcia Escudero as special judge with jurisdiction over the entire national territory.

From statements by those allegedly implicated who are at present under arrest, more people who are implicated are being uncovered in other commands and are being dealt with initially by their respective ranking superiors, without prejudicing whatever later judicial actions may take place. An example of this is the dismissal of Gen Jose Leon Pizarro, the chief of the Maestrazgo 3d division, and the arrest of Gen Luis Torres Rojas, the military governor of the district and Province of La Cornuna, and Col Jose Ignacio San Martin Lopez, chief of staff of the Brunete 1st Armored Division. The public will be duly informed aboutthe incidents and the people responsible as the investigation proceeds, subject to the usual discretion regarding the secret nature of the hearings in order not to prejudice the course of the investigation.

Meanwhile, the Ministry of Defense appeals to the responsibility of the media to avoid speculation and the spreading of unsubstantiated stories so as not to inflict moral harm upon the honor of people and the good name of the institutions. In order to provide the media with all necessary news facilities a central news unit will be set up inside the Secretariat of State for Information from 0800 on the morning of the 28 February, which will include not only the Secretariat of State but also the Ministry of Defense and the Ministry of the Interior.

MILITARY GOVERNOR DENIES INVOLVEMENT IN COUP BID

LD262106 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] According to Maj Gen Luis Torres Rojas, the military governor of La Coruna, it is not true that he had contacts with high-ranking officers of the Madrid Armored Division on the eve of the attempted coup. Maj Gen Luis Torres Rojas spent the Sunday at a camp in Figueiredo, Pontevedra. On Monday he went to Madrid on family legal business. While in Madrid he heard that there was to be an act of homage to an old friend, a general, at the headquarters of the armored division. It was there that he was taken by surprise by the news of the attempted coup, and he went directly back to La Coruna to place himself at the orders of the captain general of that military region. Maj Gen Luis Torres Rojas arrived in La Coruna in the early hours of the morning. This information was supplied by the major general himself to Spanish National Radio in La Coruna.

CIVIL GUARD NOTE EXPLAINS ACTIONS IN COUP ATTEMPT

[Text] The directorate general of the Civil Guard has published a note explaining the actions of this corps in the attack upon the Cortes and stopping any rumor which might implicate the Civil Guard as a whole in this attack. The text of the note is as follows:

1. The members of this corps who took part in the occupation of the Palace of the Congress of Deputies were [word indistinct] of only three units and no single unit was involved as a whole in the events.

2. All commanders, officers, noncommissioned officers and troops garrisoned in Madrid presented themselves spontaneously to their respective units. They placed themsleves under the orders of their usual commanders once they learned of the events, obeying loyally and punctually all orders from the directorate general of the corps.

3. The units of the corps in the rest of the country maintained permanent contact with this directorate general as well as with the direct orders of General Aramburu Topete.

4. From the moment the events became known the director general of the Civil Guard, having given the appropriate orders to take control of all the corps' manpower, quickly presented himself to the Palace of the Congress of Deputies and from that moment assumed the direction of operations to foil the attack on the building and release unharmed the persons being held there.

5. After analyzing the situation the following decisions were adopted:

To avoid any incident which could have adverse repercussions for the persons being illegally detained there.

To implement measures aimed at obtaining the maximum amount of information on the situation inside, while at the same time applying psychological pressure on the members of the corps who were illegally occupying the palace, thereby persuading them to voluntarily evacuate.

To plan actions for going in using force should the aforementioned measures fail to bring results.

6. The measures here resulted in a group leaving the palace during the morning, and to the total surrender which came shortly afterwards.

7. It is to be emphasized that at all times, from the beginning of the siege to the evacuation of the palace, the forces which guaranteed immediate security belonged to the Civil Guard. Moreover, those involved in the events gave themselves up to the director of the Civil Guard, who ordered them to be transferred into custody.

8. The Civil Guards Corps offers its thanks for the assistance given to it by all bodies and persons at the scene, in circumstances which were so difficult for this benemerita [common name for the Civil Guard] institution, in particular the armed forces of state security. All the aforementioned is being made known to stop any report or rumor tending to implicate the Civil Guard as a whole in the events which took place.

This was a note issued by the directorate general of the Civil Guard to explain the manner in which the forces of that corps acted in the attack upon the Cortes Palace.

SPANISH, GDR DELEGATION CLASH AT CSCE ON TERRORISM

LD262250 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] Terrorism was an issue which caused another clash between the Spanish and the GDR delegations when for the second day the CSCE was studying the Spanish proposal which is supported by all the NATO countries and Ireland. The GDR delegate criticized the Spanish speech made a few days ago, describing it as aggressive. The Spanish delegate, Rafael Espotorno, made it clear that the Eastern bloc does not categorically condemn terrorism as laid down in the proposal. The GDR, as the Soviet Union did on the day this proposal was earlier debated, referred to national liberation movements which should not be included, although they do not appear in the text as such, within this section.

The whole polemic arose following the first statements of the Reagan administration on taking over in the White House, which referred to the national liberation movements as terrorists and accused the Soviet Union of definitely supporting these actions. As is known, in order to draft a final document--and this is the stage the conference is at the moment--the consensus of the 35 countries is needed for all the texts, and a draft which brings together the criteria of the Eastern bloc and the Western countries will require a consensus of this nature in the majority of subjects.

MINISTRY CALLS FOR INDEPENDENT DEFENSE SATELLITE

LD251239 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 25 Feb 81 p 17

[Text] Britain is having second thoughts about the decision taken nearly 10 years ago to depend on NATO and United States space satellites for secure defence communications. The Defence Ministry has stated a requirement for an independent United Kingdom defence satellite in orbit by late 1984. A decision on who will get the 100 million pound contract is expected before the end of next month for inclusion in this year's defence white paper.

A defence spokesman confirmed yesterday that the desired position of the new satellite is over the equator at 6 deg west, putting it close to the Ascension Isles on the longitude of Lands End. This would provide communications coverage for the Royal Navy, whose need for secure surface links is greatest among the three services in the Atlantic and Indian Oceans.

Contestants for the contract are Marconi Space and Defence Systems (a GEC-Marconi electronics company) and British Aerospace. The defence equipment policy committee is due to discuss their proposals today. The Marconi proposal offers a communications payload that is entirely British in design and manufacture, stressing this to be a vital factor in a defence application. For its design, British Aerospace will obtain the communications equipment from the United States. British Aerospace currently holds a leading position in Europe. Both companies are competing--and collaborating--in civil and military projects for a worldwide market valued at 1,500 million pounds.

[Text] The BBC is to start a new broadcasting service to Afghanistan and step up its programe output to the Soviet Union. The moves are a result of Moscow's intervention in Afghanistan and because the Russians are still jamming BBC broadcasts to the Soviet Union.

The new service to Afghanistan will go out in Pashto, one of the country's two official languages, and is aimed at a prospective audience of 16 to 18 million Pashto speakers, many of them along the northwest frontier of Pakistan. The Russian service will broadcast an extra 30 minutes of programmes each day from the end of March. The increase will allow the BBC's Russian service to restructure transmissions to provide a continuous five-hour block of programmes from 7 pm to midnight, Moscow time.

The increases in BBC broadcast's abroad was announced today by Mr Douglas Muggeridge, managing director of the BBC's external services. He also announced that the BBC's Turkish service would be increased by 30 minutes to a total of 1 1/2 hours a day to meet the greatly increased demand for information since the military takeover in Turkey. Mr Muggeridge said the BBC already broadcast in Farsi, the other language in Afghanistan, and had a large audience of listeners there. He hoped that the introduction of the new language service there would increase the BBC's audience in a critical part of the world.

Talking about the increase of broadcasting hours to Russia Mr Muggeridge said: "Ever since the Soviet Union reimposed jamming of our Russian service we have been seeking ways to counteract its effects on our broadcasts." Mr Muggeridge said the jamming operation--which started soon after the labour unrest and upheavals in Poland--was costing the Russians many millions of pounds. "Research from America shows that we have an audience in Russia of about 12 to 13 million people but many of those obviously listen to the world service in English as well and those broadcasts are not being jammed."

In the past year, said Mr Muggeridge, the service had sustained a cut of just over 3 million pounds out of its capital expenditure and it continued to live under the constant threat of more cuts. While international broadcasting was expanding, the BBC, as Britain's voice. had to struggle even to maintain its existing service.

O FILELEVTHEROS: ROLANDHIS, HAIG TO MEET IN MAY

NC270836 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 27 Feb 81 p 1

[Special report from Washington, 26 February]

[TExt] According to authoritative political circles in Washington, the new U.S. administration includes the Cyprus issue among the international problems whose solution takes priority. In order that this issue may be advanced, a meeting will take place between U.S. Secretary of State Haig and Cyprus Republic's Foreign Minister Rolandhis.

Following contacts by the U.S. Embassy in Nicosia with the Cyprus Foreign Ministry, a meeting has been arranged to take place in the middle of next May.

According to the same political circles, the Haig-Rolandhis meeting is considered significant for the formulation of the new U.S. administration's position toward the Cyprus problem.

It is mentioned that the meeting will afford an opportunity for Cyprus' foreign minister to expound the Cyprus Government's positions on the Cyprus problem and its views regarding the possibilities for the United States to act in the correft direction for the advancement of a solution to the Cyprus problem.

Of course, the Cyprus Government has repeatedly declared that precisely because of Turkey's dependence, both economical and military, on the U.S. chariot, the United States is in a unique position to exert pressure on Ankara to abandon its intransigent position on the Cyprus problem.

The same political circles also consider the date of the Haig-Rolandhis talks as most helpful to the United States because it will then be in a position to take an effective initiative on the problem.

Next May offers itself as the appropriate time for action by the United States since, at that time, the pretext which currently causes inactivity in the intercommunal talks and in other parallel activities regarding the Cyprus problem will have been eliminated. The pretext is the elections in the Turkish Cypriot community. It is understood that on the occasion of his visit to the United States it will be possible for Rolandhis to meet with other members of the U.S. Government and important congressional personalities.

It is considered certain that Rolandhis will also meet and hold talks with UN Secretary General Waldheim, the results of which will put an important seal on the efforts to promote a solution to the Cyprus problem under UN aegis.

O AGON: USSR MUST DENOUNCE TURKISH INVASION

NC220737 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 22 Feb 81 p 2

[From "Our Positions" column: "The 'Favorable Conditions'"]

[Text] The comment by the Soviet agency APN on the Cyprus problem basically repeats the well-known Soviet positions on our problem as well as a point that is characterized by vagueness, which is probably intentional. It specifically says that the failure to find a solution is due to the unbridgeable differences between the two communities, as well as to the absence of favorable conditions.

The comment would have been more comprehensible at this point if it stipulated which favorable conditions were absent. For us, the absence of these conditions is due to the continuing occupation of Cyprus by the Turkish troops, an occupation which strengthens the intransigence of the other side.

The denunciation by the Soviet Union of the invasion--something that has not yet happened--and the demand for the withdrawal of the Turkish troops by name, would definitely create better conditions for a solution to our problem.

MIKHAILIDHIS ON ELECTIONS, INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

OW261902 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] Chairman of the New Democratic Front [NEDIPA] Mikhailidhis, speaking in Limassol, mentioned, among other things, that the coming elections give the opportunity to the people to decide whether they want a struggle based upon a program for action or on spur-of-the-monent uncontrolled nepotism and unjustified intransigence.

Mikhailidhis also stated that positive elements in the summit agreements and in the opening statement of the UN secretary general on the intercommunal talks were not exploited. This permitted the Turks to promote their own positions with tactical firmness.

The NEDIPA chairman stressed that the insistent refusal of the Turks to submit proposals on the territorial issue and to discuss it are the main reason why negotiations have not entered into the substance of the matter. He added that Turkish efforts toward lifting of the so-called economic embargo are part of their effort to upgrade their own regime and downgrade the Cyprus Government.

LISSARIDHIS ON TALKS, PARTY USE OF RADIO

NC261846 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis, speaking at a gathering of his party at Anthoupolis, has stated, among other things, that the people must be fully informed on the principles upon which the intercommunal dialogue is being conducted. He also said that all those participating in the National Council are in the council as representatives of the people to whom they have to report and not as experts.

Lissaridhis also said the Cyprus Broadcasting Corporation is not a party tool of the government and the ruling party but is a tool for the objective dissemination of information to the people. He added that in preelection periods the government's activity should not be presented more extensively than the activities of other parties, because everything is under the people's judgment.

ATAKOL DISPUTES APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADORS

TA261447 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1255 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] Lefkosa, 26 Feb (AA)--Foreign and Defence Minister Kenan Atakol of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus said the Greek Cypriot administration, having violated the 1960 Constitution of Cyprus, had no legal right to appoint ambassadors abroad on the basis of that constitution without consulting the Turkish Cypriot community.

Atakol made the statement in commenting on the announcement of the Greek Cypriot administration that former Justice Minister Mikhailidhis had been appointed Ambassador to Paris.

Atakol added the French Government and world public opinion should realize that neither could such an envoy unilaterally appointed represent all of Cyprus, nor would his acts be binding on the Turkish Cypriot community.

PRIME MINISTER, FOREIGN MINISTER LEAVE FOR JIDDA

TA261225 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1200 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] Prime Minister Ulusu and the delegation accompanying him left Istanbul for Saudi Arabia at 1415 today to attend the preparatory meetings of the goodwill committee that will mediate between Iran and Iraq. Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen and special advisers from the prime minister's office and the Foreign Ministry are part of the delegation headed by Ulusu. The meetings of the goodwill committee will begin in Jidda tomorrow. The committee was established during the Islamic summit meeting in At-Ta'if last month.

Ulusu on Iran-Iraq Conflict

TA261511 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu left for Saudi Arabia today to attend the preparatory meetings of the goodwill committee that will mediate between Iran and Iraq. Ulusu held a news conference at Yesilkoy Airport before his departure:

[Begin recording] In accordance with a decision adopted at the [Islamic] Conference, a goodwill committee, composed of representatives of seven countries and the conference secretary general, has been set up in connection with the Iranian-Iraqi dispute. In addition to Turkey, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Zambia, Senegal, Guinea and the PLO [as heard] are represented in the committee.

A decision was also made to set up a committee at the head of state and government level. After the third Islamic Conference, intense contacts began between officials from the Iranian and Iraqi Governments the honorable Islamic Conference secretary general, Habib Chatti, and the Pakistani foreign minister. As a result of these contacts, an agreement has been reached on the program of the visit which the goodwill committee is to make to Iran and Iraq. According to this program, the committee members and the heads of state and government will hold a preparatory meeting in Jidda at the headquarters of the Islamic Conference on Friday, 27 February. The committee will then meet with Iranian officials in Tehran on 28 February and 1 March and with Iraqi officials in Baghdad on 1 and 2 March.

As you know, Turkey is watching the armed clashes between Iran and Iraq with great concern. Our stand on the issue is clear. Turkey desires a peaceful solution to the conflict between Iran and Iraq--both of which are our neighbors and friends--in a way acceptable to both sides. Turkey supports all moves in this direction. I will be leaving for Jidda with our Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, to participate in talks to be held in Saudi Arabia, Iran and Iraq with the hope that the goodwill committee's contacts will contribute to establishing and maintaining peace and stability in our region and the world. Thank you. [end recording]

The goodwill committee set up in accordance with a decision made at Islamic Conference summit in At-Ta'if last month will hold its preparatory meeting at the Islamic Conference organization headquarters in Jidda tomorrow. The committee will later hold contacts in Tehran and Baghdad. The committee will later meet in Riyadh to assess these contacts.

Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is participating in the goodwill committee's meeting, will later officially visit Bangladesh, Malaysia and Pakistan. In reply to a question put to him on this issue during Ulusu's news conference, Turkmen said:

[Begin recording] After the goodwill committee concludes its task and after our honorable prime minister returns to Turkey, I will visit Bangladesh, Malaysia and Pakistan.

All these visits are friendly ones. We have very good relations with all these countries. The only purpose of my visits is to give a new impetus to these relations and to exchange views with the foreign ministers of these brotherly countries on issues concerning our regions and world peace. [end recording]

TURKMEN INTERVIEWED ON WORLD, REGIONAL ISSUES

TA261953 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1515 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] Ankara, 26 Feb (AA)--Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen reaffirmed the stand of the Turkish Government that the defence of the Persian Gulf was a matter for the Gulf states themselves, and Turkey (?had not) been asked for any role in the Gulf area beyond her committment to NATO. Turkmen made the statement in a lengthy interview on various aspects of Turkish foreign policy published in the Istanbul daily "HURRIYET" Thursday.

U.S. and Turkey

The foreign minister agreed the new U.S. administration of President Ronald Reagan placed emphasis on military and economic (?aid to) Turkey, but denied U.S. [indistinct] or 'implied' any desire for Turkey to play a role beyond the NATO region in connection with any U.S. plans.

Commenting on reports appearing in the U.S. press that the U.S. rapid deployment force would be attached to the Supreme Commander of NATO Forces in Europe (SACEUR) Turkmen explained the U.S. general serving as SACEUR in fact wore two caps, a NATO one, and as the commander of U.S. forces in [word indistinct].

Turkey, he added, could not of course know or intervene in any role the U.S. envisages for itself in the Persian Gulf area, but she was definitely not involved directly or indirectly in the question.

Turkmen dismissed as "mere speculation" rumors alleging Turkey might allow the U.S. rapid deployment force to use her war corridor, or to refuel or stockpile in her territory.

The mere presence of a strong Turkey in the southeastern flank of NATO would be a "deterrent force" by itself, contributing to stability in the region, Turkmen admitted, but that was something entirely different from envisaging a special role for Turkey in the region as alleged.

Turkey adheres to her position supporting the stand of the Gulf states themselves that the defence of the Persian Gulf [word indistinct] their concern only and no one else's, Turkmen reiterated.

U.S. Aid

Foreign Minister Turkmen said any U.S. aid under the new defence and economic cooperation agreement between the U.S. and Turkey (?will) still have to be approved by that country's Congress. The Reagan administration had proposed, as Deputy Premeir Turgut Ozal had announced after his recent visit to Washington, a 400 million dollar (?military) aid, and 300 million dollar economic aid to Turkey plus an Exim Bank credit.

No Blocs in Region

Turkmen denied another set of rumors that Turkey might be part of a new bloc in the Middle East when he stated his government wishes to have friendly relations with all countries of the Middle East "without distinction".

(?We) want to be on as friendly terms with Syria as with Jordan, and with Iran as with Iraq he said, adding "and of course intend to develop our friendship and cooperation with Saudi Arabia."

His recent visits to Jordan and Saudi Arabia had been planned long ago, he explained, and had nothing to do with any regrouping in the region.

Moral of Baghdad Pact

"Turkey has carefully assessed her experience with the Baghdad Pact, which she has signed in the past. She is experienced enough not to go along with any tendencies to form a new grouping".

Cyprus and Greece

Turkey preserves her goodwill in the Cyprus question, the foreign minister said. At present, the question of Maras (Varasha) called the "little package" and the overall constitutional question called the "big package" were being carried along together in intercommunal talks, he said, but Turkey would be pleased with progress that may be recorded in any aspect of the talks.

Turkey had been understanding about the reintegration of Greece into NATO's military wing, he noted, but finds it incompatible with the concept of being allies for Greece to insist on a fixed ratio for military aid to itself and to Turkey.

On the demilitarization of the Aegean islands, Turkmen (?said) Turkey has no objection to Greece arming itself commensurately with her [word indistinct] needs, but in turn, Greece should not object to Turkey's normal defence readiness.

The Soviet Union

Turkmen explained the recent NATO exercise near Erzurum in eastern Turkey had been based on certain political hypotheses as all military exercises must. But in reality, there (?is) no deterioration in Turkey's relations with the Soviet Union. In fact, economic relations might be strengthened further, with the Soviet minister of external economic relations scheduled to visit Turkey early in March.

U-2 Flights

The question of U-2 overflights had most likely been outmoded Turkmen believed with the U.S. most probably having developed other ways of monitoring Soviet activity in the 2 years since the U-2 dispute arose.

Europe

The foreign minister believed France (?now) considered Turkey a better and more stable partner for economic cooperation.

(?Talks) with Federal Germany on the visa required from Turkish citizens and the OECD framework for European economic aid would start in April, he announced. Turkey expected to obtain credits ranging from 1.2 to 2 billion dollars this year from OECD member countries he said.

Turkmen believed parliamentarians in the Council of Europe assembly [words indistinct] constructive understanding toward Turkey [passage indistinct].

OZAL RETURNS FROM TRIP, COMMENTS ON LOANS

TA261747 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] Minister of State and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal, who concluded his contacts abroad, returned to Ankara today. In a statement at Esenboga Airport, Ozal said that Turkey needs close to $2 billion in foreign loans this year, but that this amount will gradually decrease in coming years. Ozal said that Turkey will obtain loans close to $1.5 billion from OECD countries this year and that the rest will be obtained from the World Bank and from the postponement of loans. Expressing the belief that close to half of the amount of the loan to be extended to Turkey within the OECD framework will be supplied by the United States and the FRG, Ozal added that Japan will loan to Turkey this year more than the amount it did last year.

Ozal said that the OECD meeting will be held in the first week of May and that the contacts on the coordination of the aid will be made by OECD Secretary General van Lennep and by FRG Minister of Finance Hans Matthoeffer. Noting that Turkey's foreign loan needs will gradually decrease in future years, Ozal concluded by saying that recent economic developments are encouraging.

ENERGY MINISTER DESCRIBES OIL PRODUCTION PLANS

[Text] Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol has said that officials expect to go 3,000 meters deep in the South Dincer-1 well, near Mardin's Nusaybin District, within 15 days. Bingol, who is touring oil producing regions in southeastern Anatolia, held a news conference during which he said that the South Dincer-2 oil well, recently opened, had already been drilled 1,030 meters. He added that at 1,549 meters this well would yield 500 barrels of oil daily. He expressed the hope that better quality oil would be found at the deeper levels. The energy minister pointed out that it would be impossible for a long time for Turkey to allocate $4.5 billion annually for oil. He added: By exploiting all possibilities I am convinced that we will manage to produce local oil that will meet our demands.

Serbulent Bingol stated that oil drilling would be emphasized and that investments worth 7 billion Turkish liras would be made this year. He noted that a foreign loan of $35 million would also be used for this purpose. He said that there were plans to open 54 oil wells this year. At this news conference, Serbulent Bingol explained that the World Bank extended a loan of $54 million for the processing of 6 million tons of oil from the 300 million ton lower quality oil reserve in Bati Raman. The oil in this region which has a low level of fluidity will be raised to the surface of the earth with the use of carbon dioxide. This system is expected to yield 10,000 barrels of oil daily in 1983.

NEW KEMALIST ASSOCIATION ESTABLISHED IN ANKARA

TA261740 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Text] An association called "The Kemalist Leap Union" [Kemalist Atilim Birligi] has been established in Ankara. At a news conference today, the leader of the association, Baha Vefa Karatay, said the association has been established with the goal of keeping alive and propagating the love of Ataturk, the Turkish reforms and Kemalist principles. He added that the principles of Ataturkism are the only path for Turkey and that they have progressive, civilized and universal characteristics that can ensure real democracy to humanity. He concluded by saying that the Kemalist Leap Union will continue its activities in a more effective manner through branches soon to be opened throughout Turkey.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON AFGHANISTAN QUESTION

[Text] Bonn, 1 Mar (DPA)--In the opinion of Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, a new initiative on Afghanistan should in the first place come from the states in the region concerned, the Islamic countries and the nonaligned nations. Afghanistan is a problem brought on by the Soviet Union's military intervention in a nonaligned Islamic country of the Third World, Genscher said in an interview with an Indian correspondent in Bonn, which was circulated by the Foreign Office on Sunday.

However, Bonn's foreign minister also made it clear that the European states do not intend to "practice political abstinence" in regard to the Afghan question. Genscher recalled that the EC states on several occasions have supported the restoration of an independent, neutral and uncommitted Afghanistan as well as the Afghan people's right to self-determination and have helped to back a UN resolution to that effect. "We will continue this policy," Genscher said.

CDU/CSU REJECTS BREZHNEV'S MORATORIUM PROPOSAL

[Text] Bonn, 28 Feb (DPA)--The CDU/CSU opposition in Bonn says the moratorium proposed by the Soviet Union on the stationing of medium-range missiles in Europe is not acceptable. However, the West's reply to the proposal made by Soviet party chief Leonid Brezhnev should not be a "mere no," said the union's defense policy spokesman, Manfred Woerner, in an interview with Radio Bremen today. Brezhnev has to be taken at his word.

Woerner suggested that the Soviet Union should be called upon to halt the production and stationing of its own SS-20 medium-range missiles and gradually to reduce the number of the missiles already stationed. Brezhnev thus could show that his offer of freezing medium-range missiles in Europe is serious. A timetable excluding delaying tactics should be drawn up. The West again should submit proposals as to how reciprocal supervision of the agreed limitations could be achieved with the aim of achieving equality and balance of the nuclear potential at the lowest possible level.

Woener also advocated a meeting between U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Brezhnev as suggested by the Soviet party chief. But this has to be very carefully prepared in talks with the Western allies. A "sheer show meeting at the wrong time" could hinder relations rather than improve them.

EL SALVADOR MEDIATION TALKS TERMED 'IMPOSSIBLE'

LD271258 Hamburg DPA in German 1047 GMT 27 Feb 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 27 Feb (DPA)--No talks will take place in the Federal Republic for the time being between the two sides in the El Salvador civil war. An SPD spokesman said in Bonn today that neither junta President Jose Napoleon Duarte nor leader of the Revolutionary Democratic Front (FDR) Guillermo Manuel Ungo is prepared to go to Bonn within the foreseeable future.

El Salvador's mission in Brussels confirmed that Duarte has abandoned his European tour for the time being. It was not yet certain when the tour will take place.

Government Spokesman Becker said today the Federal Government very much regrets that it is evidently impossible for the time being to bring together for talks representatives of the two sides in El Salvador. The reason is the reluctance and even the negative attitude of both sides to talk to one another. This is beyond the influence of the Federal Government.

FDP SPOKESMAN URGES U.S.-SALVADORAN OPPOSITION TALKS

[Text] Mexico City/Managua, 28 Feb (DPA)--Helmut Schaefer, the FDP Bundestag foreign policy spokesman, has come out in support of beginning a dialogue between the U.S. Government and the opposition Revolutionary Democratic Front (FDR) of El Salvador. Schaefer said today in a telephone conversation with DPA in Managua that the United States would be well advised "to be prepared to give the democratic opposition the opportunity to talk." Schaefer also said that European aid to Nicaragua should be continued and possibly increased in order to prevent a "lean" to the East.

Schaefer, who is traveling through Central America in coordination with [as received] Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Economic Cooperation Minister Rainer Offergeld, talked with FDR President Guillermo Manuel Ungo and several members of the Nicaraguan leadership, including Arturo Cruz, member of the junta of the Provisional Government of National Reconstruction, Miguel d'Escoto, the foreign minister, and Henry Ruiz, member of the Sandinist leadership. He also talked with Alfonso Robelo, former member of the junta and now in the Nicaraguan opposition.

The FDP deputy said there is no reason for the United States to refuse the dialogue with the opposition in El Salvador. He said that increased military aid to the Salvadoran junta under President Jose Napoleon Duarte, who does not possess true power, is not a solution. Ungo has said he is willing to talk with the United States and other governments, but has rejected a direct dialogue with Duarte. This is why a Bonn attempt at mediation had failed.

In the case of Nicaragua, Schaefer said that fears about the country being communist are "in no way justified." He said that a Cuban solution has been "categorically rejected" and that the will exists for political pluralism, a nonaligned foreign policy and an economy with state and private enterprises. However, there is, he said, "a certain tendency" within the Sandinist leadership. That is why, without Western aid, a "lean to the East will certainly result." The United States has threatened to halt its aid because Nicaragua has been involved in arms deliveries to the guerrillas in El Salvador.

"Mr Giscard d'Estaing made a point of calling the Spanish monarch to express his support for the action taken by the king with a view to preserving constitutional and democratic legality in Spain," a presidential spokesman stated.

DELIVERY OF PATROL BOATS TO LIBYA CANCELED

NC281247 Paris AFP in English 1237 GMT 28 Feb 81

[Text] Paris, 28 Feb (AFP)--France has decided not to deliver 10 missile-launching patrol boats ordered by Libya, reliable sources said here today, as retaliation for Tripoli's intervention in Chad.

Three of the craft have been moved from Cherbourg, on France's northern Normandy coast, where 100 Libyan sailors are training to use them, to Lorient on the western Brittany coast, French naval sources said. They are manned by French crews.

Two more are berthed at Cherbourg and five are under construction there.

Libya placed the 3,000-million-franc (660-million-dollar) order in August, 1977. The first of the rapid patrol craft, which was launched in June, 1979, and had undergone its tests, was to have been delivered to Tripoli this month.

The fifth boat was launched for arming and testing this January, a month after Libyan troops helped Chad President Goukouni Oueddei drive the rebel forces of Hissene Habre out of N'djamena.

The French Government and the leaders of several African states bordering Chad have expressed serious concern about the Libyan buildup in Chad, and the proposed merger of the two states. It is estimated that there are now between 7,000 and 10,000 Libyan soldiers in Chad, some of whom are reportedly fighting Habre guerrillas in the mountains of the east, near the Sudanese frontier.

LE FIGARO SEES 'NOT SO ROSY' FRENCH-U.S. TIES

[Jacques Jacquet-Francillon article: "Yalta Obsession"]

[Text] Is there another honeymoon between Paris and Washington? Television channel two viewers may have gained this impression on Monday night while listening in succession to Alexander Haig and Jean Francois-Poncet.

"France's contribution to the West's security and the security of the alliance is irreplaceable and fundamental," the U.S. secretary of state said.

"France wants to see a strong and stable America because America is our ally and because the world balance depends on U.S. strength and stability," our foreign minister echoed.

Does this mean that the weather is set fair and that agreement prevails?

Clearly, things are not quite so rosy--the television screen does not lend itself to practicing diplomacy; its magnifying mirror blurs nuances and misrepresents realities.

With Ronald Reagan's accession, relations between France and the United States have undoubtedly taken a turn for the better. Considerable efforts have been made by both sides in recent weeks to understand each other better. This in itself means a great deal, but reciprocal good will has nonetheless not been able to disperse all clouds.

A shadow, evan an obsession, continues to hand over French-American relations. This obsession--the Yalta obsession, which Charles de Gaulle and Georges Pompidou shared--is no stranger to Valery Giscard d'Estaing, not without reason.

French diplomacy has continued to be mainly governed by the fear that, just as in Nixon's and Johnson's time, Reagan's America will resolve problems facing the planet and even the universe in secret talks between the leaders of the two superpowers.

The French president knows that such a tete-a-tete is unavoidable. The haste with which Leonid Brezhnev suggested a resumption of dialogue with the White House at the highest level was certainly bound to strengthen this conviction, even if the reply outlined by the secretary of state meant that Ronald Reagan is in no hurry and that he prefers to judge the Soviets first by their deeds.

But the fact that Valery Giscard d'Estaing believes that something is unavoidable does not necessarily mean that he believes it to be desirable. Didn't he clearly indicate in the interview which he recently granted to the WASHINGTON POST that he would prefer to see a large-scale East-West summit in which the world's principle leaders would participate? Would such a forum be acceptable to the Americans? This is doubtful.

True, Alexander Haig has strongly emphasized for the benefit of French television viewers his intention to "consult with" the U.S. allies as frequently and closely as possible. Why shouldn't he be believed? Ronald Reagan himself has already repeatedly given similar assurances.

But didn't we also hear the secretary of state refer to the "NATO family?" The choice of word was not fortuitious. There can be no real "family" without a head. In the event of danger, a "family council" is convened for the purpose of asking the opinions of sons, brothers, uncles and cousins. Once this is done, it is up to the "head of the family" and him alone-especially if he looks strong--to decide!

REGIONAL POLL GIVES MITTERRAND PRESIDENCY

LD271239 Paris LE MATIN in French 25 Feb 81 p 3

[Text] Mitterand: 55 percent. Giscard: 45 percent. According to an opinion poll carried out by Louis Harris-France for LE MATIN and LE QUOTIDIEN DU NORD ET DU PAS DE CALAIS. the Socialist candidate will beat the outgoing president by 10 points in the second ballot in the Lille-Roubaix-Tourcoing urban center. A spectacular reversal of trends compared with 1974, when Valery Giscard d'Estaing obtained 50.7 percent of votes in the second ballot.

In the first ballot, Francois Mitterrand is to obtain 33 percent of the votes; Valery Giscard d'Estaing, 26; Georges Marchais, 17 and Jacques Chirac, 11 percent. In the second ballot, he is clearly to outdistance Giscard d'Estaing as a result of both a considerable transfer of Communist votes (73 percent of Georges Marchais' supporters intend to vote for the Socialist candidate) and the support of a significant proportion of the Jacques Chirac electorate. In the second ballot, Chirac's supporters are to divide as follows: 66 percent intend to vote for Valery Giscard d'Estaing and 22 percent for Francois Mitterrand.

This change in the Nord-Pas de Calais electorate's voting intentions is undoubtedly a result of the general deterioration in that region's economic and social situation since 1974. Obviously, Valery Giscard d'Estaing's visit in October 1980 failed to counterbalance the consequences of unemployment and the industrial crisis.

The Louis Harris-LE MATIN-QUOTIDIEN DU NORD ET DU PAS DE CALAIS opinion poll was carried out from 9 through 16 February among a sample of 400 people representative of the Lille-Roubaix-Tourcoing population.

CARIBBEAN-EUROPEAN SUMMIT HELD IN GUADELOUPE

LD271525 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 Feb 81 p 11

[Excerpt] Pointe-a-Pitre--"We do not speak the same language but it has become imperative for us to better understand one another and to get on well together." This was how Mr Yves Pravaz, chairman of the Pointe-a-Pitre Chamber of Commerce, on 23 February, greeted the 450 participants in the Europe-Antilles-Caribbean international economic summit in Guadeloupe. The summit is to continue until 26 February.

Officials responsible for economic affiars in the three Antilles and Guyane departments, delegates from independent Caribbean countries which have signed the Lome accords, representatives of the European Community Commission and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Pierre Bernard-Reymond have come to Pointe-a-Pitre to participate in this meeting, the first of its kind. Its aim is to establish a basis for regional economic cooperation in the Caribbean. The work of the three envisaged commissions will concern the development of trade exchanges, financial and technical cooperation between Africa, Caribbean and Pacific countries and [French] overseas departments, and regional projects (tourism promotion, air and sea communications and prevention of cataclysms).

Initial exchanges of views have led to the adoption of a resolution suggesting to Caribbean states the creation of a regional airlines to replace various small local companies.

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON TRIP TO EGYPT

AU281952 Rome ANSA in English 1920 GMT 28 Feb 81

[Text] Rome, 28 Feb (ANSA)--Italian Defense Minister Lelim Lagorio, who just completed an official six-day visit to Egypt, praised that nation's role in the region and called for stepped up aid for the Cairo government, according to the Socialist Party paper, AVANTI. "Egypt is a country which greatly interests us," the defense chief said.

"In its region and in the midst of considerable difficulties, it conducts a policy of stability, of calm, of non-interference in the internal affairs of others and respect for frontiers and treaties.

"For these reasons," Lagorio added, "we should assist Egypt more than we have up to the present."

Speaking about the outcome of his consultations in Cairo, the defense minister reported that, "We agreed that we will draft a bilateral protocol aimed at increased exchanges and cooperation between the two countries in all fields.

"The particulars of this international accord are already under study," he affirmed and noted that, "in Europe, Italy is number two on the list of Egypt's trade partners for purchases and number three for supplies. The completion of the protocol will advance us considerably."

In conclusion he said, optimistically, "I think I can say that this will provide increasing work for many Italian industries in all sectors."

KING JUAN CARLOS REAFFIRMS TIES WITH ARMED FORCES

LD281832 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1140 GMT 28 Feb 81

[Speech by King Juan Carlos at Saragossa Military Academy on 25th anniversary of his graduation--live]

Excerpts] My first words have to be to give thanks to God for allowing me today, after 25 years, to once again kiss, with my colleagues, the Spanish flag, and to feel that the time which has passed has served to increase our firmness in the fulfillment of the oath which we have sworn: our love for the fatherland and our belief in complete devotion of its service.

As you have expressed with your words, today is a day which is full of memories, but which also demands a serious pondering on our present position and on our future.

There are three things which, within the emotion of the occasion, today dominate my feelings and which I should like to communicate to you all as the king, as the captain general of the armed forces and as a colleague: a profound respect for the past; a considered firmness and calm resoluteness toward the present; and a conscious hope for the future.

Respect for the past: because this is the way in which I understand that one should look at each and every one of the pages, which, with their grandeur and servitude, make up the history of the fatherland to which we are proud to belong. That respect has to be more profound the nearer events are in time because only with respect and without passion will we be able to carry out, by overcoming nostalgia or rancor, the necessary analysis of errors and successes, in order to decide, with full responsibility, the path to follow.

Calm and considered firmness and resoluteness toward the present which is today strengthened after the ceremony which we have just carried out: [swearing allegiance to the flag] if the problems which we face are serious today, I say our resolve to overcome them is more serious still and our will to reach the goal of a Spain which, via a true democracy, achieves its fullness of peace, justice, liberty, progress and unity, is firmer than ever.

Conscious hope for the future: because I know and have faith in the Spanish nation, in the devotion and generosity of its men and women and in the capacity for solidarity of its lands and regions, and because I know and have faith in the armed forces of Spain, of which I have the honor of being supreme chief--armed forces which do not seek to monopolize love of the fatherland, but which do claim to occupy the most important post in its service; armed forces which suffer together with all good Spaniards when the flag of Spain is insulted or when its unity comes under attack; armed forces which are conscious of the strength that the nation puts into its hands and which, for this reason, are inspired by the strictest discipline, union and trust in their commanders; armed forces, in short, which, respectful of the constitution, will never renounce the complete fullfillment of the mission assigned to them by the latter; armed forces which have to know how to interpret with exactitude and wisdom that constitution, and to understand that the security of the fatherland draws no contribution from rash actions which place the armed forces and the state in general in critical situations to which there can be no honorable solutions, nor a normal continuity within the world in which we live.

Very recent events which are in the minds of us all should serve as a lesson to the armed forces, on the one hand, and to all the political forces of the government and opposition on the other, to accommodate their respective conduct with the aim of achieving order, security and the well-being of Spain, because it is not appropriate for political actions or news media campaigns to propitiate conditions for the creation of an atmosphere of unrest, of displeasure or of concern in the armed forces and the security forces, which have so often felt the wounds from violent attacks and whose spirit has been subject to critical or uncomprehending attacks.

Neither is it wise, having overcome the difficult circumstances which we have just lived through, to extend analysis, censure or moral sanction to whole groups because of the fact that there belong to them those who, bewildered by an absence of reflection, erroneously think that their hasty impulses will turn them into saviors of the fatherland and that paths toward the achievement of that salvation do not exist other than in subversion and violence.

Let us all draw the appropriate conclusions from the critical moments we have been through; let us face the future with the same calmness which served us in coming through them and in avoiding very grave consequences and with the support of a loyalty, a discipline and a patriotism which has been the general norm of the armed forces and public order forces during the delicate period of the transition.

I know that many of you in the ranks of the Civil Guard and the national police are in the vanguard of the action to eradicate terrorism and to maintain order in our nation without ever losing spirit, in spite of the graduation having suffered the wounds of cowardly murders, and without incomprehension, which sometimes comes into the open, provoking hate or vengeance in your actions.

When we are living through grave moments it is absolutely necessary for there to be sincere union without personal concerns, without selfish protagonisms, without an eagerness for subjective triumphs or the satisfaction of self-love, because the objective if nothing less than the well-being of Spain which we have to make an effort to achieve impartially and resolutely.

Our profession is also moved by a series of basic principles and unchanging virtues, of firm and unshakable ideas which characterize the conduct of the military and inspire its thoughts and actions.

There will be secondary or occasional aspects on which one may differ and maintain disparate ideas, but those fundamental ideas, about which there cannot be doubt or discussion and which unite the members of the armed forces, which direct their wills to a supreme goal, will always remain unchanging.

MORE HIGH-RANKING POLICE OFFICIALS RESIGN

LD281450 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 28 Feb 81

[Text] According to a report from the EUROPA PRESS agency, the minister of the interior has accepted the resignations of five high-ranking police officials whose cessation has been communicated to those concerned.

The dismissed [as heard] high-ranking officials are the following: Manual Ballesteros Garcia, commissioner general of the Central Intelligence Brigade; Jose Luis Fernandez Dopico, secretary general of the Directorate of State Security; Miguel Fernandez Robles, commissioner general of documentation; and the two division chiefs who also requested to be relieved, Jesus Caballero Gallego, from personnel and Federico Cavero, from education.

The minister of the interior has asked those resigning to continue in their posts until their replacements are announced.

The request for cessation submitted by Director General of the Police Manuel Blanco Benitez, has not been accepted for the moment, according to sources at the Ministry of the Interior, who say it is an appointment by the Council of Ministers and the cessation, therefore, should be directed to the Council of Ministers.

As you will recall, all these resignations were submitted in mid-February after the reaction caused in the country by the death of Basque Fatherland and Liberty Group member Jose Arregui.

ETA/PM WING PROCLAIMS HALT TO ARMED STRUGGLE

LD282018 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 28 Feb 81

[Report by unidentified correspondent in San Sebastian--live]

[Text] The Basque Fatherland and Liberty Group Political-Military Wing [ETA/PM] today announced a halt to the armed struggle.

At noon today, the Basque organization brought together at a location in Euzkadi [the Basque country] a group of representatives of the media, to whom a 14-page document was given listing a series of observations and announcing that the ETA/PM is halting the armed struggle. The document invites the ETA-Military Wing [ETA/M] to follow the example. It proclaims that the Basque people should struggle for their demands within the framework of political organizations, and makes an appeal for political negotiation. In the present circumstances, the document says, the armed struggle must be put aside in favor of institutional struggle. I now quote a paragraph verbatim:

One of those moments has arrived at which armed action must be put aside so as to leave the way open for other ways of solving the problems in hand. It is a moment at which the demand of the majority of the people is for political negotiation.

The ETA/PM also says: We are launching a political initiative to progressive Basque forces, to those who supported the statute and even to those who rejected it. And it makes an express appeal to the ETA/M, saying: The practice of armed struggle in the present circumstances is an element which, objectively, could render impossible the achievement of agreement among the political forces or which could prevent advances in agreements reached and therefore destroy them.

The document also affirms that none of the existing armed organizations came into being to confront a situation such as the one which arose last Monday when a group of Civil Guardsmen attacked the Congress of Deputies.

The ETA/PM explains that it had been contemplating this decision for some time but that the recent political events had made the organization decide to bring forward the moment of announcing a halt to the armed struggle.

In the long document, the ETA/PM gives a detailed account of its history from the time when ETA split into two wings in 1974. It submits itself to criticism and announces that the moment has come to lay down arms and to work through political organizations.

REPORTAGE ON CONTINUING TALKS ON U.S. BASES

NEWS Reports 'Good Atmosphere'

NC281557 Athens NEWS in English 28 Feb 81 p 12

[Text] Greek-U.S. talks on a new defense treaty regulating the future status of U.S. military bases in Greece are continuing without interruption, reliable sources said yesterday.

Early next week, the sources said, the Greek side is expected to submit draft letters, drawn up by the Ministry of Defense, referring to the need for modernization of equipment supplied to the Greek Armed Forces and for the creation of a defense industry in Greece.

Meanwhile, the heads of the two delegations, Foreign Ministry Secretary-General Roussos, and U.S. Ambassador Robert McCloskey, are in everyday contact, in efforts to expedite progress.

The atmosphere prevailing at the talks is "generally good," the sources said, and has not been affected by the "unfortunate" incident in Drama, where, about 10 days ago, a small U.S. Army detail performed unauthorized training maneuvers in the northern Greek town.

On the Drama incident, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis told political reporters yesterday that the government considers it an "unfortunate incident" and not a political act, and considers the whole issue closed following the apology offered by Ambassador McCloskey.

Diplomatic sources in Athens, nevertheless, described as a "mistake" the U.S. Embassy's decision to issue a communique on the incident without first consulting with the Greek Foreign Ministry.

U.S. May 'Guarantee' Borders

NC011047 Paris AFP in English 1040 GMT 1 Mar 81

[Text] Athens, 1 Mar (AFP)--The U.S., currently negotiating an accord to renew the status of American military bases in Greece, is ready to consider guaranteeing the security of Greece's borders with Turkey, diplomatic sources said here.

The guarantees, which would make a major switch in American policy, would not be included in the military base agreement itself, which has been under discussion for the last five weeks, the sources added.

The U.S. had only recently expressed the contrary view, that any such guarantee was barely conceivable between members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

Any American guarantee now would recognize fears expressed by both government and opposition here that Turkey--like Greece a NATO member--plans to claim certain Greek territories. Greek concern centers on several islands off the Turkish coast, including Lesbos, Khios and Samos, which Turkey wants demilitarized.

Formulating an American guarantee to Greece now would be an extremely delicate affair because of opposition from Turkey, Western diplomatic sources commented today.

The U.S. military base negotiations have meanwhile run into serious problems, including military aid to Greece and Turkey. Other problems are the extent of authority for the Greek commander of the bases, and whether the U.S. could use the areas in a possible Gulf operation.

NY TIMES NUCLEAR WEAPONS ARTICLE PROMPTS COMMENTS

Papandreou, Averof Exchange

NC281715 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 28 Feb 81 p 1

[Excerpts] The question of the storage and control of U.S. nuclear weapons in Greece took on explosive proportions as of yesterday after a New York TIMES article revealing the existence of secret agreements between the Greek Government and the United States on the exclusive and absolute control of such weapons by the Americans.

Late last night, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou made the following strong statement on the issue created by the New York TIMES article:

"Information included in the article by the well-known journalist Claudia Wright in the most authoritative U.S. newspaper is virtually catalytic both for the nation as well as for the government--the New Democracy government.

"The New Democracy governments have handed Greece over to the United States, turning it not only into an unfenced field but also into a private U.S. feudal estate.

"The heaviest mistake, however, which the Greek people will never forgive, is that the people were deceived without the knowledge of the Chamber of Deputies. During the time these governments were negotiating an alleged new agreement on the bases, from 1976 and until only yesterday, they agreed not only to the storage of nuclear weapons and to the exclusive control of such weapons by the Americans, but they also ceded the absolute right to the United States to use its nuclear arms against third countries.

"There is no precedent of a government, which functions within the framework of a parliamentary republic, of a government elected by the will of the people, which supposedly represents the peoples interests, which has sacrificed the peoples' sovereign interests on the altar of alien interests. The least which is expected today is that the entire government should resign."

National Defense Minister Evangelos Averof made the following statement:

"The article of the foreign journalist in the authoritative U.S. newspaper includes suspicious innuendos against Greek and U.S. official personalities, and it includes both known facts as well as unknown inaccuracies.

"Certain of these inaccuracies appear through the text of the published article itself. In the beginning, in fact, it asserts on the one hand that the United States maintains its exclusive control over nuclear weapons which allegedly exist in Greece while, at the end, on the other hand, it refers to a recent congressional report according to which the "two-key system" also operates in Greece, in other words the system which also presupposes approval from the Greek authorities which--if we do have nuclear weapons--are in control of one of the two keys.

"Similar observations could be made on other portions of the article of Miss or Mrs Claudia Wright. I do not believe that any further comment is necessary at the present. It is essential, however, to make an observation of a more general nature:

"One wonders what expediencies are served by this article which neither serves the security of the country and the alliance nor strengthens Greek-U.S. relations."

KKE-Interior Statement

NC012059 Athens I AVYI in Greek 1 Mar 81 p 1

[Text] The press bureau of the KKE-Interior has issued the following statement:

"The New York TIMES article and government statements once again confirm that nuclear weapons do exist on U.S. bases in Greece and that these bases inside Greek territory are a 'state within a state.' It has also been confirmed that in reference to some of these bases, it has been agreed that there will be no Greek control, not even formal, as well as that their scope of operation will extend even beyond the limits of NATO.

"More generally, any exercise of control over these bases is impossible for the additional reason that the Greek side lacks the necessary nuclear technology.

"The KKE-Interior stresses that it is essential to remove nuclear weapons from Greece without delay and that the U.S. bases, which are also a magnet that could attract nuclear reprisals and which destroy national sovereignty, should be abolished.

"The struggle for these goals must become the cause of all the democratic and patriotic forces of the country."

Government Rebuff of PASOK

NC011443 Athens NEWS in English 1 Mar 81 p 4

[Text] On Friday's article in the New York TIMES and the comment it has engendered in Greece, a government spokesman made a statement yesterday which said that on subjects of military organizations and defense equipment there are areas which no responsible government discusses publicly.

This policy has been followed, continued the statement, by all Greek Governments. No agreements have deprived Greece of control of allied weapon systems and military operations. Claudia Wright's allegation to the contrary is inaccurate and conflicts with the U.S. congressional paper to which she herself refers.

What must be stressed publicly, continued the statement, is that during the current negotiations of the Greek-U.S. defense and economic cooperation agreement, the Greek Government's firm line is that:

A. The bases are Greek, with a Greek Commander.
B. They serve only NATO aims.
C. There will be no secret texts.

This base for revision of the agreement on the basis was laid down first by former Prime Minister Karamanlis for discussion in Parliament from Oct 30, 1975.

Referring to a statement by Mr Papandreou, the government spokesman said that the government would like to hear how Mr Papandreou imagines Greece can cover her defensive needs outside the alliance. Apart from that, the spokesman said Mr Papandreou himself does not have the right to speak. He was a member of the centrist government that fully applied the agreement which even at that time was in force.

In a further statement yesterday, the PASOK president said that there were two subjects which today concerned the state and the people--that there are secret agreements between the Greek Government and the U.S. Government and whether or not the government has simply given up Greece for uncontrolled use by the United States, and is fooling the Greek people with shady negotiations with Pentagon representatives.

The New York TIMES article unfortunately happens to be true and the ease with which the government denies the truth is unbelievable. The New Democracy government is responsible to history, the state and the people and if it has a trace of national sensitivity, it should resign immediately. I am sad that it does not have the courage to carry out its final duty towards the Greek people.

U.S. COMPANIES SAID 'SABOTAGING' AVIATION INDUSTRY

[Text] The Greek Aviation Industry is being sabotaged by Lockheed personnel who administer it because this U.S. multinational company and the interests which it represents do not want this industry, which has such a vital importance to the country's defense, to gain stature.

This charge was leveled in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday by Mrs Virginia Tsoudherou (KODISO, Party of Democratic Socialism) during interpellations submitted by all parties of the democratic opposition relating to the situation prevailing within the Aviation Industry.

Mrs Tsoudherou accompanied her charge with the submission of official documents which prove that:

--No proper quality checks on aircraft engines are being carried out.
--Material used by the Aviation Industry is not handled with the exhaustive strictness necessary for aviation material.
--In the vital electronics sector, Westinghouse sent former household appliance salesmen to train the Aviation Industry personnel.

Mrs Tsoudherou also submitted another document in which an indignant U.S. employer mentioned: "The things which are happening here could not even have been done by a Turkish saboteur."

Replying to these charges, Deputy National Defense Minister A. Avramidhis admitted that "certain minor problems have existed" but he attributed them to the short operation of the Greek Aviation Industry and to the lack of experience of its technicians.

Questions on the Greek Aviation Industry also referred to the antitrade union activities of its administration, dismissals of employees by it and the hiring of "its own people" and the creation of a competing trade union. Also reported was the provocative behavior of American administrators toward Greek workers and employees.

The interpellations were submitted by Deputies Bandouvas (EDIK, Democratic Center Union), Mrs Tsoudherou, D. Mavrodhoglou and N. Kepesis (KKE), L. Kirkos (KKE-Interior), and L. Verivakis (PASOK).

I VRADHINI COMMENT ON LIBYA'S BOAT SEIZURES

NC281709 Athens I VRADHINI in Greek 28 Feb 81 p 14

[Text] An unfavorable atmosphere has been created in Greek-Libyan relations following the recent seizure of a Greek fishing boat by a Libyan naval vessel in international waters.

Press reports say that this incident is not the only one. Incidents have often occurred against Greek workers in Libya, and in certain cases Greek workers have not been allowed to leave Libya because of debts the Libyan Government claims are due from the employing companies.

The latest incident concerns the seizure of the Greek fishing boat Olimpiakos NM14, the property of Batista Brothers, by a Libyan naval vessel 35 miles from Misratah, outside the territorial waters of this country. Its crew of three Greeks and five Egyptians are being held by the Misratah police under the charge that allegedly the vessel entered Libyan territorial waters without permission. An unconfirmed report says that the crew will be tried. It must be pointed out that identical incidents of blatant retention of Greek crews and ships in Libyan ports have occurred before. In one case the seized Greek vessel was destroyed. The relevant Greek authorities are exerting efforts for the immediate settlement of this incident and the freeing of the fishing boat Olimpiakos NM14 and its crew.

This latest incident has caused agitation to the Greek maritime and maritime workers' circles and concern to the families of seamen who sail in this area. The frequent incidents in other sectors have also caused concern and distrust among Greek shipowners and technical companies in developing business relations with Libya, which could offer much economic benefit to both sides.

Government Protest

NC012117 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 1 Mar 81 p 28

[Text] The Greek Government yesterday protested the Libyan Government's illegal seizure and retention of the fishing boat Olimpiakos NM14 and her eight-man crew.

The Libyan diplomatic representative here was summoned to the Foreign Ministry yesterday morning where the director of the appropriate ministry department pointed out the adverse consequences that incidents such as this can have on the two countries' relations. As it was reported yesterday, the Greek fishing boat was seized far outside Libya's territorial waters (a distance of 35 miles from the coast) in an unquestionably international area. The boat was led to Misratah port by a Libyan naval vessel and, until yesterday, the Greek Embassy representatives there were not allowed to see the crew of the seized fishing boat.

LEBANESE DEFENSE MINISTER SKAF ON ARMS DEAL

AU271248 Vienna KURIER in German 27 Feb 81 p 2

[Hubert Wachter report: "Lebanon Probing for Arms Purchases"]

[Summary] "This week Lebanese Defense Minister Joseph Skaf has set the stage for a deal involving several hundred million [presumably schillings]. The top favorite is the Steyr works.

"'Lebanon has become the ground for experiments of all Middle East ideologies. Our situation is immensely difficult. Our country can only be saved if it possesses a strong, united army,' Skaf stated at an official dinner with Austrian Defense Minister Roesch.

"Couched in diplomatic formulas, he appealed to Austria that 'he might be able to hope for its assistance' which primarily involves 'political assistance' according to the official comment."

At his inspection tour, Minister Skaf was interested above all in vehicles. "It was not confirmed on Thursday whether weapons were discussed or not. Chancellor Kreisky will receive Joseph Skaf for talks on Friday morning. Kreisky: 'I shall not talk about arms deals. If the minister takes up the subject I must refer him to Minister Roesch and to the industry,' replied the chancellor to KURIER's questions about his role as an eventual middleman."

"Referring to Lebanon's position in the Middle East conflict Minister Skaf stated: 'We are not a belligerent nation; the conflicts are being carried into our country by other forces. The Austrian Army's organization shall be our model, and this explains our visit. Despite its smallness, the Lebanese Army allegedly possesses a tremendous budget of $1.5 billion for weapons purchases..."

Minister Joseph Skaf is considering, and this was confirmed by the Lebanese ambassador to Austria, dispatching a group of young officers to Austria for training.

Austrian Nationalrat Deputy Fritz Prechtl, president of the International Transport Workers Trade Union, commented on a possible arms deal with Lebanon: "This country is an area of tension in the Middle East, particularly with respect to Israel; we certainly would have doubts."

But Prechtl harbors no doubts concerning Libya. According to the SALZBURGER NACHRICHTEN, Al-Qadhdhafi may soon be offered Kuerassier tanks. Prechtl stated in this context: "If Egypt gets tanks from us they can be hardly denied to Libya. In addition, Libya is an important partner for us because of its large oil deliveries." As KURIER has been informed by Libyan sources, Libya will not protest against a tank deal between Austria and Egypt.

GISCARD ANNOUNCES CANDIDACY FOR NEW 7-YEAR TERM

LD021932 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 2 Mar 81

[Address by French President Giscard d'Estaing from the Elysee in Paris on 2 March--recorded]

[Text] Frenchwomen, Frenchmen, my dear friends: In just over 50 days, you are going to vote in the first round of the presidential election. In this connection, I have three things to tell you.

I shall return to you the power that you entrusted to me in May 1974. I have endeavored to exercise this power for the good of France, and also that of the French people, within the limits of my abilities. I have never thought that it belonged to me. I also knew that it belonged to you who entrusted it to me for the duration of my mandate. I shall return it to you intact.

I also want to thank all the men and women who helped me with their support to undertake my task in these difficult times. They are not the noisiest French people nor are they those whose life is easiest, but I have recognized them. They are the Frenchwomen and the Frenchmen who have made, are making, and who tomorrow will make France.

What is the political situation of our country 2 months before the election? The economic crisis, with the discontent and anxieties which it generates and which I understand, weighs upon everyone's mind. The opposition remains exactly the same, with the same leaders, bitterly engaged since 1958 in their struggle against the Fifth Republic; leaders condemned by the nature of things either to govern with the Communists, or to betray their electors after having benefited from their vote, which could not fail to have serious aftereffects, proposing state and bureaucratic formulas to get out of the crisis, formulas which have failed everywhere, and whose defenders have been driven from power.

At the same time, all the information indicates in an obvious way that no other candidate could win against the opposition. Each of you can understand, by a simple process of reasoning, that he would certainly, against his will, be carried toward a society that he does not want and toward the political and economic decadence which can be seen here and there.

All the efforts at recovery and putting things in order, all the brave work of the French people during the last few days, would be dissipated in a few months. Farewell then, to the stability of the franc and free enterprise; farewell to nuclear independence and France's role in the world. We have seen this happen elsewhere and we would see it at home too. We cannot agree to France's destiny being gambled in this way. It cannot be tied to an ineluctable current dragging it in the opposite direction to the one it wants to go. I will do everything in my power to avoid this happening to it. And I ask you to fight against this evil current and to give your personal support to the progress of France. France deserves a real democratic debate where the voice of reason and of the heart, of freedom and solidarity makes itself heard and will, I am sure, finally win through.

I have decided to present myself in the presidential election for a further 7-year term. Why? As president, I have no particular right to it and no one owes me anything. But in the 7 years during which I have kept vigil with France, I have come to know its problems and difficulties. I have perceived its future. I have sought and understood what has to be done for it to be strong, happy and proud and for it to adapt itself with confidence to the world, to use its potential which is great. I am going to propose this to you. So I shall be campaigning. What about? To choose a president for France who will represent it in the world and who will animate and direct its policy internally. The president cannot be a party man. I shall not be soliciting the nomination of any organization. I shall not accept any involvement, combination of manoeuvers.

That is why I am appealing to all the Frenchwomen and all the Frenchmen, that they themselves organize their support from the base of their town or country abode. It should be they who express themselves and they who gain the upper hand. I am not looking to recruit partisans. I am looking to unite the French. I shall not appeal to hatred or to vehemence. My role is not to tear up the national fabric. It is to sew it up again. That is why I shall be appealing to reason and unity to work and live together.

The president of the republic will continue his task right up to the end, as is his duty. The candidate will be entirely separate from him. I shall not be a president-candidate but a citizen-candidate. My campaign will comprise two stages. Up to the end of the month, by reason of my functions, it will be a campaign of information and explanation. Then, with the opening of the official campaign, it will be a campaign of meetings with you. I do not accept this campaign as a test but as a deliverance. For 7 years my state duty and the reserve necessary for my function have prohibited me from expressing myself completely freely. At last, I shall be able to tell you man to man what I have on my mind and in my heart. I shall give an account of my mandate. I shall show how I have respected the undertakings adopted in 1974. I shall tell the motives and the circumstances of all important decisions of my septennium. I shall show how, in the most serious economic crisis which the world has known for 50 years, France has stood firm in the face of it and has prepared its future; how it has progressed in its living standard, but also in its social justice in relation to the aged, the handicapped, families and manual workers; how it has protected its freedom; how it has organized its security and how it has acted in favor of peace, which was my prime concern, and for which I took personal risks.

I shall say what new problems are facing us, particularly our young people in employment and the future, and how we can solve them. This will be the central commitment of my campaign. I shall not make any promises which cannot be kept.

A personal word, before leaving you: In this debate, my fate is unimportant, either for you or for me. Everything fades away in front of the only choice which counts--that of the best future for France--and that choice is in your hands.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN ON LIBYA-ORDERED BOATS

NC021355 Paris AFP in English 1340 GMT 2 Mar 81

[Text] Paris, 2 March (AFP)--The French Foreign Ministry today confirmed that France "did not at present envisage" supplying missile-carrying patrol boats ordered by Libya.

A spokesman at the Foreign Ministry said the Libyan Government had earlier been told of the decision. He also said there was no embargo on the sale of French arms to Libya. Libya ordered 10 missile-carrying patrol boats in August 1977. The first was to be handed over last month.

Over the week-end, informed French sources said that the decision was taken because of Libya's role in Chad.

MONORY SAYS U.S. MUST BE 'CAREFUL' ON AID CUTS

LD030855 Paris LE MONDE in French 1-2 Mar 81 pp 1, 12

[Francis Pisani interview with French Economy Minister Rene Monory in Mexico: "We Are Going To Try and Bend U.S. Policy Toward the Developing Countries Somewhat"--date not given]

[Text] Economy Minister Rene Monory, who is the new chairman of the IMF interim committee, has just made a 36-hour visit to Mexico as part of a trip which will also take him to Canada and the United States.

After talks with President Jose Lopez Portillo and Mexican Finance and Public Credit Minister David Ibarra Munoz, who chairs the development committee (same composition as the IMF and World Bank interim committee), Mr Monory signed a draft agreement with Mexico relating to a Frl.4 billion credit for the purchase of French equipment for the Mexican subway.

The talks dealt chiefly with international questions and with what will be, "in French and Mexican eyes," the main problem over the next 10 years: "the future of the poorest countries."

"France and I, personally, are particularly sensitive to the developing countries." Mr Monory told our correspondent in Mexico. "It seems to us that some developed countries are lagging behind on this question." The minister added: "We are going to try to bend U.S. policy toward the developing countries somewhat."

[Question] Did you examine with Ibarra Munoz means of tackling the problem posed by the impoverishment of the least advanced countries?

[Answer] In any case, we studied the proposals made with a view to the forthcoming IMF meeting to be held in Gabon. First, the IMF needs funds. While awaiting the eighth reconstitution of capital which will only take place in 2 years, the IMF has plans, which should succeed, to borrow from the Gulf countries which have surpluses, especially Saudi Arabia. But that is not enough. In addition, we must ease the conditions the poor countries must meet to secure access to this money. In view of rising interest rates among other things, most of them are incapable of turning to the market to satisfy their needs.

[Question] What proposals do you intend to put forward at the next IMF meeting?

[Answer] My main job is to coordinate. It seems to me, however, that the natural line to take would be to improve the conditions in which aid is granted to help the poor countries in which aid is granted to help the poor countries' balances of payments. That does not mean we should be lax but rather that these countries should be given periods in which to recover.

Personally, I think that the credit the IMF might grant should be accompanied by a real plan enabling these countries to take off. It is difficult to convince all the members, but if I were to make a proposal, it would probably be along those lines. The oil-exporting countries and countries with advanced technology must agree to finance a major development plan relating to soil and subsoil problems in order to back up the immediate aid given to the balance of payments of these poorest countries (per capita income less than $100 per year) and enable them to attain the beginnings of wealth after a few years. Countries with per capita incomes of $400 or $500 are taking off virtually unaided now.

[Question] Isn't the new U.S. administration's intention to reduce its aid budget to developing countries likely to hinder the international community's effort to help the poorest countries?

[Answer] I am well aware that a candidate is tempted to make promises. But a president really must be careful. Cutting public spending is fine but cutting it through aid to poor countries strikes me as dangerous.

Of course, I am not making any accusations and I am waiting until I meet with Vice President Bush and my American counterpart in the next few days. But should it prove that this is indeed the U.S. position, I believe they will meet with protests from the developing countries and even from some developed countries which would not go along with that policy. Last week, I had a meeting with my European colleagues and I can therefore say what Europe thinks on some points—possibly not a unanimous Europe because the British are rather closed at present too.

In addition, Mr Ibarra Munoz is due to visit the United States in 10 days time. We were able to verify that our positions are the same on the essential points. Each of us will make recommendations. We are going to try to bend the U.S. administrations's present line somewhat.

[Question] Do you intend to take account of the OECD development aid committee's guidelines recommending that France should place "particular emphasis on a more balanced geographical distribution" of its aid?

[Answer] In view of its past, it is not unnatural that France's bilateral aid to Africa should still be very much sustained and it will continue to be. In addition to the necessary and possible improvement in multilateral mechanisms, each country should maintain bilateral aid which, in my view, could be regionalized. It is fine for the OECD to make certain recommendations but I do not think our links with Africa will be changed very quickly. It would be misunderstood. In the past few years, we have even considerably increased our presence in some countries on that continent where it had hitherto been inadequate.

[Question] Does this proposal for regionalizing bilateral aid not contain a risk of strengthening zones of influence which are regarded as an increasingly serious problem by most developing countries?

[Answer] No, multilateral aid is irreplaceable. But I do not think that channeling bilateral aid according to priority regions could have a political influence on the zones in question. First, there has to be a desire to help the developing countries, a desire which not everybody feels. Second, bilateral aid must not lose its individuality or feeling. The French, who have always been used to cooperation with the Africans, could be persuaded to make greater efforts in that direction.

[Question] What is the French Government's position on the possibility of holding a North-South summit in Mexico in June?

[Answer] France is completely in favor of this initiative but naturally hopes that all the big countries will take part, in other words, the United States above all. For it to succeed, President Reagan must be present. If he were not present, the affair would in a way lose all interest. We will approach the new administration on this matter.

[Question] What questions did you discuss during your talks with President Lopez Portillo?

[Answer] After quickly discussing bilateral questions which pose hardly any problems, we concentrated our discussions on subject dear to him: the developing countries, multilateral relations and North-South dialogue. President Lopez Portillo also informed me of his concern about the statements and information he has about the Americans. He is to meet with Mr Reagan in April and I have the impression that he will take a very tough attitude on this.

[Question] How would you sum up the anxieties you observed in President Lopez Portillo?

[Answer] He is very sensitive about the developing countries and, like us, feels that this will be the main problem over the next 10 years. He is worried about U.S. intentions which might lead the government to cut aid to the poorest countries. In addition, he is asking questions, which are probably still unanswered, about U.S. policy on Central and Latin America.

PCF MEMBER EXPELLED FOR 'EXTRAVAGANT' STATEMENTS

[Text] In an unanimously adopted statement, the Communists belonging to the Victor-Jarra cell in Paris recently expressed their indignation with respect to Catherine Clement's recent statements and expressed the opinion that she "has exluded herself from the cell."

In fact, Catherine Clement published in the 20 February edition of the Socialist newspaper LE MATIN a violent diatribe against the PCF, accusing it, among other things, of engaging in a "witch hunt," indulging in "denunciations worthy of the Nazis" and following a "fascist path."

The following day L'HUMANITE duly denounced this article, recalling, among other things, that Catherine Clement did not hesitate to go to Rouen to "contribute" toward the justice of Mr Peyrefitte who had started proceedings against a worker activist.

However, Catherine Clement did not stop there. Invited to participate in the Radio Europe One "Explain Yourself" program, she not only urged listeners to vote for Francois Mitterrand but also envisaged the "formation of an Italian-style radical party which would bring together Communists, former Communists, former Maoists, former leftists, people disappointed by the Unified Socialist Party and the PS and former Gaullists," nothing less.

We publish the text of a statement adopted by a unanimous 19 votes by the call of which Catherine Clement was a member:

"LE MATIN communists [as published] have learned with indignation about Catherine Clement's statements which have been relayed by all the media. They do not believe that Catherine Clement's description of their party in the 20 February edition of LE MATIN is a true one. They know that their party is not 'following a fascist path' but that, on the contrary, it intends to raise genuine problems in the interest of our country's workers. They cannot accept a situation in which Communists themselves sing in chorus with the worst anticommunists. They feel proud of the fact that they are not 'dead souls' and believe that the PCF has been right in waging a most determined struggle against Giscard's government in all its manifestations. By asserting its desire to 'work with the Socialists' with a view to renovating the PCF, she has now stated her political options. The Communists belonging to the Victor-Jarra cell take the view that by making such a political decision and such extravagant statements, she has excluded herself from the cell."

MARCHAIS GREETS SDAR ON FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

LD021513 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 27 Feb 81 p 10

[Text] On the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic's fifth anniversary, Georges Marchais sent the following message to Polisario Front Secretary General Mohamed Abdelaziz:

"I would like to send you, the Polisario Front and all the West Saharan people the PCF's warm congratulations. As I recalled during our meeting 18 months ago, the PCF actively supports the Saharan people's just cause and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence. It is taking and will continue to take all the necessary actions to ensure that the French people's active solidarity is expressed. We are also taking action to end the French Government's policy of intervention for Morocco's benefit and to ensure that France plays a positive role in this part of the world. The UN General Assembly's recent resolutions indicate, in my view, the path to be followed by all those attached to peace and the right of peoples to determine their own future. I wholeheartedly welcome the excellent relations of friendship and solidarity which exist between the PCF and the Polisario Front. I am convinced that they will continue to be strengthened in the interest of the northwest African peoples and of the French people. Dear comrade, please accept by fraternal greetings."

LE MONDE NOTES NEGATIVE TRADE BALANCE WITH USSR

[Michel Boyer report: "Oil and Natural Gas Imports Lead to Structural Deficit in French Balance of Trade"]

[Text] A turning point has been reached in the history of French-Soviet economic relations. After being traditionally positive for around 15 years, France's trade deficit showed a structural deficit in 1980. French imports reached Fr15.1 billion while exports amounted to only Fr10.4 billion, which results in a deficit of Fr4.7 billion. In 1979, there was a surplus of Fr1 billion.

The increase in trade between the two countries, which went up by 58 percent last year--but France's imports increased by 97 percent and exports by only 22 percent--is attributed by TASS to the April 1979 meeting between Mr Brezhnev and Giscard d'Estaing in Moscow. In fact, it is the result of the rise in oil prices, from which the USSR is benefiting both in its relations with other CEMA countries and in its relations with the Western nations.

Indeed, France is buying an increasing amount of Soviet oil--Moscow has become its fourth biggest supplier with more than 6 million tons--and especially natural gas (4.4 billion cubic meters last year, or 20 percent of total imports of this product), for which it is paying the market price. Thus, the total energy bill has been multiplied 2.5 times, increasing from Fr4.5 billion in 1979 to Fr11.5 billion in 1980. It could increase greatly if the gas project now being discussed is implemented.

This project, in fact, relates to additional supplies of Soviet gas from 1985 amounting to 10 billion cubic meters per year which, added to the present amount, would represent around one-third of the French supplies. These supplies would involve, in exchange, supplies of industrial equipment worth around Fr10 billion, notably for constructing gas pipelines, and would involve the setting up an appropriate financing mechanism.

This difficult deal, which also interests the FRG, should have been concluded before the end of last year. In fact, it has come up against the problem of fixing gas prices, with the Soviets wanting this price to be aligned with oil prices, and also against the problem of defining credit terms, with Moscow wanting the whole operation to be financed at a special 7.8-percent interest rate. In addition to that, Polish events may have slowed down the negotiations.

The increase in Soviet energy supplies in any case clearly raises the question of France's dependence on a preferential supplier. In the event of conflict, the security of French supplies could be threatened, and in the oil sphere, Saudi Arabia and Iraq already supply more than half the crude oil which France imports.

It also raises the question of the link between politics and economics. Can a country place a leak-tight partition between these two spheres without losing its dignity? In more specific terms, are events like those in Afghanistan not bound to affect business?

In this case, an artillery of figures can be used to serve interests. If there were to be a break in trade between the two countries, which represents only 2.5 percent of France's total foreign trade but which involves some sensitive sectors and, according to TASS, gives work to 250,000 French employees, the financial consequences would be considerable. France, which is one of the Eastern bloc countries' leading creditors, seems more vulnerable than the FRG from this viewpoint, and a halt in Soviet payments would involve around Fr20 billion.

Leaving aside that hypothesis, the French-Soviet trade imbalance has some disadvantages for France. In fact, imports are paid in cash, while a particularly advantageous long-term credit policy is followed for exports. Cooperation between the two countries is very expensive.

In any event, the reduction of the deficit is no easy operation. There are possibilities in the food sphere since the Soviets want to institutionalize trade within the framework of agreements lasting several years for a number of products (grain, meat, sugar, poultry and so forth). Last year's sales of these products amounted to over Fr2 billion, compared to Fr1 billion in 1979. However, the implementation of bigger projects is likely to come up against EC agricultural rules.

France can also increase its sales of consumer goods and industrial complexes. After 3 years of stagnation in which they hovered around Fr2.5 billion, Soviet orders increased considerably in 1980, reaching around Fr5 billion (drilling platforms, cast iron pipes, sheet steel, aluminum and so forth). This result is markedly better than the performances of the USSR's other Western partners (around Fr3 billion for the FRG, Fr2 billion for Japan and Fr1 billion for Italy).

In addition, the Rhone-Poulenc Company in December concluded a framework agreement on industrial cooperation worth Fr30 billion over 10 years. Negotiations carried out by Citroen, however, with a view to modernizing the Soviet automobile industry are making no progress, mainly owing to Moscow's aspirations in the sphere of investments, prices and also compensations. In fact, if you want to win exports, you frequently not only have to grant credit on advantageous terms but also to buy some of the planned industrial complex's production.

From one 5-year period to the next, Soviet trade--in francs at current values--trebled in keeping with the objectives fixed by the two governments, increasing from Fr19 billion between 1970 and 1974 to Fr59 billion between 1975 and 1979. The same target has been implicitly fixed for the 1980-1985 period. Thus, although it is not vital, the Soviet market seems important for the French economy, especially in view of its potential. It could even be vital to some firms' financial balance, although that does not mean that business should take precedence over diplomacy.

L'HUMANITE ASSAILS PS ON FOOD AID TO EL SALVADOR

LD021417 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 27 Feb 81 pp 1,10

[Jose Fort Article: "Division of Tasks"]

[Text] The Italian, French and Greek communist deputies at the European Assembly yesterday called for an immediate resumption of food aid to the Salvadoran people. They were alone in doing so.

However, during a recent Press Club interview, the present PS First Secretary Lionel Jospin told Rene Andrieu quite definitely: "We are opposed to the U.S. policy in El Salvador. Several current opposition leaders in El Salvador are members of the Socialist International. We have never failed in our solidarity with El Salvador."

Unfortunately, yes, unfortunately, Lionel Jospin and the PS leaders are failing in their duty to show solidarity. What's more, they are henceforth involved in a real act of war against the Salvadoran people: the act of using food as a weapon.

By deciding, at U.S. request, to suspend its humanitarian aid to El Salvador, the EEC is contributing to the Yankee plan. On the one hand, Washington is arming those perpetrating the massacres and, on the other, the West European capitals are starving tens of thousands of women, men and children living in complete destitution. This is a division of tasks.

The PS is directly implicated in that decision. Indeed, the EEC commissioner responsible for food and development aid-the man who already distinguished himself by suspending supplies of food to Vietnam-is none other than PS member Claude Cheysson who has the title of "adviser" in Francois Mitterrand's election apparatus.

After the Brussels decision, the PS did not think fit to protest or publicize the fact. Above all, it did not disavow Claude Cheysson or criticize the statement made by Socialist Senator for La Haute-Vienne Louis Longequeue, who, a few months ago, stated quite calmly with reference to the El Salvador Christian Democratic-military junta: "The new government courageously is trying to establish a moderate democratic regime." They say one thing one moment and another the next.

Solidarity, real solidarity, requires acts like the one made by the European communist deputies yesterday. As for the Socialist deputies in Paris, they say they are showing solidarity with the Salvadoran people while they align with U.S. policy in Brussels.

LE MONDE SEES U.S. STALLING ON CAMP DAVID PROGRESS

[Editorial: "Mr Reagan and the Near East"]

[Text] Although still only a draft, the new U.S. administration's policy on the Near East is not likely to please the Jerusalem government, which had in fact been counting on Mr Reagan's accession to the highest office. Despite his resolutely pro-Israeli statements during his election campaign, in practice, Mr Reagan differs little from his predecessor.

The new White House chief has no hesitation in contradicting himself. To distinghuish himself from Mr Carter, he formerly stated emphatically that the implantation of Jewish colonies in the occupied territories was "not illegal." But on 3 February, less than 2 weeks after his election, he maintained that the establishment of these same colonies constitute a "pointless provocation," to which the State Department added on 11 February that Israel is damaging the peace process by doing this.

The new administration has not formally repudiated the Camp David agreements but, despite Mr Begin's insistence, it is refusing to pursue the implementation of the Palestinian "clause." There are at least two reasons for this attitude: Mr Reagan does not believe any more than President as-Sadat does that Cairo-Jerusalem bilateral negotiations could result in the "autonomy" for the Palestinians which the latter rejected right from the start. Having nothing better to propose, the United States prefers to rely on an Israeli Labor government which, probably without too many illusions, will try to solve the problem directly with King Husayn. The "Jordanian option" of course misfired after the Hashemite king's categorical refusal to join a process which would exclude the PLO, but the aim is to play for time by maintaining hope.

Washington seems to have taken advantage of the deadlock by declaring that the settlement of the Israeli-Arab conflict is no longer its main concern, "immediate priority" henceforth being given to the "Soviet threat" in the Near East. Hence, the emphasis will be placed on developing the U.S. military network, notably in the Persian Gulf, on strengthening the defense potential of states listed as U.S. "friends." Thus, despite protests from Israel, Mr Reagan's government decided on 26 February to supply Saudi Arabia with a whole range of equipment and accessories markedly strengthening the offensive capability of the 62 F-15 fighter planes which President Carter sold to Riyadh in 1978.

Following the example set by his predecessors, who faced similar dilemmas, President Reagan apparently offered--according to the NEW YORK TIMES--to "compensate" Israel for this "infidelity" by selling it 15 additional F-15's to be added to the 40 already sold to the Jewish state, which would receive $600 million at 12 percent interest as a "bonus." In addition, the U.S. Government proposed in Congress on Thursday to grant Israel $2.18 billion in aid for fiscal 1981-82.

Thus, President Reagan is remaining faithful to the policy traditionally implemented by his party: ensuring the defense of Israel, which has been raised to the rank of "country of high strategic importance," while satisfying the various "pro-Arab lobbies," the oil and arms industry lobbies in particular, which are very closely linked with the Republican Party. The question is whether this so-called balanced policy will promote an all-embracing peace in the Near East.

PCF'S GREMETZ VIEWS FRANCOIS-PONCET'S U.S. VISIT

LD271605 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 25 Feb 81 p 9

[Text] PCF Politburo member Maxime Gremetz yesterday made this statement:

"The visit which Mr Francois-Poncet has just made to Washington and the statements which were made on that occasion totally confirm our party's assessment of the Giscard government's foreign policy. Atlantic alignment and allegiance to U.S. imperialism have in fact been the main axes of the foreign minister's U.S. visit. Rarely has the French Government gone so far along this path.

"Agreement on the essential issues was so deep that the two ministers had no hesitation in generously patting each other on the back. Like Reagan, Giscard d'Estaing's foreign minister wants 'a strong and stable America.' Moreover, he was not sparing in his praises for U.S. policy, its determination and political initiatives. In short, he gave enthusiastic backing to Reagan's aggressive policy, notably in stepping up the arms race. In other words, he gave his support to the increase in the U.S. military budget and to the establishment of new bases and the strengthening of U.S. naval presence in the oceans. He approved the decision to deploy new U.S. nuclear missiles in Europe, which constitutes a serious danger to the peoples' security.

"In the face of such 'French understanding,' it is easy to see why the United States should express its satisfaction with Giscard d'Estaing's policy, particularly the efforts he is making for a supranational and Atlantic Europe aligned with the United States. Giscard has also been given a well-deserved certificate as best defender of imperialism's interests in Africa.

"In the face of the U.S. aspiration to use every possible means, including intervention, to oppose the peoples' struggle for national and social liberation, the French representative expressed his complete understanding. When the United States is playing a direct part in the bloody repression of the Salvadoran people, it is particularly scandalous to see our country's foreign minister giving his support to this intervention on the pretext of 'foreign interference.'

"This visit, which is like a vassal visiting his overlord, illustrates a policy which is calling France's independence into question, ignoring its interests and the role it should have on the international stage.

"Our country has better things to do than to align with a foreign power's aggressive plans, it should instead be struggling with determination and a spirit of initiative for peace and disarmament and for cooperation and friendship among peoples."

FOREIGN MINISTER ON RECENT TALKS IN WASHINGTON

[Engenio Scalfari Rome interview with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo: "USSR Must Now Realize That There Is No Messing With Reagan"; date not given]

[Excerpt] Rome--The foreign minister is satisfied with his U.S. visit and meetings with the new President, vice president, secretary of state and secretaries of defense and the treasury. He found, he said, a great deal of attention and respect for and interest in the Italian position and received clear and frank explanations of the new U.S. position. But is there an Italian position that is not always and in every instance a faithful reflection of Washington's? This is the first well-founded suspicion which we permitted ourselves to put to him at the start of this interview on his return from the United States.

"There is," he said: "And it is certainly no artificial last-minute invention. We could sum it up as follows: We want peace and detente between the blocs. To preserve peace and detente, both conditions of weakness and the attempt to ensure military superiority are equally unacceptable. Balance is the foundation of peace."

[Question] This definition is identical to the one that emerged from the recent Giscard-Schmidt meeting in Paris.

[Answer] Indeed it is. The European NATO allies are convinced that this is the policy to pursue.

[Question] And is President Reagan convinced of it too?

[Answer] One must be careful about making an assessment of the new U.S. administration's attitude: The White House and the State Department are in these weeks examining the enormous foreign policy problems, the chain of the various crises and the methods for tackling an extremely complex situation. But what already emerges extremely clearly is this: The United States is no longer willing to tolerate unilateral detente, as practiced by the Soviet Union in the past few years--that is, a detente which Washington must observe while Moscow can violate it in all parts of the world not covered by the Yalta Agreement. This situation is one of the essential causes which prompted Carter's defeat and Reagan's resounding victory. Now the new administration is bound by the mandate received from the voters.

[Question] What specific consequences might result from the rejection of the kind of detente that you have described? What new political and military initiatives from the United States? Did you discuss this with your interlocutors in Washington?

[Answer] We did not examine the various points on the international arc of crisis. They are in any case well known: Afghanistan, Kampuchea, the Horn of Africa, Yemen, certain Central American countries....

[Question] And Poland.

[Answer] Poland is a case apart and must be discussed separately. As I was saying, we did not carry out a specific analysis. In any case it was neither the time nor the place for it. But one point did seem very clear to me: The new administration, and Secretary of State Haig in particular, will do their utmost in this phase to ensure that the Soviet Government fully understands that the United States is no longer willing to tolerate initiatives likely to cause crises and disturbances of the world balance by the USSR.

I would say that Haig will devote the coming weeks and months to ensuring that this message about U.S. intentions reaches the Kremlin as loudly and clearly as possible.

[Question] Whether verbal or written, such a message would take not months but just a few days to reach there.

[Answer] We are talking here about a message which, to be fully credible, must be accompanied by specific and equally clear signals. One of these is the expenditure that the new administration has decided to allot to defense. Another is the very determined stance that has been adopted with respect to the guerrilla movements in centain Latin American countries. The United States is convinced that the guerrilla fighting in El Salvador is receiving large-scale backing from Cuba and Moscow and has warned the European allies of this. A delegation is already in Europe to provide the allied governments with evidence of this assertion.

[Question] Will it be coming to Italy too?

[Answer] Yes, it will be coming here too.

[Question] Does this mean that the U.S. administration will give full support to the military juntas in Central America?

[Answer] As far as I know, it means that the U.S. administration would oppose further actions of destabilization considered to be actively supported by Cuba and Moscow.

[Question] It seems to me, Mr Foreign Minister, that under such conditions the ratification of the SALT II treaty on nuclear strategic parity is a dream.

[Answer] Even back during Carter's presidency it was clear that SALT II would not be ratified. There were at least 10 points on which Congress' opposition was insurmountable. So SALT II will have to be renegotiated. In any case, it seems to me that the Soviet Union is waiting to see and assess what U.S. intentions will be.

[Question] Is President Reagan keen to open these negotiations?

[Answer] I would say so. I pointed out that as far as Italy is concerned it is extremely keen that negotiations be started as soon as possible. But the essential point for the time being is the one I indicated before: First the United States wants the USSR to realize that the international climate has changed and that further violations of detente will not be tolerated. Only when Moscow has for its part indicated that it has fully understood such a message can the SALT II negotiations be reopened with good prospects of success.

[Question] Is this what the new U.S. diplomacy defines as "linkage"?

[Answer] Precisely. Linkage is the linking of global behavior and specific negotiations. If the global behavior is considered satisfactory, inasmuch as no new points of crisis are created or points or friction nurtured, specific negotiations are set in motion; if not, unsatisfactory behavior will be met with balancing forms of behavior.

[Question] What does this mean, Mr Minister?

[Answer] It means that in the event of initiatives that modify the world balance, the United States reserves the right of "response" to restore the balance. It is a concept which disappeared entirely from U.S. strategic philosophy after the Vietnam war. Now it has reappeared. I believe that the difference is considerable.

[Question] I think so too. How do the European allies judge this difference?

[Answer] As an inevitable consequence of the deterioration of the international situation, which has come about without the United States' having taken any initiatives to which destabilizing characteristics can be ascribed over the years. The European allies trust that the new U.S. administration's message will be fully understood in Moscow. For their part, that is for our part, we will promptly stimulate the U.S. ally immediately to follow up the warning that it is issuing to the USSR with the second kind of message, namely, full willingness to negotiate the entire range of points of crisis. This is why I placed great emphasis on the resumption of the SALT II negotiations. I believe that my French and FRG counterparts will maintain the same stance on their coming visits to Washington.

[Question] Can I ask you, Mr Minister, whether you also discussed the problems of the missiles to be deployed in Europe?

[Answer] Yes, we did. As is known, the NATO countries decided at the 12 December 1979 meeting in Brussels to begin the Euromissiles modernization. That decision gave the go-ahead for the production of the new medium-range theater missiles. The same 12 December session also took another decision for immediate implementation, as was in fact done, namely, to suggest negotiations on NATO's and the USSR's theater nuclear forces. During Chancellor Schmidt's subsequent Moscow visit, the Soviet Government agreed to discuss the issue without demanding the prior revocation of NATO's decision to deploy the Euromissiles. In fact, negotiations did start in Geneva in the last few months of Carter's presidency. I stressed to Secretary of State Haig Italy's great desire that those negotiations be resumed, since we are one of the host countries for the Euromissiles under construction.

[Question] What was his reply?

[Answer] Haig said that he was fully aware of Italy's wishes on this issue and that he shared them. The dates and forms for these negotiations are not yet clear, but they will definitely be governed by the general assessments which I have already mentioned. I also asked for a meeting as soon as possible of the NATO Special Consultation Group that is to assist the Soviet-U.S. negotiations. On the general issue of consultations between the United States and Italy and the European NATO allies, I confirmed to Haig that the latter do not want to be consulted about faits accomplis but want to participate actively in forming the alliance's decisions. I received a very positive reply on this point.

[Question] We mentioned Poland, Mr Minister.

[Answer] It is our wish for that country to undergo a process of adjustment that will take into account all the innovations that have occurred and introduce institutional machinery capable of handling them, in line with and taking fully into account both internal and international balances.

[Question] Are you hoping for a stabilization in Poland?

[Answer] I do not like that word, and it does not express my thoughts. I hope that the Polish Government will succeed in creating institutional, political and trade union machinery capable of handling methodically the new social realities that have emerged, and capable also of dynamically assimilating any further innovations if and when they appear.

[Question] Is this the U.S. administration's position too?

[Answer] It is the position of the entire West in the face of a very major and very dangerous crisis.

[Question] Does the linkage idea, that is, the assessment of the USSR's conduct, include the Polish case too?

[Answer] Definitely.

[Question] Possibly with military consequences for NATO?

[Answer] Absolutely not, but with political and economic consequences that it would be stupid not to consider and which indeed, I believe, have been considered by the Soviets.

PSI'S CRAXI OUTLINES 'THESES' FOR APRIL CONGRESS

LD281031 Rome AVANTI in Italian 19 Feb 81 pp 2-3

[Unattributed report on PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi's 18 February report to the PSI Central Committee session in Rome: "Central Committee Confirms 42d congress in Palermo 22-26 April"]

[Text] The PSI congress will be held on the agreed date in Palermo. This was confirmed by Socialist Secretary Bettino Craxi opening the proceedings of the Central Committee and thus replying to what he described as the "interfences" in yesterday morning's papers. Craxi stressed that a party's congress is "a major opportunity and a democratic duty" which makes it possible to review internal situations and at the same time to speak to the country.

Craxi also emphasized the choice of a city such as Palermo, where our party has never held a congress before. "Our choice," he said, "stems partly from a strong awareness of the south's problems and from the fact the country is one and that the south's problems are therefore the entire country's." Next Craxi explained the significance and importance of the congress theses, which were distributed to all the Central Committee members. The majority and the secretary, he said, willingly agreed to the suggestion to hold a congress not on the basis of rigidly opposed motions. "We have submitted these which give scope to anyone wanting to employ them. Whoever does not want to use them is free not to."

Craxi explained that the theses have "a significance and character introductory to the congress debate and must, between now and the late April congress, permit new analyses, developments of ideas and also corrections so as to secure the necessary consensus. They are above all an attempt to identify the essential reference points for our debate."

The 13 congress theses presented by the majority center on the four key aspects of foreign policy, domestic policy and program and party topics:

1. "To consolidate and consistently continue the socialist new course." This is the thesis that outlines a general framework for the socialist role, based on the realization that we have transcended "definitely, every feared threat of decline and subordination, of a marginal political role."

Note is taken of the existence of "a major disproportion" between the PSI's national responsibility and its electoral support. It is therefore the party's task to seek support both in the progressive areas and in the areas "where the danger of regressionary dispersions and irrational rejections is emerging."

Furthermore, the thesis puts forward the idea of socialist government leadership and political prospects "based on different balances" to be achieved with the contribution of the intermediary forces and, "if the DC wants to contribute without stubborn rigidities, of keeping the framework of democratic possibilities and potentials open."

Surmounting Conservative Resistance

2. "Surmounting the front of conservative, stubborn and bureaucratic resistance." It states that "a new right is taking shape, determined to exploit the crisis factors present in society so as to widen the gulf of mistrust between the citizens and politics and the institutions."

The thesis stresses the danger "of an open or hidden spread in the ideas proper to the tradition and heritage of reactionary culture, without their being opposed with sufficient determination, consistency and effectiveness." Against this danger "there must be a strategy of regeneration and major reform affecting the very structures of the system to lend new strength to the authoritative and representative democratic bodies."

3. "A consistent initiative for stability, governability, regeneration and reforms." The PSI's entry into the government stemmed from a consistent political stance already expressed in the election campaign, and produced a coalition "based on requirements not repetitive with respect to past experiences," that is, based on "equal" bases between the secular parties and the DC.

Having confirmed that government unity is a constant objective to be achieved, the thesis expressed the hope that the present coalition will succeed in finding in its specific work the necessary thrusts to progress.

4. "For a great reform of the institutions and for a regeneration of public life." "A major reform is necessary, possible and pressing": This premise is starting point for a number of working hypotheses. The first confirms the belief that it is necessary to modify the present structure of the two chambers of Parliament, inasmuch as "a division of duties, work and powers has become indispensable." In short, "bicameralism has become a superfluous luxury, in the form in which it has become organized."

Still on the topic of Parliament, it is noted that the government's stability "is to exposed to the maneuvers of lamentable parliamentary practice," with clear reference to the issue of deputies who fail to observe party discipline. After a brief reference to the "constructive lack of confidence" that exists in Germany, it discusses electoral reforms and argues "the advisability of providing the minor parties with the opportunity to start a process of aggregation."

Having called for a more lively and efficient public administration, the thesis stresses that it is necessary to surmount "the slowness of procedure and the excessive politicization of the magistracy."

5. "A new method of governing the economy, with objectives of development, efficiency, and social security and equality." As far as strictly economic policy is concerned, the following measures are urged: planning as a method of governing the economy; the containment of inflation; a new thrust to investments' improvements in supply; an adjustment of the territorial balance; the effective use of the resources administered by the public sector; and a reduction in foreign constrictions.

Centrality of Southern Problem

Having stressed the centrality of the southern problem (asserting that development policy must center principally on a gradual qualitative and quantitative diversification in its forms of intervention), the thesis stresses the importance of rebuilding the quake-struck areas. The belief is that "by establishing proper connections among public spending, programming of demand sector by sector, territorial planning with a view to selecting a few location areas and the effective location of firms involved in the reconstruction, it will be possible to maximize the multiplicatory effect, in terms of earnings and employment, within the quake-struck areas and the south."

6. "To extend the system of social reforms and to step up the struggle against old and new forms of poverty." The premise is the enormous progress achieved in the field of health and safety, pensions and education in recent years. But it is pointed out equally clearly that "in the major cities, where the party generally has the most responsibilities, a decisive struggle is breaking out for collective living standards, to defend basic human and social values and for the citizens' very security and the future of new generations."

7. "A trade union movement that is a responsible protagonist in the government of the economy, in the labor market, in enterprise decisions. In establishing the workers' rights and duties." The plan for trade union unity, the thesis reads, "seems anything but obsolete." It is necessary to work with a sense of commitment, especially at a time when "certain specific risks of regression, manipulatory distortion and consequent loss of autonomy are emerging." Having stated that a transition must be effected "from the phase based purely on demands to the phase of participation," the thesis laments the trade union's lack of involvement in the labor market, especially in the hidden labor market.

Proposal of Employment Agency

The proposal of a labor agency is reintroduced, as a means for the "dynamic management of the labor market." Last, it is stated that "everyone now believes that unrestricted freedom to strike is senseless, because it imposes too heavy a price not on the other side of industry, but on the community as a whole."

8. "For the freedom of men and ideas in culture and the media, for a new education system as the linchpin of the country's future." With regard to education, the thesis states that the problem is how to surmount the present chaotic situation and introduce a strategy that will reward "a responsible and committed attitude for students and teachers." Particular criticism is reserved for the DC's own particular general view of education, and a secular view is put forward as an alternative.

As for the media, the opinion is expressed that it is necessary to achieve "a balanced system of competitiveness and cooperation between public and private sectors" as far as television is concerned, and the PSI's commitment to a prompt approval of the publishing reform bill is confirmed.

9. "To eliminate terrorism, to restore normality to the country and to close a tragic chapter of democratic life." Note is taken of the very heavy blows dealt to terrorism recently, but emphasis is also placed on the need to pursue "a global strategy" of anti-terrorist struggle. In particular, emphasis is again placed on the key point of international connections (which "must be the subject of more and more thorough investigations"), while further exceptional laws are described as "unnecessary." Action must be taken in the prison sector and in new legislative measures to encourage "penitents."

The thesis also stresses the hitherto decisive importance of unity among the democratic forces. The splits that have occurred. it adds, and amid which the "the PSI has pursued a policy of constitutional consistency," could not challenge everyone's "steadfast determination" to repeal the terrorist attack.

10. "To rebuild an international role for Italy, to step up the struggle for peace, freedom and solidarity throughout the world." The thesis expresses the opinion that Italy must play a more active role in the international context, within the framework of the Atlantic alliance, which must maintain "its character as a geographically limited defense alliance."

The next point discussed is Poland and the threats of a military invasion, while the hope is expressed of a new initiative for a constructive European-Arab-African dialogue. In this connection the thesis states that "a thorough political clarification is desirable also with regard to Italian-Libyan relations."

Having condemned the dictatorship at present covering El Salvador in blood, the thesis expresses the hope that "the United States will be fully aware of the major responsibilities revolving on it, as on other major democracies on the American Continent." As for the new Reagan administration, the thesis simply expresses the hope of a policy that will encourage detente and peace.

11. "To defend womens rights and civil rights and to make better use of and improve the system of referendums." The thesis confirms the party's position on the six referendums ("yes" to the elimination of life imprisonment and military courts and "no" to the other four referendums, though everyone is free to vote as his conscience dictates.) With regard to referendums, there is a call for a "responsible choice of major questions of principle, which will exclude its use for short-term and unjustified purposes of political struggle." The PSI is in any case opposed to further norms that "will create practically insurmountable barriers to gathering enough signatures for a particular referendum to be held."

12. "An open dialogue and active democratic cooperation in the field of governability and reforms. A democratic and socialist plan for the labor world and the entire left." The nature of socialist policy, the thesis states, has its roots in Turati's reformist and a gradualist approach to the transformation of society.

Interparty Relations and Dialogue

Having said this, the thesis stresses the importance of close relations with the Italian Social Democratic party and of "direct relations of dialogue and rapprochement with the Radical Party," which have yielded intermittent results but which have made it possible "to note the existence of shared objectives on some very important topics."

Having noted "a positive evolution" in relations with the Radical Party, the thesis states that the fundamental problem for the Socialists remains relations and a both retrospective and prospective elucidation with the PCI.

This party is urged to make "a clear choice in favor of Western-style Socialism," with a clear affirmation "of the irreconcilability of so-called real Socialism with the premises and principles on which a democratic and socialist alternative can be based in our country and Western Europe as a whole."

The PSI hopes for the establishment of "a constructive climate" and believes that a radical change in the PCI in the direction indicated "would create new and decisive conditions for a different outlook and for leftwing cooperation in Italy."

Last, the following hope is expressed concerning the DC: "That it too will contribute, through the quest for the paths of a thorough internal regeneration, to the general trend toward a regeneration of public life and the reinvigoration of the democratic system."

13. "A new impetus to internal regeneration, so as to build a party with increasingly firm roots in the working classes and open to social movements for reform." This thesis outlines a new party image, still mass-oriented but much more open to the new movements and feelings emerging in society. As for internal life, the hope is expressed of a "constant improvement in internal relations, which of course requires everyone's contribution and the rejection of exacerbated polemics and excessive personalism." Criticism is also made of "the refusal to accept even the most elementary party discipline."

Be that as it may, "the congress debate will profitably concentrate its attention on topics concerning party organization, methods and regulations and thus formulate new proposals and ideas for change."

FORLANI TV INTERVIEW ON GOVERNMENT ECONOMY

AU030849 Rome ANSA in English 0316 GMT 3 Mar 81

[Text] Rome, 3 Mar (ANSA)--Italian Premier Arnaldo Forlani said here last night that Italy "is governable" and that his coalition government has the backing of a "secure majority" but added that "a greater national cohesion" is necessary to overcome the difficulties triggered by an "intense degree of political and social conflicts".

Forlani, who heads a four-party coalition of his own Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats and Republicans, made the statement in an interview aired over the national television network.

The premier said that the recent proposal made by the chairman of the Republican Party, Bruno Visentini, for a government of technocrats not anchored to party agreements, lies in the world of "fantasy" since "hypotheses of this kind must be formulated on the basis of real facts, which are the political parties that exist in the country and in Parliament".

In reply to a question on the parliamentary debate on the government-sponsored financial bill, on which the government called for a number of confidence votes, Forlani said that it was "quite normal" that the government asked for a roll call vote given the importance of the legislations which "directs, regulates and conditions the entire economic life of the country" for a period of 3 years.

PRIME MINISTER CALVO-SOTELO'S PREINVESTITURE SPEECH

LD281555 Madrid YA in Spanish 19 Feb 81 pp 7-10

[Text] The Congress [of Deputies] plenum for the session of investiture began at 1645. Outgoing Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez was present. First, Victor Carrascal, first secretary of the chamber, read out his majesty the king's message, proposing Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo y Bustelo as candidate for the position of prime minister.

A few moments later Mr Calco-Sotelo mounted the rostrum and read the program speech of the government which he is seeking to form and requested the chamber's vote in favor. In his speech, he said:

Mr Speaker, ladies and gentlemen:

I appear before you to request the chamber's confidence as the candidate for prime minister proposed by his majesty the king in accordance with article 99 of the constitution.

This session of investiture is a central part of the process which began with Prime Minister Suarez' resignation. I have served him as a minister for 4 years, and I have had the privilege of following closely the political transition, of which he was the principal architect. I wish to pay my tribute at the very beginning of this speech to Adolfo Suarez' extraordinary work and express my affection and admiration for him.

With his departure the transition comes to an end. With his departure, a most extraordinary stage in Spanish history comes to an end. Precisely because I did not play the leading role in that transition which is now coming to a close, I believe that I can initiate a new era in which from the very outset the constitutional machinery will operate free from any foundational emotion.

A change in the prime minister is a normal occurrence in parliamentary systems. This change comes at the very time when we have reached the halfway point in the legislative term. Behind the replacement there is no new parliamentary arithmetic, which corresponds now, as previously, to the verdict of the ballot box in 1979; the replacement therefore occurs within political continuity, and I will govern within political continuity if I secure the nomination. But I must say immediately, ladies and gentlemen, that I know how this chamber, and in it, primarily, the representatives of the party in power, is demanding a new course for the ship of state. I am sensitive to this political fact, and I announce forthwith that if I secure the confidence of the Congress of Deputies, I will direct my government within continuity but, of course, without the inertia of continuation.

Our great legacy is to have today a democratic system which the various political forces have so far been creating with an awareness of their historical responsibility in order to organize our present and future coexistence. What we have done during the transition is considerable, and we have done it in an exemplary manner, as our foreign neighbors, who are more objective than we ourselves in diagnosis, have acknowledged and admired. Over the last 5 years, Spain has rediscovered freedom, and freedom has revealed to us a lively, renovating and changing Spain, adolescent and thoughtful at the same time, very far from the drama which has marked its crises over the last 150 years. It is legitimate for us to make this assessment with satisfaction and hope and for us to draw a clear conclusion from it: the transition is over, democracy has been achieved. Although much of the state still remains to be built, there is no weakness in the system. There is the daily government of a complex society is an adverse and changing situation. And there is constitutional machinery which has displayed, which is displaying this very day, its effectiveness.

Continuity with a Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] Government

This is why I speak of continuity, and this is why the government which I am seeking to form will also be a UCD government. In 1983, without early elections, which would not help the strengthening of democracy in Spain, the sovereign voice of the people, summoned to a general election, will be able to suggest other formulas. Today I propose to you the formation of a government comprising members of my party.

But in this government, and in the first place its prime minister, cannot forget that disenchantment, pessimism, insecurity and despair are dominant features of the Spanish people's state of mind, many people believe that all problems have beset Spain at the same time. Many people believe that a change in the manner of governing in necessary. And the government which I form if I secure the investiture will be prepared to make that change.

The greatest danger of our situation would be for us to attribute the misfortunes besetting us to a specific political structure. It would mean our becoming disillusioned with democracy or freedom. This chamber must always take care to avert that danger, especially today, when an investiture debate is beginning. I would like to be able to convince those who are following this debate outside the chamber that we are concerning ourselves here with their real problems: with the anxiety of those who cannot find jobs, with the insecurity of those who are afraid of losing them and with the despair of the families which have seen their small savings implacably reduced by inflation, with those who are struggling in adversity to keep their enterprises alive, with those who fear for their personal safety or that of their families and with those who dare not contemplate the future. I would like to convince all of them that these are also my concerns, that this is the reason why I am here, much more than because of an ambition for power or partisan zeal, and that the government which I form will devote the remaining half of the legislative term to providing a feasible solution to these real problems.

I therefore intend to discuss in succession economic policy, foreign policy and public safety.

Economic Policy

It is a fact that Spain has a very poor natural energy base, that it depends on imported energy and that it is very vulnerable to increases in the price of oil.

The second objective feature which defines Spain's current situation and which distinguishes it relatively from that of other countries is the greater scale of the industrial crisis.

Third, it is a clear fact that on achieving democracy Spain did not have effective economic institutions for adequately administering its resources. The treasury did not have a suitable tax system, the state budgets did not cover the whole of public expenditure, the financial system did not meet minimum criteria of modernity and the framework of labor relations was not comparable with that in Europe. In all these fields reforms have had to be implemented which have not ended and which must be completed.

In the light of this picture of adverse developments it is more necessary than ever to keep calm and know how to choose the problems, organize their possible solutions and clearly determine the necessary actions. The state of the economy is too grave to allow evasion and it requires that we adopt a committed stance with respect to it. There are six issues which will henceforth receive my government's attention:

--The energy problem;

--The formulation of effective decisions to create lasting jobs;

--Vigilance with respect to inflation;

--A determined program of reorganization and a new industrial policy;

--The liberalization of domestic economic activity, maintenance of freedom of foreign trade and the encouragement of exports;

--The delicate current situation of agriculture and fisheries.

The factors constituting Spain's energy problem reveal their gravity so eloquently that the absolute priority which the government wishes to assign to them can surprise nobody. It is clear that improving the supply of energy constitutes a task which can brook no delay, because disregarding or postponing it would be paid for very dearly in the immediate future. This preferential attention to energy problems is reflected in three urgent decisions:

--To pay the real prices in keeping with the shortage of energy, rejecting subsidies for consumption;

--To adjust the country's supply of energy to the resources at our disposal. The government will unhesitatingly support the programs of investment in energy and the exact implementation of the national energy plan, updated in its conventional and nuclear aspect. The nuclear option is the only one possible within a generation to guarantee Spain's political independence and economic development. The government will keep the chamber and the public regularly informed about the implementation of the national energy plan;

--To have the means necessary for state action in the hydrocarbons sector to ensure a policy of supplies and for all the state's resources to be exploited in a more rational manner. To this end the new government will propose to this chamber the measures necessary for setting up a national hydrocarbons institute which will bring together all the state's assets and holdings in this sector and which will constitute an instrument for effective action in such a crucial aspect of energy policy.

Recognizing unemployment as the country's foremost social and economic problem, I wish to state emphatically that the government which I intend to form will devote all the time and energy at its disposal to creating the jobs which our society demands. This firm resolve will seek to adopt responsible measures, because the creation of jobs does not lend itself to rapid solutions or simplistic prescriptions. There will be no effective and lasting remedy for the problem of employment in Spain until our economy grows more and until the outstanding structural transformations have been carried out.

Sustaining Growth of Private Investment

However, a strategy which based economic growth solely on public investment and selective support for certain investment sectors would be partial and therefore ineffective. It is essential, and my government will devote itself immediately to this task, to continue along the path toward creating the conditions which will make possible sustained growth of private investment and the consequent creation of jobs. In this connection I believe that, irrespective of the international and domestic crises, the persistent increase in unemployment in Spain has specific Spanish causes connected with the peculiarities of our system of hiring workers and our system of financing social security.

Correcting these peculiarities and bringing our labor market and the financing of our social security closer to European models is no easy task. My government will complete the implementation of the workers statute, thus creating a more flexible and efficient labor market, and, with respect to social security, it will continue along the path toward organizing a better financing system, increasingly based on the state budgets, and with a readjustment of contributions, which through an increase in the maximum bases will make it possible to reduce contribution rates. The aim of this is to prevent enterprises' payrolls from being a basis for levying state taxes.

Reducing the costs of social security is a necessary condition for increasing employment, but I would be failing to discharge my duty if I did not point with unambiguous clarity that this is not sufficient and that the state of the economy also requires wage restraint for some time. Without an adjustment of real earnings there is no possible solution to the problem of unemployment in our country.

It is clear that the creation of jobs requires of Spanish society a collective effort and cooperation among all the agents of the economy. Basing myself on this fact, I deem it necessary to initiate a dialogue with the social and economic forces to jointly formulate a specific, ambitious and feasible program of actions against unemployment:

--Measures of vocational training and of support for youth employment;

--Measures to promote the intersectional, interprofessional and geographical mobility of labor;

--The reduction of the retirement age, with the financing of its cost by the state and enterprises;

--The introduction of special aid for the unemployed with family responsibilities after the period of eligibility for benefit has expired:

--The promotion of employment programs within the framework of regional planning;

--Agreements with sectors and enterprises to create employment on the basis of new forms of hiring;

--Guidelines on which the council envisaged in article 131.2 of the constitution should be based.

To assert that employment is the foremost aim of economic policy does not in any way mean forgetting the two balances of the economy, namely, the internal balance of prices and the external balance of the balance of payments, because the economy will not be able to continuously grow or provide stable jobs in the absence of these essential balances.

A society which believes in inflation creates it, and when so much impatience is aroused by the monetary and budgetary measures which curb inflation, it is necessary to point out to those who are impatient that no country improves its performance with respect to the crisis by increasing prices. There is no less inflation where there are lax monetary and budgetary policies, rather, there is a greater increase in prices; and there are no more jobs but there is more unemployment. For this reason it is necessary, even if it is painful, to continue with stringent monetary policies and intensify control over current expenditure and the public deficit. The government will not relent in this essential aim, and in no way will it allow itself to be carried away by the pressure from those who proclaim that our extremely grave unemployment problem could be resolved by means of a larger public deficit.

If the deficit is not the solution, nor is increasing the tax burden. Tax reform is already a positive reality of the transition. It must now be supplemented and implemented with increasing efficiency and strictness. But we must not kill profits or savings if we wish to bring about investment and the creation of jobs. In particular it is necessary to step up the struggle against tax fraud to eradicate the most widespread instances of fraud which we know still to exist.

Increasing the public deficit to levels which simply mean the loss of a sense of production would lead within months to a destruction of employment, not its creation. The nation's interest, the workers' interest and the employers' interest lies in containing inflation and not in encouraging it, in containing the balance of payments deficit and not in increasing it, in creating employment and not in destroying it, in defending not only today's wages but also tomorrow's wages.

Control over the public deficit will necessitate a grave restriction of the public expenditure of the administrative machinery and a reappraisal of our policy of aid for sectors and enterprises which show losses.

Reduction of Budgetary Expenditure

A first step in this direction will be taken in the implementation of the 1981 budgets. Immediately after the formation of the new government, I intend to urge the ministerial departments to make specific proposals which will make it possible to reduce current expenditure during this fiscal year by a sum not lower than 30 billion pesetas. The overall state budgets for 1982 will be stringently prepared, curbing current expenditure in such a way as to make it possible to create the public savings necessary for continuing to increase public investment without increasing the deficit.

In reviewing the preferences and aims of the activity which my government intends to conduct, I cannot fail to mention industrial reorganization and the agricultural and fisheries policy.

To ensure better implementation of this policy the government will immediately establish, through the appropriate procedure, an adequate channel to achieve greater effectiveness in its activity.

This policy of reorganization will be supplemented by an industrial strategy which, in the light of integration into Europe, will make it possible to increase productivity, enhance the prospects for creating new industries and encourage the use of new technologies. Small and medium enterprises should play an essential role in this respect.

My government will devote preferential attention to agriculture. The world foodstuffs situation requires that we devote increasing resources to this sector, to which Spanish society owes a debt of solidarity.

Agricultural policy will be formulated with constant reference to the European Communities.

Within the perspective of this overall outlook my government will act immediately in the following fields:

--Implementation of further urgent measures to alleviate the effects which the present weather situation is having on agricultural and livestock production;

--Completion of the legislative program underway by sending to the general Cortes the outstanding bills, and by the continued implementation of the specific measures announced in this chamber;

--Reappraisal of the policy of subsidies, streamlining the procedures for granting the necessary subsidies and at all events bringing out machinery closer to that operating in the EEC;

--Aid for family farms and agricultural cooperatives, as well as support, in general, for agriculture, as a sector which is essential for meeting Spanish society's demand for foodstuffs.

The fisheries sector is in a critical situation stemming essentially from the difficulties in fishing in the traditional fishing grounds.

It must be clearly said that this situation is not easily reversible, but I can assure you that my government will defend the rights protecting our fishermen inch by inch in international forums or in bilateral talks.

I would not like to conclude this examination of the economic policy which my government intends to implement, if I have your confidence, without referring, if only briefly, to the role of the public sector in the economy. I have frequently emphasized my intention to strengthen the market economy in accordance with article 38 of the constitution. I wish to point out with equal emphasis the need for an efficient public sector which will set this efficiency above any pressure with respect to growth and plan its activity on the basis of some certainties in a world which is short of them. Greater economic freedom is not incompatible, and even less so at a time of crisis, with a rationalization of state action. I intend to formulate a 3-year public investments plan which, accompanied by the appropriate followup, will serve to ensure that investment is made efficiently, so that when, as now, public investment plays a devisive short term role, we invest not only more but also better.

The public sector also has a prominent role in correcting regional imbalances. The implementation of the law on the financing of the autonomous communities will enable the state to have better instruments for planning and implementing regional policy. In using these instruments and with the prospect of joining the European Communities the government will institute a system of regional planning which will have the cooperation of the autonomous communities and preautonomy bodies.

I will proceed to refer to the foreign policy which my government intends to conduct if I secure the investiture.

Spain's demographic, economic and military situation makes it necessary to place the emphasis on foreign policy, rather than on what we commonly know as international policy.

This means that, without forgetting due attention to the great international issues, we intend to concentrate on our problems, on the defense of our specific interests and on active cooperation and friendship with those countries in the world which share the values and interests inherent in present-day Spanish society.

Our foreign policy should devote priority attention to guaranteeing our national security and safeguarding the integrity of our territory. For this reason, I wish to make very clear the close connection between foreign policy and defense policy, which are physically inseparable. It is not possible to achieve an acceptable level of deterrence with respect to external threats without a strengthening of the armed forces, aided by an appropriate foreign policy.

I also believe that Spain should cooperate in the defense of the democratic values on which the society in which we wish to live and coexist is based. We are obliged to assert the values in which we believe, and therefore to cooperate in the defense of human rights, an effective and comprehensive defense, not rhetorical and discriminatory. We are obliged to contribute to the safeguarding of peace throughout the world, as an ideal which pursues individual and collective security, contributes to prosperity and makes possible genuine cooperation for development.

Our foreign policy also includes the protection of the rights and interests of our emigrants and, in general, of Spanish people living abroad, and the promotion of Spanish economic interests and of commercial, cultural and technological exchanges.

I believe that I have thus defined the three foundations on which our foreign policy should be based:

First: National security and defense;

Second: Effective cooperation to safeguard the ethical and spiritual values characteristics of our humanist conception and of the society of freedoms in which we believe,

Third: Specific defense of Spanish interests, both individual and collective.

All this on the basis of sobriety, effectiveness and dignity.

The aims having been laid down in this way, I will now proceed to refer to what will be the preferential guidelines of our foreign policy. The principal effort will be aimed at securing for our country a clear and irreversible European, democratic and Western definition of policy, far removed from dreams which could reveal an isolationist trend with respect to the Western framework. This European affirmation will be accompanied by an essential and distinctive element which we intend to enhance: Our close relationship with the Latin American countries, essential for so many reasons which are unnecessary to reiterate, and which constitutes a historical constant transcending any short term situation.

In the first place, and I wish to emphasize this, the link with Portugal. It is necessary to surmount the lack of knowledge and the consequent real separation between our peoples. It is necessary to cooperate closely with Portugal and to achieve a sound and lasting understanding. It is necessary to promote henceforth a complementary relationship between our economies in order to achieve the two peninsular countries' mutually advantageous entry into the European Community.

The second bilateral issue which I wish to highlight is that of relations with France. It is true that there are competitive economic factors. It is also true that France's reticence in the necessarily joint struggle against terrorism sometimes seems incomprehensible and distressing. However, we wish to make known our intention to give impetus to a new policy toward France aimed at surmounting these difficulties.

Third, we intend to continue the gradual and agreed implementation of the Lisbon declaration, namely, a new path in the progress toward recovering Gibraltar, thus achieving an unrenounceable national aim and eliminating the only major obstacle in our relations with the United Kingdom.

Last, and concerning our Arab and African policy, I will refer to three sets of specific issues:

First, our immutable stance of friendship with the Arab world;

Second, our close ties with the Maghreb nations,

The third obligatory point of reference is that of Equatorial Guinea. The government which I am seeking to form will continue the efforts to strengthen the sovereignty, the development and the stability of the young African republic.

Within our Western definition I must devote in this enumeration of issues an individual and separate appraisal to our relations with the United States and the Atlantic alliance.

In my opinion, a distancing between West Europe and the United States cannot be contemplated as an aim in the political, economic or military fields.

Without being unaware that Spain's entry into NATO is connected with other factors affecting our foreign policy, the government which I aspire to head reaffirms its Atlantic vocation, which has been explicitly expressed by the UCD, and intends to begin consultations with the parliamentary groups in order to organize a majority, choose the moment and define the terms and procedures under which Spain would be prepared to take part in the alliance.

First of all, I must state that we will not allow third countries to attempt to coerce us with their opinions. We believe that this is a matter to be resolved by the Spanish people through constitutionally established machinery and to be discussed with our possible allies. But we will not allow third countries, specifically, the Soviet Union, to claim the right to veto Spain's entry into NATO, nor do we accept, therefore, the doctrine of freezing the existing alliances in their present dimensions, or that our sovereign will to act in this field represents an aggressive gesture capable of upsetting the balance of forces in Europe.

The decision to move toward entry into the Atlantic alliance corresponds to consistency with our overall conception of Spanish policy, but, primarily, to a defense and security need.

This Atlanticist affirmation means that the bilateral relationship with the United States should be considered from a different viewpoint. This bilateral relationship could prove more useful and advantageous with respect to logistic, technological, industrial, cultural and economic exchanges.

We are at a time of grave international crisis, perhaps potentially the gravest time since the end of World War II. We are witnessing great uncertainty and keen distrust in East-West relations, a distrust which on the part of the West is justified by unfortunate real facts. Spain has made and will make a great effort in support of peace in all the forums to which it has access, and especially in its present capacity as a UN Security Council member.

These are the main guidelines of our foreign policy. Together with them, there are overall and permanent guiding principles. Spain should take active part in building peace.

Autonomies

Concerning the issue of the autonomies, which is crucial for Spain and for our future, my program must be particularly precise and unambiguous.

On the one hand, I wish to say that I fully accept the constitution's autonomy option.

Hence my firm intention faithfully and diligently to observe and implement the Catalan and Basque statues, as well as to implement without delay those of Galicia and Andalusia, which have now been blocked, and finally to complete the entire remaining autonomy process, which I would like to be concluded in this legislative term. As far as Navarre is concerned, the negotiations with the foral council on the agreed improvement of the Fuero [ancient code of local rights], in accordance with the legal nature of the foral system, will continue.

However, and this is the second clarification which I wish to make here, the building of the autonomies must be effected in its entirety and not partially, and also with particularly careful political and administrative meticulousness. This entirety includes the state itself, as is elementary. The state is not a mere repository of powers which are handed over or transferred to the territorial units, and in which a more or less fortuitous residue is ultimately left.

It is therefore necessary that, at the same time as the autonomy system is being enhanced, those exclusive or shared powers of the state, without which the system would not work in the way prescribed by the constitution, be finalized and technically perfected.

I will be particularly sensitive to the principle of the preservation of Spain's economic unity, which is required by the constitution and by the efficiency of the economy, as is common in all the countries with not only regional but also federal systems, and is also demanded particularly urgently today by the situation of economic crisis which we are undergoing and by our coming entry into the European Communities.

Thus my ideas on this important aspect of the government's present responsibilities are not very complex, but I believe that they are firm and in keeping with a clear viewpoint. "Yes" without hesitation and without mental reservations of any kind to the autonomies, in which I see not only an unescapable injunction of the constitution and of the statutes but also a certain hope for our people, whose frustration would be a grave matter and whom, rather, we must all serve hopefully and resolutely. But "no," clearly, to a superficial interpretation of the autonomies as the dissolution of a common fatherland, created by history and destined to serve all its people efficiently, not only in the cultural but also in the political field. "No," therefore, to the dismantling of the state, whose strength must be the foremost guarantee that the autonomies will prosper, be enhanced and develop within a common structure which makes them possible.

A strong autonomy system in a strong state; this could be the final outcome of the policy which I would be prepared to implement from the government in this field.

Terrorism

Ladies and gentlemen, I will now proceed to discuss briefly the policy which my government will implement in the field of public safety, if I secure the investiture.

When citizens feel that the primary values of their peaceful lives are in danger, the greatest enemy of freedom, which is fear, appears, and then self-interested voices arise, amplifying fears and predicting catastrophes to undermine [conjurar] this great possession of us all which can be defined simply in one phrase: to live in democracy and freedom.

A distressing fact deserves to be underlined: 40 percent of the prisoners in our prisons are people under 25 years of age. This problem of juvenile deliquency, so frequently connected with the use of drugs, is one of the greatest factors of public insecurity.

The policy of prevention of delinquency will be among the government's foremost concerns. A protection of minors bill will be submitted immediately, the system of investments in special centers will be reformed and the government's entire activity in the field of crime prevention will be coordinated. We intend to carry out a strategy of social prevention which will transcend the mere repressive policy of penal measures. In this important field the cooperation of the autonomous communities and of the municipal and provincial councils will be essential.

A prime manifestation of insecurity is terrorism, which began in Spain in the 70's and which has subsequently continued under democracy. Over the last few years the UCD governments have tackled terrorism tenaciously, with successes and failures; with sometimes important progress but also with setbacks. It is only right to acknowledge here the support given by the parties represented in this chamber at the crucial and most dramatic moments in backing antiterrorist action. And it is necessary to repeat here once more that this cooperation will remain essential.

And at this time, when terrorist pressure is starting to be overcome, I must state that the government's action will be strengthened in the various directions already embarked on:

--Political action, with a real and unrestricted implementation of the provisions of the statutes, whose impact has morally undermined violent action, which has no justification or political excuses.

--Legal action, by means of a penal definition of the crime of terrorism in the penal code and of the allocations [figuras] demanded by the mobility and variety with which these events are taking place;

--Judicial action, by means of the constant activity of the public prosecutor, from the outset of inquiries, both to guarantee the detainee's personal rights and to stimulate prompt and efficient action by the courts;

--Police action, with the both quantitative and qualitative improvement of the services, coordinated with the autonomous community of the Basque country through the security council;

--Vigorous policy aimed at immediately preventing violence and irrational action affecting, even exceptionally, the activity of the servants of the state, whom society has always identified and will always want to identify with the full self-denial and self-sacrifice required by the defense of justice and democracy;

--Substantial action in international cooperation, basically via bilateral and multilateral agreements and legal and administrative measures concerning extradition and asylum.

The constitution requires that public officials observe statutory rules. The revision of these rules must take place in consultation with all the public administrations and the officials' trade unions. The new public service regulations must be the result of broad consultations and must be designed to be durable.

Public Administration

Last, a few words about a subject that deserves more: public administration.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would like to end my remarks with one final consideration.

The disappointment that has spread among the Spanish people with the management of public affairs and the repeated charge made against successive governments of inability to tackle the nation's problems can in some cases have objective foundations; but of course they do have deep roots in past attitudes that no longer reflect the new situation in Spain. In a democracy the government takes the initiative in resolving the problems that arise and in attaining social objectives, but it cannot be held responsible for everything that happens in the country. A democratic government, inasmuch as it desires and brings about a more prominent role for the institutions and individuals in taking collective decisions, will proportionately reduce its own sphere of power. Proportionately too it will need the cooperation of society as a whole, with which it shares the successes and failures. And this cooperation, from which nobody is excluded, now demands from employers the ability to accept risks and to invest; from workers, solidarity with those without jobs; from everyone, hard work and willingness to resolutely shoulder their responsibilities.

Now that the political transition is over and that a phase of democratic normality has begun (despite the many serious problems afflicting us) the government that I will form will meet its responsibilities with all the authority and steadfastness of its democratic roots, loyal to its principles and with no concern for outmaneuvering others and confident of finding within this legislative term the initial solutions to the principal problems facing it. I now urge the cooperation of the political parties, the local bodies and the autonomous communities in the collective task of continuing to build a new state. And especially the political parties of the opposition, whose responsibilities as opposition forces must not rule out cooperation with the government in the major collective decisions. I urge and hope for this cooperation, bearing in mind Spain's serious problems and with the certainty that they will be resolved in time by means of a joint effort.

Ladies and gentlemen, I request the house's confidence in the guidelines that I have presented and which I will expand on during the debate, in accordance with article 99 of the constitution.

SOCIAL DEMOCRAT ON TRANSATLANTIC TENSION

LD271149 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 24 Feb 81 p 2

[Lasse Budtz, Danish Social Democratic Party Foreign Affairs and Defense Policy Committee chairman, "Viewpoint" article: "Prospect of Tensions in Atlantic Cooperation After Reagan Signals"]

[Text] The U.S. allies are still looking across the Atlantic with the greatest interest to try to get a clear picture of the Reagan administration's foreign policy course. The signals have begun to come in, but how are they to be interpreted?

There is no point in hiding the fact that, if they are taken at face value, certain tensions could arise in so-called Atlantic cooperation, that is, at least from the viewpoints which the West European Social Democratic parties must adopt.

Bearing in mind that the United States and its West European allies have an indisputable need of cooperation for foreign policy, security policy and economic reasons, the danger of tensions should not be dismissed, but faced up to. Only by making this admission is there any possibility of doing anything about it.

It must be seen as a consequence of this situation that the West German Government felt itself called on to point out that, even though the United States has clearly made a decision to rearm, it has also made a clear declaration of readiness for negotiations with the Soviet Union on disarmament. At more or less the same time the Soviet Government let it be known through a commentator, who cannot be suspected of trying to indicate anything else, that Moscow is ready to begin negotiations on peace and disarmament. "We are ready to shake hands," was the phrase used.

This sounds good, but it is nevertheless a fact that new U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said in an interview with German radio quite recently that, under the present circumstances, nothing new would come of starting negotiations with the Soviet Union on arms limitation.

A respected West German politician, Social Democratic Bundestag deputy and chairman of the party's foreign and security policy group, Peter Corterier, who is also particularly well known and respected in our own Danish party and who is a clear supporter of NATO, felt bound to react to this.

Peter Corterier pointed out that a condition for agreeing to reach a decision to deploy the Western medium-range missiles as a response to the Russian SS-20's was that negotiations be started with the Soviet Union on limitations in the arms race, primarily in the area of medium-range missiles, so that it might be possible to completely avoid the latter's deployment. This condition played an extremely important role in the countries in which the Social Democratic parties have a strong position.

With his statement that negotiations are not necessary and his comments on the neutron bomb Mr Weinberger has made things more difficult than necessary, Peter Corterier said. He is very close to Helmut Schmidt, and so it might be useful to remind the Americans that Corterier's statements are indicative of the Social Democratic Party's position.

If the various efforts toward detente and in particular the efforts to control the nuclear arms trend are discontinued by Reagan, a position to which the President and the secretary of state have fortunately not committed themselves, tensions across the Atlantic are unavoidable.

But there are other dangers which must be pointed out.

Reagan has proposed to Congress that the U.S. development aid budget be cut to around 25 percent.

Since as a percentage of GNP it is already far below what the Scandinavian nations and The Netherlands set aside, we are faced here with a proposed policy which, to put it diplomatically, will give rise to little enthusiasm in a number of West European countries which must be seen as U.S. allies.

This leads directly to the U.S. stance on developments in Central America. A delegation of U.S. officials is on its way to Denmark, among other places, to present what is called proof of Soviet arms supplies to the liberation organization in El Salvador. Another delegation led by a high-ranking U.S. politician from the State Department has already visited London, Paris and Bonn.

The aim of the visits is to convince the Western allies of the danger of communist infiltration in the Central American region, and to persuade them to stop any Western aid to the liberation organization and to try to show that the Socialist International, for example, which has made clear statements in support of the liberation movement, is wrong.

It is worth remembering here that the West European allies set great store by being consulted about problems like this one. But there seems to be disagreement on how the U.S. missions have been received. The U.S. press writes of a positive reception, and the European press underlines coolness.

It is a Social Democratic view that foreign interference in developments in El Salvador should be avoided and that the violent confrontation, which has been going on for a long time, should be limited and ideally halted--but by peaceful means. It is obvious that the junta in El Salvador is not representative of the people, and it is also possibly true that the liberation front, which also includes a Social Democratic Party which is a member of the International, still does not have the popular support for which it strives.

But is it also a widespread view that direct U.S. military involvement in El Salvador could only help the communist forces, and that the liberation front would be thrown into the embrace of Moscow and its allies, if the West is not prepared to give civil, economic and moral support in the struggle against exploitation and for the totally necessary social reforms.

It is not unreasonable to remind ourselves that the Danish Social Democratic Party National Executive has adopted a statement declaring that the Social Democratic Party must demand of the junta that human rights be respected, that the bloody oppression be halted, and that democratic conditions be introduced. The consequence of this is that members of social democratic parties cannot give the junta the moral support which is obviously the wish of the U.S. Government.

In other words, there is here a third possible source of tension, the extent of which must not be underestimated, because events in El Salvador would have a contagious effect on developments in the neighboring countries.

Finally, we have Reagan's statement that West Europe should bear a larger part of the burden of joint defense. This is an old problem, but it is important to recall the oft-repeated argument, which runs: Perhaps the most important thing for the NATO nations in a serious economic situation is to preserve stability in their own societies and thus to continue to ensure popular support for the foreign policy which has led in part to participation in NATO cooperation.

Stability would in truth not be increased if defense budgets were increased significantly, if efforts toward disarmament were halted, and if we allied ourselves with totalitarian regimes around the world in the belief that to do so was a way of halting communist influence.

EDITORIAL ON BREZHNEV CALL FOR EAST-WEST DIALOGUE

[Editorial: "The Kremlin's Wish for a Dialogue"]

[Text] Both the initial U.S. reactions and West European leaders' cautious restraint indicate that party boss Leonid Brezhnev's invitation to a dialogue is being taken seriously in major Western capitals. A closer study of his marathon speech to the party congress on Monday confirms that the Kremlin is now quite openly promoting a desire to enter into political discussions with other countries on a number of controversial questions. The domestic economic and political problems, the swing in the U.S. mood concerning military questions and the feeling of being surrounded by opponents on all Russia's borders have made an undoubted contribution to the desire for a dialogue in the Kremlin--and give us reason to suppose that the Russians' wishes are meant seriously. This does not of course exclude the possibility that Moscow is once again taking tactical considerations into account and is, in particular, trying to sow dissension between Americans and West Europeans. The need for joint consultations and mutual understanding within NATO will grow significantly in the coming months.

In the United States it is Brezhnev's proposal of a summit with President Ronald Reagan which has attracted the greatest attention, but this is by no means the most interesting point in the party chief's speech. He also wants an "active dialogue at all levels," that is, a businesslike round of diplomatic talks with the Americans. And he has made it clear that he is willing to listen to Reagan's objections to the SALT II agreement, which regulates strategic arms and which West Europe has called on the United States to accept.

It is of special interest for France that Brezhnev now seems to accept the idea that new confidence-building measures in the military sector should also apply to Soviet territory as far as the Urals. This has been a key element in the French proposal for a disarmament conference in Europe--a proposal which has now been given NATO's joint support and is being discussed at the CSCE conference in Madrid. There is now good reason to count in the kind of progress at the Madrid meeting--which should really finish in a week's time--that will enable the CSCE process to be continued.

And in the Far East too, where the Russians are facing the Asian great powers, Japan and China, Brezhnev gave his backing to "concrete negotiations on confidence-building measures." He is also willing to discuss "the international aspects of the Afghanistan problem" in the context of the question of the security of the Persian Gulf--a question especially close to the hearts of the Western nations and Japan.

Brezhnev's proposal, in its updated form, for freezing the deployment of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe deserves to be studied thoroughly and could contain ideas which would make it easier to bring about negotiations on these arms. These are negotiations which the Western Europeans have long desired. The details must be studied thoroughly and the negotiations will undoubtedly be difficult, but nevertheless there is new movement over controversial questions which were deadlocked for quite a time.

We must express a certain hope that the tough language which has often been used recently in Washington and Moscow will not be an obstacle to a sober assessment of realities. And these promise that dialogue often gives the best solutions--even dialogue spanning deep ideological divisions and a tough tug-of-war over national interests.

PRESS COMMENTS ON BREZHNEV CPSU CONGRESS REPORT

LD271025 [Editorial Report] Stockholm's DAGENS NYHETER and SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish on 24 February carry page 2 editorials on the foreign policy sections of the Brezhnev speech to the 26th CPSU Congress. Both enumerate the various aspects of the speech and the proposals it contains, and both reach the conclusion that, apart from a "new, softened tone," the speech contained nothing new and made no offers which would not be advantageous to the Soviet Union. Both papers attach great significance to the sections on Afghanistan and Poland, which made no concessions about the permanent place of these two countries in the Soviet sphere of interest.

SVENSKA DAGBLADET sees the speech an an attempt to throw the West off balance: "Even merely a fleeting examination of the bouquet reveals that it contains thorns, the dominant impression from his long speech is that aging man in the Kremlin, no matter how frail he may be, has once again made an extremely skillful political demarche which could upset several circles among his opponents."

"The open invitation to Reagan for a summit meeting is probably not mature enough to be put into effect for a long time yet. But it could create difficulties for the U.S. President in the Congress, just as Brezhnev's latest demarche on nuclear missiles in Europe will delay or complicate NATO's endeavors to create a military balance on the European stage."

The DAGENS NYHETER editorial's main preoccupation is to analyze Brezhnev's "offers," and it sums up its conclusions as follows: "It is easy to see that the majority of his proposals are not new and that Brezhnev is not commiting himself to any Soviet sacrifices. Above all, suspicion of the United States is too strong. The new U.S. administration has already used strong language. Most recently President Reagan's closest advisers have hinted at the possibility of direct measures against Cuba, which is considered to be behind aid to the El Salvador guerrillas. A new U.S. blockade has not been ruled out.

"Obviously the Soviet Union is nevertheless concerned to show that the superpowers have a special position. The Soviet leaders' desire for summit contacts with the new U.S. administration ought to be able to create diplomatic openings.

"What Leonid Brezhnev's demarche is worth will finally also depend on how the rest of the world chooses to assess it."

TUC SET TO RAISE FUNDS FOR POLAND'S SOLIDARITY

LD021956 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1937 GMT 2 Mar 81

[Text] British trade unionists will be asked to raise at least 20,000 pounds to help the Polish Solidarity movement.

The TUC's international committee today decided to set up a fund for the new free trade union organization. And a team of TUC experts may be sent to Poland to give practical help in setting up training schemes.

The international committee agreed to launch a Solidarity assistance fund, which will appeal to unions for cash to buy printing machinery and office equipment.

Post Workers' Union Chief Mr Tom Jackson, the committee's chairman said: "This will help Solidarity to communicate with its members in a way that is absolutely necessary if their message is to get across to the people of Poland."

British union educationalists may be sent to Poland to help design training schemes, particularly in the running of offices.

At a London press conference, TUC General Secretary Mr Len Murray underlined that Solidarity had the "full and unqualified" support of the TUC.

The press conference gave British journalists the opportunity to question Mr Bogdan Lis, a member of Solidarity's presidium, after he had briefed the international committee. Mr Lis, 28, wearing a general and municipal workers union tie, said the contacts he had made during his four-day visit had provided moral and practical support.

He spoke of the present strike-free period in Poland, and said: "We sincerely hope this peace will continue, and that we shall not be forced to use this form of protest again. A lot depends on how the government behaves."

Solidarity had no intention of creating a new political party, he said, and he estimated that 1.5 million of its 10 million members were also members of the Communist Party.

Mr Lis's visit contrasts with the rumpus at last year's TUC annual congress over a proposed visit to Poland by a delegation.

In the end the plan was dropped because the government-backed officials unions reduced the visit to one day after British union leaders expressed their wish to see Solidarity.

DAILY TELEGRAPH PRAISES THATCHER'S U.S. VISIT

LD021553 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 2 Mar 81 p 16

[Editorial: "A Resounding Visit"]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher deserves praise on many counts for the way in which she carried off her very important and most exacting visit to the United States. Above all, she lived up to the high expectations entertained of her by the Reagan administration, and Americans in general, as a highly intelligent, courageous, determined yet withal charming person and the authentic representative of the British people. To some extent, of course, the shadow of domestic problems hung over her visit. Mr Reagan and his advisers will, from every point of view, be wishing her well in dealing with these, expecially as the extent to which she can "deliver" military and diplomatic support depends largely on the condition of Britain's economy.

Yet this does not detract from the force of her call to the alliance members to see Soviet policy in the light of bitter experience from the past and of sombre but realistic projections for the future, and to draw the now surely inescapable conclusions. Who can deny, surveying Russia's accelerated military build-up over the past 15 years and the increasingly ambitious and successful world-wide use she is making of it, that for her "detente is the pursuit of struggle by all means short of war"? While this has been going on, the West has been eagerly inhaling Moscow's anesthetic. Mr Brezhnev's latest offers bear all the familiar trade-marks. Mrs Thatcher was right to advise study of them with all due care--and all due caution.

Mrs Thatcher's endorsement of Mr Reagan's efforts to stop a Cuban-engineered communist take-over of El Salvador echoes his statement that the country should democratically decide its own future. The arms he is now sending are less than what Cuba has been providing for the communist guerrillas, while his contribution in America personal totals under 30 non-combat technicians. If Mr Brezhnev is sincere in his "peace" offer he can start by telling Castro to pipe down. If he is foolish enough to make an issue of it, so far away from Russia, Mr Reagan should with all the more reason be able to count on European diplomatic support. As for the Persian Gulf, Mrs Thatcher indicated that she favoured a NATO naval contribution to America's forces in the area. It is questionable whether this should, or could, be much more than symbolic. Persisting Euro-American differences over the Palestinian issue add a complication. For stopping Russian aggression in present circumstances the only answer is an effective American nuclear triwire. The real solution to NATO's problems, as ever, is a major new European regional defence effort. But it has become a question of now or, disastrously, never!

ALITHIA SAYS U.S. CONDUCTS BACKSTAGE MEDIATION

NC020955 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 2 Mar 81 p 8

[Excerpt] Recent developments have confirmed ALITHIA'S exclusive report of last Monday that the United States is conducting backstage mediation with the primary aim of settling the Greek-Turkish disputes, a fact which would also contribute decisively to finding a lasting Cyprus solution while it would also greatly strengthen the southeastern wing of NATO.

At the same time, recent developments confirm that despite its new embrace with AKEL the government is compelled to give apologetic explanations, or follow (through Rolandhis) a policy of moderating the anti-West feeling with regard to the United States just as President Kiprianou did during his latest visit to West Germany.

Two most significant developments took place in the past week which leave no doubt that the United States is developing some backstage activity toward the settlement of Greek-Turkish disputes and the finding of a lasting Cyprus solution. These developments were:

First, official indirect confirmation of Washington reports that the United States considers the Cypriot issue as one of the most serious issues calling for an immediate solution and that Foreign Minister Rolandhis will meet with U.S. Secretary of State Haig early April in Washington or New York to discuss the Cypriot positions and explore the possibilities of a just Cypriot solution.

Second, AFP reported from Athens that the United States is now prepared to consider guaranteeing the security of the Greek borders with Turkey, a commitment which the Greek Government has been persistently demanding but which, until the other day, Washington showed great reluctance to undertake.

According to our own information from well-informed diplomatic sources, the Rolandhis-Haig meeting has been pursued by the Cyprus Government through the U.S. Embassy here. The same information also says that Rolandhis will give to Haig apologetic explanations about the Cyprus Government's stance thus far toward the Western world, and the United States in particular. He will also reiterate that the West can give an honest solution to the Cypriot issue and will ask the United States to intervene decisively in finding a solution.

According to reports published yesterday, the Rolandhis-Haig meeting was arranged following contacts by the U.S. Embassy in Nicosia and it will take place in the middle of next May.

In his address at the conference, Ioannidhis, who is chairman of the Cypriot local committee, referred to the friendly relations between Cyprus and Bulgaria and stressed the importance of the celebrations for a country's independence anniversary, particularly for those countries that have toiled and struggled hard to acquire their independence. The acquiring and preserving of independence, Ioannidhis stressed, constitute the duty and the necessary prerequisite for consolidating international peace.

He stressed that the development of Cyprus-Soviet Union relations will have a favorable impact on the successful settlement of the Cypriot liberation struggle.

NC011016 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0843 GMT 1 Mar 81

[Text] Chairman of the Bulgarian National Assembly Bonev and the other members of the visiting Bulgarian parliamentary delegation have departed following an 8-day official visit to Cyprus as guests of the chairman of the House of Representatives.

In a statement at Larnaca Ariport, Bonev said among other things that the talks and contracts of the Bulgarian parliamentary delegation in Cyprus took place in a spirit of sincerity and friendship. We ascertained, Bonev added, that relations between Bulgaria and Cyprus are developing very satisfactorily and that there are much greater possibilities for their further development. In conclusion, Bonev said that he and the other delegation members are leaving Cyprus with very good impressions.

Seeing off the Bulgarian delegation, Chairman of the House of Representatives Mikhailidhis expressed the conviction that the visit has decisively contributed to the strengthening of friendly relations between the two countries' peoples. Both this visit, he said, and our visit which preceded it have helped establish relations of cooperation between the two parliaments which certainly will continue. Mikhailidhis also expressed the Cyprus people's gratitude and profound respect for Bulgaria's support to their struggle.

During their stay in Cyprus, the Bulgarian delegation's members were received by the president of the republic and met with the chairman of the House of Representatives, the minister of foreign affairs and the minister for trade. In addition, they also held meetings with parliamentary representatives of various parties and visited refugee camps and settlements.

KIPRIANOU SAYS CYPRIOT ISSUE SIMPLE TO RESOLVE

NC011858 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1600 GMT 1 Mar 81

[Excerpts] President Kiprianou presided over a meeting at Evrykhou this afternoon where the problems of the communities in the Soleas area were examined.

Referring to the political problem, Kiprianou said that the Cypriot issue is a simple one and that all those who are trying to present it as a complicated issue are those who in reality bring difficulties to its solution. In its simplicity, he said, the Cypriot issue can be resolved easily, provided some truths are accepted; namely, that Cyprus cannot survive as a divided country and that there can be no solution without absolutely safeguarding the human and basic rights of all citizens. The president said that the unity of the country is imperative. We have accepted the biregional federation as a solution to our problem. But we mean a true federation and not confederation.

Kiprianou said that despite the UN resolutions, Turkey refuses to abandon its partitioning and intrasigent policy, and owing to this stance there has been no progress whatsoever in resolving the Cypriot issue. Nevertheless, he said, we will continue our efforts in a planned and systematic way, both by continuing the dialogue as well as by internationalizing our problem, until we secure an honorable, acceptable solution.

Kiprianou said that on the part of the Turkish side, a systematic effort is being exerted for us to accept, even indirectly, the faits accomplis. I want to state categorically, he stressed, that we will never accept the faits accomplis, no matter how much pressure there might be.

Denktas Reaction

TA021637 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 2 Mar 81

[Text] TFSC President Rauf Denktas has said that the Cyprus problem cannot be solved unless the fait accompli of depriving the Turkish Cypriot community of all its rights is eliminated and a partnership with equal conditions is reestablished.

In a statement in Evrykhou village in Cyprus yesterday, Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou said that the Greek Cypriot community would not accept an agreement that does not envisage the resettlement of refugees.

Replying to journalists' questions today on Kiprianou's statement, Denktas recalled that the efforts to find a peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem are continuing. Pointing out that the talks aim at terminating the 1964-1974 fait accompli and establishing a bicommunal and bizonal federal state, Denktas noted: the two communities are exerting efforts to attain this goal in a serious, good-willed and patient manner.

Denktas added that through his attitude rejecting the exchange of the population, which has been completed, Kiprianou is continuously undermining the atmosphere of the talks.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA SCORES DENKTAS' OBJECTIVES

NC01138 Nicosia ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 1 Mar 81 p 7

[From "The ELEVTHEROTIPIA" column: "Threat by 'Ultimatum'"]

[Text] Turkish Cypriot Leader Denktas' undisguised threat yesterday about the declaration of an independent state has confirmed all our concerns over the Turkish side's completely negative stance on the Cyprus problem. A stance which instead of leading the talks to positive results is becoming the reason for the dialogue stagnating and at the same time for an expression of fears regarding a deadlock after 6 months of almost continuous meetings by the interlocutors.

The Turkish Cypriot side's extortionist course is more than clear. For the first time Denktas has openly revealed his side's true intentions on the Cyprus problem. He described the declaration of an independent Turkish Cypriot state as the only "way out," simultaneously giving the assurance that the Turkish side "will say what is needed and will do what it must as required." He also described the declaration of independence as "a very serious problem of vital significance for northern Cyprus." Consequently, the Turkish goal is more than clear: An independent state in the north, which means--regardless of how much Denktas avoids admitting it--annexation of the occupied territories by Turkey, Cyprus' partition and dissolution of the Republic of Cyprus. As Denktas said, all these things will happen "if no agreement is achieved on the Cyprus problem on the basis of a bizonal federal system founded on the singularity of the two Cypriot communities and the guarantee of the Turkish Cypriots' life and property."

We consider all these things that Denktas said as an "ultimatum." We hope that the United Nations and especially local representative Gobbi will not hesitate nor delay clearly stating at last who is to blame for the mistrust and bad atmosphere in the talks--not ask for explanations for the Turkish side--because this concerns a very clear ultimatum. Especially the United Nations should direct its efforts in the proper direction if we are to have--if we shall have--as soon as possible the results we all expect.

ATAKOL ON TURKISH CYPRIOTS' RIGHTS TO ISLAND

TA261647 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 26 Feb 81

[Excerpt] Minister of Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Kenan Atakol has said that the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus is under the control of neither the West nor the East. Speaking at the legislative assembly during the discussion of his ministry's budget, Atakol said that the government has not made any concessions to any country until now. He noted that the rights of the Turkish Cypriot community on the island is (?acknowledged) by all and that the fact that various countries vote against the Turkish Cypriot community at international forums and at the United Nations does not mean that they believe the Turkish Cypriot community is guilty.

After Atakol addressed the assembly, the budget of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism which was fixed at 163,863,401 Turkish liras, was adopted with a majority of votes.

DENKTAS SAYS 'INDEPENDENCE' NOT ELECTION ISSUE

TA271206 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1130 GMT 27 Feb 81

[Text] Lefkosa (Nicosia), 27 Feb (AA)--President Rauf Denktas of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus said today political parties should not turn discussions on whether northern Cyprus should be independent into a "duel" during the forthcoming election campaign.

Declaring independence would be a realistic solution for Turkish Cypriots in case a bizonal federal system based on the equality of the two communities, ruling out enosis, is not achieved, President Denktas said. "When and if the necessity arises, the Turkish Cypriot community will speak up on this issue and act as required. Such a declaration would not prevent establishment of an overall federation with Greek Cypriots. On the contrary, it might help establish it."

O AGON CITES UNACCEPTABLE TURKISH CYPRIOT DEMANDS

[Text] As a basic prerequisite for the submission of a map on the territorial aspect or, more precisely, in order for the Turkish Cypriot side to lay down its cards on the territorial aspect of the Cyprus issue, the Turks have asked for the acceptance of eight conditions. The adoption of some of these conditions lead to the formal recognition of the Turkish Cypriot administration.

According to our reports the Turks, who, through various pretests, at first refused to make any proposals on the territorial aspect, have been compelled to suggest the acceptance of unacceptable conditions by the Greek Cypriot side out of fear of a possible suspension of the talks and the possibility of being blamed for it.

The Turkish Cypriot side undisguisedly demanded: That half of the regular and development budgets be ceded to them for their exclusive disposal, while only contributing 20 percent of it; that half of the aid given to Cyprus by foreign governments or organizations be given directly to the Turkish Cypriot community; that the ports of Famagusta and Kyrenia be recognized as free; that the airport at Timbou be recognized; and that the Turkish Cypriot administration be allowed to issue passports bearing the Cyprus government's emblem. The Turkish Cypriot side also laid down three other conditions of lesser significance.

The Turkish Cypriot side submitted these conditions during the last meeting of the two interlocutors but they were rejected by the Greek Cypriot side as unacceptable, since they advance the recognition of the Turkish Cypriot administration.

According to our reports, the Cyprus Government has accepted for discussion, under certain prerequisites, the three other conditions; the right of Turkish Cypriots to purchase goods from areas controlled by the state, and issues of health and social insurance.

NEWS COMMENTS ON TURKMEN'S STATEMENT ON U.S. AID

[Text] The Turkish Government considers an "unfriendly act" Greece's insistence on maintaining the 7:10 ratio of U.S. military aid to Greece and Turkey, Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said yesterday in an interview to the daily HURRIYET. He said this insistence undermines the climate of confidence between Athens and Ankara, and shows "all but friendly" intentions towards Turkey on the part of Greece.

Commenting on Mr Turkmen's statement official circles in Athens said the Turkish foreign minister apparently encouraged by U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig's recent statements against the 7:10 ratio, is trying to keep the issue in public view in order to help the Turkish lobby in Washington. The same circles remarked that Mr Turkmen avoided any mention of the continuous official and semi-official Turkish threats against the Greek islands and mainland.

In other parts of his interview, Mr Turkmen pronounced himself in favor of closer cooperation between Greece and Turkey to end the armaments race between the two neighbors, and said his country would do everything possible to restore mutual trust.

HURRIYET EDITORIAL ON U.S. MILITARY ASSISTANCE

[Editorial by Oktay Eksi: "Everybody Wants but..."]

[Excerpts] What sort of concern is this? We have been unable to understand it. Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen says: "The new U.S. administration is greatly concerned about Turkey. We have already understood this from its statements and general attitude. Hon Turgut Ozal's latest visit to Washington has once again confirmed this. The U.S. administration is attaching great importance to the military and economic aid to be extended to Turkey."

The following day we read Turgut Ozal's words in the newspapers. He, too, no less than Turkmen, maintains that "the U.S. Government authorities are taking a keen interest in the problems facing Turkey." In the same newspapers we read the statement made by the chairman of the U.S. Senate Armed Services Committee, Sen John Tower, who visited our country the other day in an arrogant manner, and we learn that the senator too wishes "to see aid to Turkey increased."

The fact is that there is practically no one who does not approve of an increase in aid to Turkey. Addressing the Armed Services Committee of the U.S. Congress on 19 February, General Rogers, Supreme Commander of NATO Forces in Europe, stated that "$5 to $6 billion in aid is needed for the modernization of the Turkish Armed Forces."

Let us also add that according to Turkish experts, the amount of money needed to supply the Turkish Armed Forces with modern weapons far exceeds $5-$6 billion. But we shall take General Rogers' words as a basis and say this: As is known, the new U.S. administration "which is greatly concerned with Turkey," has approved the aid plan drafted by the Carter administration without making the slightest alternation. This means that the highest amount of aid which the Turkish Armed Forces can expect to get this year is $400 million.

If things continue at this pace, the Turkish Armed Forces will need exactly 15 years until it has modern weapons, that is, provided that other countries do not manufacture or invent a single new weapon [during that period] so that we can attain their level.

Let me add this before I forget: Also, there is the Greece factor. Because, whoever was wise enough to discover it, there is a "ratio" concerning the aid extended to Turkey and Greece. For example, if $10 million in aid is extended to Turkey, Greece will immediately jump and say "I want $7 million." In reality, this is compatible neither with the size of the two countries and their armed forces, nor with the extent of danger to which both are exposed. And yet, the ratio of 10:7 is being implemented. Would you please tell me what sort of concern is this?

[Text] Ankara, 1 Mar (AA)--Foreign Ministry officials commenting on the forthcoming International Sea Law Conference in New York told Anadolu Ajans that Turkey would like to see the Aegean Continental Shelf and delineation of economic waters issues with Greece resolved by the two countries in an equitable way.

FISCAL 1981 BUDGET GOES INTO FORCE 1 MARCH

TA281132 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 28 Feb 81

[Text] The 1981 fiscal year budget goes into effect tomorrow. The general budget was published in the Official Gazette today. The expenditures total 1,540,865,037,000 Turkish liras while revenues are estimated at 1,480,965,037,000 liras. The 60 billion lira difference between revenues and expenditures will be met through internal loans. Of the revenues, 1,347,727,000,000 liras will come from taxes, 89,063,000,000 from nontax revenues and 44,173,000,000 liras from private revenues. [figures as heard]

The new budget does not change the civil servants' salary coefficient which is 25. It raises their travel expenses by 100 percent, however. Civil servants will receive, according to their grade, between 400 and 700 liras daily for travel inside the country. Moving expenses which were paid to civil servants in proportion to their salaries have been reset. When they move, civil servants will now receive 5,000 liras and each member of their families will receive 2,000 liras. However, this amount will not exceed 11,000 liras.

The budget raised by 50 percent the travel expenses of itinerant civil servants, fiscal authority experts, tobacco experts and state theater personnel.

The new budget raised the floor of overtime payments from 15 liras to 25 liras and the ceiling from 50 to 80 liras. No changes have been made in the social aid extended to unemployed dependents. Birth aid has been raised from 1,000 to 2,000 liras.

More on Budget

TA281513 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1445 GMT 28 Feb 81

[Text] Ankara, 28 Feb (AA)--Turkey's budget for 1981 fiscal year was published in today's Official Gazette to take effect as of tomorrow (March 1st).

The 1,558,743,151,000 Turkish lira [TL] budget foresees state revenues amounting to approximately 1,481 billion liras and expenditures to 1,541 billion liras. The 60 billion lira deficit would be met by issuing treasury bonds to raise funds on the domestic scale.

During the new fiscal year which starts tomorrow, current expenditures will total 664.7 billion T.L., investments 377.1 billion T.L. and transfers 516.8 billion Y.L.

The new budget was elaborated with the aim of speeding up the economic growth rate, increasing savings and using the resources in a productive way in order to bridle inflation, contributing to the solution of a number of pressing economic problems involving energy, exports and production and "spreading the social justice," said the preamble.

In fiscal 1981, 26 percent of the appropriations would be channeled to expenditures for personnel, 17 percent to other current expenditures, 24 percent to investments and 33 percent to transfer costs.

Breakdown of Investments

22.2 percent of investments would be in the field of energy production, 20.8 percent in the manufacturing sector, 18.1 percent in communications and transport, 12.6 percent in agriculture, 9 percent in mining, 5 percent in education, 2.2 percent in health services, 2 percent in housing, 0.8 percent in the field of tourism and the remaining 7.3 percent being channeled into miscellaneous projects.

OZAL REPORTS ON RESULTS OF CONTACTS ON LOANS

TA271448 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1430 GMT 27 Feb 81

[Text] Ankara, 27 Feb (AA)--Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal, back from his 20-day-long trip to four countries, said credits worth about 2 billion 507 million dollars would be supplied to Turkey in 1981. At his arrival speech at Ankara's Esenboga Airport, Ozal said his contacts in Japan, United States, Germany and France were "very positive."

Contacts in the United States

Noting American authorities paid extensive attention to Turkey's problems, Ozal said "even though there are numerous cuts in the American budget this year, this does not affect aid to Turkey. The United States will extend an aid of about 445 million dollars, 145 million of which from Exim Bank, to Turkey this year".

World Bank

Ozal told reporters the World Bank credits to Turkey in 1981 would add up to 712 million dollars part of which are (?included) under agreements already signed, others agreed upon in principle.

The OECD aid to Turkey in 1981 will be around 1 billion 350 million dollars, Ozal added. (?The rest of) this credit was rescheduling of loans which had been previously scheduled, he said.

Ozal said "I am happy to say authorities abroad support Turkey's present situation which differs much from last year. This year we are at a more relieved position."

PCB LEADER ON CPSU CONGRESS, BREZHNEV REPORT

LD031501 Brussels LE SOIR in French 26 Feb 81 p 3

[Pol Mathil report: "Belgian Communist Party [PCB] Verdict on Mr Brezhnev's Proposals: An Appeal to Reason and Good Sense"]

[Text] PCB [national] President Louis van Geyt went to the Moscow congress while Berlinguer, Carrillo and Marchais, secretaries general of the biggest Western Communist parties, all sent their apologies for the first time.

Does Mr van Geyt's trip mean that the PCB has no criticisms to level at the Soviet comrades? "This is no time to list grievances," he said in a press conference at PCB headquarters on Thursday [26 February]. The essence of this congress, Mr van Geyt said, lies, in the Belgian Communists' view, in the scope of Leonid Brezhnev's new proposals.

According to the PCB president these proposals are an important appeal to reason and good sense. "The survival of the peoples is at stake," he said. Questioned on the various reservations expressed about Mr Brezhnev's ideas, Mr van Geyt stressed first the favorable reception they have been given in various world capitals, but did not rule out the plausibility of reservations by judging them insufficient grounds for rejecting what should come before all else, namely dialogue.

The press conference concentrated on three main points:

1. Afghanistan. Van Geyt seemed to feel able to state that Mr Brezhnev has accepted the possibility of discussing the Red Army's presence in Kabul in the context of an international conference on Gulf security. The speech which Babrak Karmal delivered in Moscow this Thursday, in which he said nothing about Mr Brezhnev's statements on this subject, does not, however, make it possible to confirm such a conclusion.

2. The moratorium on Euromissiles. Van Geyt stressed Belgium's role which, despite the deployment of Soviet missiles, advocates negotiations prior to deploying U.S. missiles in Western Europe.

3. Finally, Poland. Van Geyt admitted that he would change the wording of the passages in Mr Brezhnev's report which stress the role of "antisocialist forces in Poland." However, he observed that the Kremlin already recognizes the responsibility of former Polish United Workers' Party leaders in the crisis. In order to explain the PCB's stance, its president cited the communique issued after the recent visit to Poland by a delegation from his party. This communique notably expressed the hope that Poland will pursue "the process of socialist renewal through democratic dialogue and without foreign interference."

[Question] Did this Belgian approach find any support among the communist delegations present in Moscow?

"More than any other approach," Van Geyt replied....

LE SOIR ON ENFORCED MINISTERIAL RESHUFFLE

LD031521 Brussels LE SOIR in French 27 Feb 81 pp 1, 2

["J.V.S." report: "Martens IV, Part Two in Orbit: Skillful Readjustment of Socialist Ministers"]

[Excerpt] At midday today the king accepted Vice Prime Minister Guy Spitaels' resignation and made the appointments sparked off by the new Socialist Party [PS] leader's departure from the government. Several appointments were expected, and others already give some indication of the development of the balance of power in the Socialist Party.

The second version of the MARTENS IV team has thus been formed. As soon as the newly appointed government members have been sworn in at the Palais de Laeken, the prime minister will leave for Zaire this Thursday at 1900 hours, a trip which is as tricky as regards the future of Belgian-Zaire relations as it is for the development of relations within the government majority.

Finally, the ministerial reshuffle is less limited than expected and does contain a few surprises. As is known, the changes only affected the French-speaking Socialists, since they are the result of Vice Prime Minister Guy Spitaels' election as PS chairman.

The operation can be summarized in five points:

1. Guy Mathot becomes vice prime minister while keeping the budget portfolio. This seems to follow elementary logic at a time when the government is up to its neck in the budgetary control operation;

2. Philippe Busquin, who made a spectacular "surge" in the PS bureau section, remains national education minister (French-speaking section) and receives the Department of the Interior, which Mr Mathot is leaving;

3. Philippe Moureaux remains minister of justice and institutional reforms. He will occupy the second post reserved for the PS on the ministerial general policy committee, the first obviously going to Mr Mathot;

4. Valny Feaux, Walloon Senator for Babrant and chairman of the Socialist group on the French Speaking Community Council, takes over from Mr Spitaels as communications minister;

5. Elie Deworme, secretary of state for the Walloon region, is leaving the government and will be replaced by Guy Coeme, a young permanent deputy [depute permanent] from Liege Province who is also chairman of the Walloon Regional Development Society.

GENSCHER ASKS HALT TO SOVIET MISSILE DEPLOYMENT

[Text] Bonn, 3 Mar (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today reaffirmed the Federal Government's negative attitude toward the proposals of Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev for a moratorium on the deployment of missiles. In an interview released by the Bonn Foreign Ministry, Genscher said that since the Soviet superiority in medium-range missiles has risen even faster than had been feared earlier, there is even less justification for a moratorium than at the time of the first discussion in 1979. The moratorium proposed by Brezhnev would cement Soviet superiority and thus jeopardize the balance and security even further.

The foreign minister again appealed to the Soviet Union to put a halt at long last to its advance arming in medium-range missiles, in other words, to stop their manufacture and deployment. Such a halt, even preferable to reducing Soviet advance arming would be a significant step to easing negotiations on medium-range weapons.

Genscher again welcomed the fact that Brezhnev, in his speech at the CPSU congress, had not poured oil into the fire but had announced his willingness to negotiate. Moscow's readiness to negotiate confidence-building measures for all of Europe was significant and to be welcomed. "We shall use every opportunity to negotiate," the minister said.

The interview with the BADISCHE NEUESTE NACHRICHTEN, the SCHWAEBISCHE ZEITUNG and KIELER NACHRICHTEN was released by the Bonn Foreign Office.

NICARAGUAN FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR TALKS

LD021503 Hamburg DPA in German 1358 GMT 2 Mar 81

[Text] Bonn, 2 Mar (DPA)--Miguel d'Escoto Brockman, minister of foreign affairs of the revolutionary government of Nicaragua, arrived in Bonn today for a 2-day visit. D'Escoto, who is accompanied by Haroldo Montealegre, minister of the International Reconstruction Fund, will meet Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on Tuesday. Both want to discuss the situation in Central America.

The Foreign Ministry in this connection recalled the visit to Bonn last week of Costa Rican Foreign Minister Bernd Niehaus Quesada, and Genscher's talks with American special representative Lawrence Eagleburger. There had been agreement with Eagleburger on the usefulness of a meeting with the Nicaraguan foreign minister and on the need for regular discussions of this kind. D'Escoto spoke with Genscher when he visited Bonn in August.

Meets With Genscher

LD031720 Hamburg DPA in German 1633 GMT 3 Mar 81

[Text] Bonn, 3 Mar (DPA)--The developments in Central America, especially the civil war in El Salvador, were the focus of a 3-hour exchange of views in Bonn today between Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto Brockman.

According to the Foreign Office, both ministers agreed that it is in the "general interest" to overcome the present problems in El Salvador through a political solution. To this end, a dialogue between the conflicting parties is necessary and all efforts must be concentrated toward this.

Genscher stressed that the Federal Government condemns arms deliveries by communist states to El Salvador. They only make a political solution more difficult. For this reason, the Federal Government welcomed the statement by the Nicaraguan Government that it is not permitting arms deliveries through its territory. D'Escoto Brockman underlined the intention of both politicians to continue their discussion contacts.

The Nicaraguan minister, who last visited Bonn in August 1980, will talk with other federal ministers on questions of economic cooperation. Genscher accepted an invitation to visit Nicaragua, possibly in the late summer of 1981.

FIGURES SHOW POOR START IN OVERALL TRADE BALANCE

DW031237 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 2 Mar 81 p 8

[Excerpt] Duesseldorf, 1 March--The January figures for goods traffic with foreign countries as well as for the overall trade balance--with the balances for services and transfers included--are in the red. According to a release by the Federal Office for Statistics, imports of commodities worth DM28.194 million as against exports worth DM27.271 million added up to an import surplus of DM0.9 billion. Initial, tentative figures compiled by the German federal bank indicate that the overall trade balance shows a deficit of DM5.0 billion as compared with DM2.4 billion in January 1980.

FRG-GDR TRADE EXPANDS, REACHES RECORD TURNOVER

LD041256 Hamburg DPA in German 0834 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] Berlin, 4 Mar (DPA)--IntraGerman trade achieved its greatest ever expansion last year with an increase of 18.7 percent (1979: 12 percent). It reached a record turnover of 11.7 billion units of account (one unit of account - DM1). It is true that the increase of 1.8 billion units of account includes considerable price rises, as a spokesman for the Federal Economics Ministry stated, but deliveries and purchases developed "positively on a broad base." Trade profited from a strong increase in the first half of the year, which was then followed by a marked leveling off in the second half.

With a slight surplus of deliveries from the Federal Republic, amounting to 20 million units of account, trade was practically balanced. The total balance of mutual contracts, including use of the swing (accumulated credit balance) remained unchanged compared with the end of 1979, at DM3.9 billion.

In terms of goods traffic, the GDR was even able to achieve a larger surplus, with 474 million units of account. On the other hand, in the case of services, the gap between the active and passive side (minus DM494 million) was further widened. Increased payments in the areas of freight and transport, as well as increased interest sums payable by the GDR for credit for plant projects in recent years, were primarily responsible for this.

Deliveries to the GDR increased by 782 million units of account (15.4 percent) to 5.9 billion. The greatest increase was in crude oil, which went up by more than 68 percent to 588 million units of account. The increase in oil prices had a part in this. The price per ton of crude oil increased in 1980 from DM337 to DM495. The Federal Republic delivered, within the framework of agreements over many years and in connection with the supply of mineral oil products for West Berlin, 1.15 million tons. Imports of mineral oil products included 190,000 tons of gasoline, 1.5 million tons of gas oil and 700,000 tons of heavy heating oil.

In the engineering sector, sales improved after the sharp decrease in 1979, which came as a result of the completion of major plant projects. The GDR placed orders in 1980 for three medium-size projects worth a total of DM460 million to firms in the Federal Republic. Fodder exports to the GDR also have increased.

Deliveries from the GDR increased by 1.06 billion units of account to 5.855 billion (up 22.2 percent). A third of the total increase came in mineral oil products. Here the GDR, with a 20 percent increase in quantity and because of the international price developments, was able to achieve a marked increase in unit of account income and thus make a significant contribution to leveling off this year's trade balance. GDR sales of organic raw materials, synthetic materials and fertilizers also increased particularly strongly.

In the traditional main area of GDR products--textiles, clothing, agricultural products and foodstuffs--the small rates of increase of recent years continue. Clearly, the GDR is meeting export limits, which are also increased by the competition of strong third countries. Both areas changed little in terms of value in comparison with 1975 and were considerably reduced in terms of volume. Their contribution to total deliveries was still 36.6 percent in 1975, but only 22.8 percent in 1980.

PS CLASHES WITH FRANCOIS-PONCET OVER EL SALVADOR

LD031735 Paris LE MONDE in French 3 Mar 81 p 3

[J.-P. C. report: "Clash Between PS and Francois-Poncet]

[Text] The El Salvador affair is having repercussions on French political life. In this connection, there has been a clash between French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet and the PS. The PCF, on the other hand, has decided to cross swords with the PS on this subject.

Commenting on Jean Francois-Poncet's statements during the program "Cards on the Table," the PS denounced the "opportunism" which, it thinks, is taking the place of a French policy on El Salvador. (The minister stated that he had received "proof that arms are being brought into El Salvador," which seemed to him to be "the equivalent of foreign interference"--a situation "always condemned" by France. "That does not mean," the minister added, "that El Salvador's problems can be solved by military means. National reconciliation must be sought.")

Speaking from Boston on 27 February, Jean Francois-Poncet stated: "The PS has just once again displayed its ignorance and irresponsibility. It has displayed sectarian ignorance of the French positions which have been publicly explained and understood by all. It has displayed irresponsibility in the face of the Salvadoran situation which requires both economic and social reforms and a policy of reconciliation and an end to foreign interference."

Questioned on this matter, PS First Secretary Lionel Jospin told us: "When the foreign minister refers to foreign interference, he fails to take account of the fact that the United States is also interfering by sending its advisers to El Salvador. What is even more serious is that Jean Francois-Poncet seems to be unaware that the Salvadoran opposition is facing a regime which practices terror, murder and the elimination of opponents, not to mention representatives of charitable organizations such as the American nuns. The problem of armed struggle would not be raised in that country if Mr Duarte's regime accepted political pluralism, the expression of opinions and the existence of parties. Opposition leader Guillermo Ungo advocates peaceful methods and democracy. But he cannot return to his country without being murdered. It is scandalous to disregard this situation. During the resistance period in France, for instance, would anybody have recommended reconciliation with the militia forces?"

The clash between the PCF and PS relates notably to the question of suspending EEC humanitarian aid to the Salvadoran population.

L'HUMANITE has stressed several times that it was U.S. pressures which led to this suspension. It suggested that the socialists in the Brussels EEC commission had committed a sin, at least the sin of ineffectuality, in this affair. PS National Secretary Veronique Neiertz replied in a communique on 28 February: "Despite U.S. pressures, the EC commission has maintained its request for food aid to the Ten governments." She added: "Lionel Jospin, the PS Executive Bureau, the PS European deputies, whether in Brussels, Strasbourg or Paris, have constantly reaffirmed their solidarity with the Revolutionary Democratic Front struggling against the military junta. By taking the PS as its target, once again the PCF leadership has chosen to clear Giscard's name."

LD032016 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 3 Mar 81

[Text] President of the Republic Pertini will leave for Latin America toward the end of the month to pay a state visit to three countries: Mexico, Costa Rica and Colombia. DEFENSE MINISTER RECEIVES SFRY ARMY DELEGATION

LD032358 Belgrade TANJUG in English 2148 GMT 3 Mar 81

[Text] Rome, 3 Mar (TANJUG)--Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio today received a delegation of the Yugoslav People's Army headed by the chief-of-staff Admiral Branko Mamula.

Also today, Admiral Mamula had talks with the head of the chief of staffs of the Italian defense forces, Admiral Giovanni Toresi. They exchanged views on questions of mutual interest and the international situation, particularly as related to the Mediterranean region. The cooperation between the two countries' armed forces, which is being developed in the spirit of friendly and good-neighbourly relations between Yugoslavia and Italy, was also discussed.

VATICAN SECRETARY OF STATE ON DIALOGUE WITH PRC

AU032022 Rome ANSA in English 2005 GMT 3 Mar 81

[Text] Vatican City, 3 Mar (ANSA)--The Holy See is anxious to open dialogue with China but it is "up to China to take the first step after the message delivered by Pope Paul II in Manila", the Vatican secretary of state, Cardinal Agostino Casaroli declared in Hong Kong on the eve of his return to Rome.

The cardinal's reference was to the warm appeal of the pontiff, made earlier this month during his twelve-day Far Eastern tour, for rapproachment with China.

Vatican Radio today quoted Cardinal Casaroli as saying that, "healthy realism discloses the importance of dialogue with China and recommends it, just as this was hoped for by the Holy Father."

The secretary of state for the Holy See is scheduled to return here tomorrow at the end of a special mission in Hong Kong which included a meeting with Chinese Bishop Dominic Tang, who recently left China after his release from twenty-two years of confinement.

Bishop Tang, Vatican, radio reported, "emphasized the signs of greater comprehension recently noted among Chinese authorities as regards Catholics".

PCI'S PAJETTA ON CPSU CONGRESS SPEECH CONDITIONS

[Renzo Foa dispatch: "Pajetta Presents PCI Stances in Moscow"]

[Text] Moscow--Yesterday afternoon [PCI Directorate member] Gian Carlo Pajetta delivered the PCI's greetings to the 26th CPSU Congress, which had reached its 5th day. He spoke in the Hall of Columns at the Palace of Trade Unions to an aktiv meeting of Moscow communists, under the chairmanship of Viktor Grishin, Moscow Gorkom first secretary and CPSU Politburo member, convened to hear speeches from a number of foreign delegations.

So he did not speak from the platform of the Palace of Congresses within the Kremlin to the assembled delegates and guests, where speeches were read out even yesterday morning by Chilean Secretary Corvalan, West Germany's Mies and South Yemen's 'Ali Nasir Muhammad, and where many other heads of foreign delegations have spoken over the past few days.

Pajetta was the third to speak in the Hall of Columns, following the representatives of the Austrian and Venezuelan parties and before the Netherlands, Cypriot, Japanese, Ecuadorean, Irish, Iraqi and Lebanese representatives. Paolo Bufalini and the other two members of the PCI delegation, Francesca Marrazzi and Marcello Stefanini, were also seated in the presidium together with Pajetta. When Grishin introduced the PCI representative, the 500-600 people present welcomed the guest with applause and then followed his speech with silent attention.

The PCI delegation learned only yesterday morning that it would not be delivering its greetings from the Kremlin rostrum. In this connection, Pajetta released a statement to journalists, "It could not be up to us," he said, "to decide when and where to speak, but naturally it was not up to anyone else to decide on or even influence the content of our speech. We would willingly have delivered our speech to the congress--a congress that has been characterized by a report which we esteemed and esteem primarily for the specific and realistic proposals made by Comrade Brezhnev for a resumption of the detente policy, for a dialogue on balanced disarmament and on the extension of measures of mutual trust with countries on all continents." Pajetta concluded as follows: "The fact that we speak frankly wherever we are given the opportunity to do so shows that on points where convergence seems possible our desire for joint work is not [merely] formal."

Concerning interparty relations and outside the context of the congress proceedings, Brezhnev has had meetings with Czechoslovakia's Husak, Ethiopia's Mengistu, Angola's Dos Santos and Afghanistan's Karmal, and Portuguese Communist Party Secretary General Cunhal has given a press conference, having delivered a balanced and open speech from the rostrum. TASS reports that yesterday, however, Cunhal made some polemical remarks about Eurocommunism, saying, according to the Soviet agency account, that it is used by reactionary propaganda to try to split the communist parties and that it is decreasing as a trend, has no future in Europe and constitutes merely a passing fashion.

L'UNITA SAYS GOVERNMENT BLIND TO U.S. POLICY

[Guiseppe Boffa commentary: 'New U.S. Administration's Policy"]

[Text] While the recent departure for Washington of a couple of government and DC representatives took place in the depressing atmosphere of the struggle for appointments, their return really does not seem to indicate that they profited much from their visit. We are not referring so much to the eternally submissive tone that our government adopts when talking about the United States, or about our relations with its leaders. Let us assume that this is a matter of style. There are at present much more important reasons for wondering about it.

In recent weeks the new Reagan administration's policy has been taking fairly clear shape. Of course, we are still at the verbal stage and nobody is yet in a position to say what will happen to these statements when they come up against reality at home and abroad. But the intentions are now clear--so much so that they have already prompted in many parts of the world widespread concern which, although still expressed only tentatively, is nonetheless real and serious. And, though it is appearing almost everywhere in various forms, its signs are visible mainly in Europe, perhaps precisely because Europe is most affected by the new U.S. President's initiatives.

In an interview on his return from Washington, Minister Colombo said that one of an alliance's duties is to back the decisions of "its own alignment" with a view to restoring the military balance when it has been upset, and implied that the Italian Communists are unable to understand this. We regret to say that the foreign minister is mistaken and shows himself to be someone who has returned from the United States very ill-informed. The balance has in fact been one of our main concerns, whereas it is quite clear from statements by members of the new U.S. administration--we read the papers too--that their aim is not balance but to gain strategic superiority. The recently announced spending plans translate this aim into figures. Therefore, although a similar irresponsible aim took shape in the latter phase of the Carter administration, we are now witnessing an outright change in U.S. policy compared to the policy of all recent presidents, starting with Nixon, no less.

This change is destined to cause profound repercussions for the entire Atlantic alliance. Not for nothing are the Germans worried--and they are saying so in a thousand different ways. Well, were the allies consulted about such a far-reaching change, which certainly cannot be considered a domestic U.S. matter? Apparently not. This is all the more surprising since Reagan and his group have just promised to hold such consultations whenever shared interests are at stake, in order to put an end to the disagreements that have become apparent in the alliance. It is true that this promise is automatically made by all presidents as soon as they take office and subsequently forgotten. Be that as it may, if we are not consulted on such an important matter, what kind of consultations do they have in mind?

As the continent's press has indicated with disappointment, Reagan's only messenger to Europe so far has been a high-ranking diplomat sent to explain that what is happening in El Salvador is the fault of the USSR and Cuba. Since not even the Latin American governments take such remarks seriously, it is not surprising that the envoy was heeded with very cool courtesy on this side of the Atlantic. But here too we are witnessing an important change, because behind this way of talking about El Salvador we see the resurgence of a view of the world which we might have hoped had disappeared, whereby all changes are regarded as the result of a universal conspiracy on the part of "communism," no better specified.

All Europe's attempts to establish a new kind of relationship with the Third World would be jeopardized if our countries adhered to such a simplistic view of things. Meanwhile, the United States is cutting its aid--some North-South dialogue.

Last, there is the new administration's economic program. It is not up to us now to establish what the consequences will be, since even economists are perplexed. Probably events will tell us whether the United States too will experience the same fate as Thatcher's Britain, which is now suffering its worst recession for half a century despite its home-produced oil, or whether it will make progress toward imparting a new thrust to untamed capitalism. As far as we are concerned, we can only observe that in this case too Europe has been cruelly victimized without having been in the least consulted, although in this context its interests are directly at stake, as shown by the serious monetary confusion. Nevertheless, we have read statements to one Italian newspaper by a representative of the new Washington administration who warns that Europe must look after itself.

We do not know what Colombo and [DC Secretary] Piccoli were told, since this is not apparent from what they have said. It does seem strange to us, however, that they failed to realize that they were dealing with interlocutors who are suddenly refuting what until yesterday seemed to be articles of faith for both sides. No "human rights"; only "international terrorism." So much for "social" capitalism; let the wealthy act wealthy and let the poor be patient. Let us forget SALT II; the important thing is that the United States be the world's strongest country. Excuse us for asking, but what happened to all the assurances you were making until yesterday?

Of course, we did not fail to notice that even Colombo's interviews revealed some hints of alarm--so much so that the minister made a point of taking up some of the theses already raised by the German and other European governments. If this concern is sincere, it will at least be necessary to consider how to assert it within an alliance of which we intend to remain members--but responsible members, not at the mercy of whatever gusts of wind may blow at any time on either side of the Atlantic. This confirms the apprehensions that we have consistently been expressing over the past months. But it also confirms the great inadequacy of our country's present political leadership in view of the serious dangers that lie in wait for us.

SENATE DECLARATION URGES DEMOCRATIC ORDER

LD031906 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 3 Mar 81

[Excerpts] The Senate this afternoon held its announced plenary session, during which the president of the chamber, Cecilio Valverde, read an institutional declaration which was then debated by representatives of all political groups in the upper house.

During the reading of the declaration Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, and Minister at the Prime Minister's Office Pio Cabanillas sat on the government bench; they left the chamber once the reading had ended.

The session having opened, Cecilio Valverde read a declaration in which, after referring to the gravity of the incidents of 23 and 24 February, which, he said, filled the entire life of Spain with fear and surprise, and after stressing the resolute attitude of the crown, the loyalty of the armed forces, the responsible attitude of the news media and the unequivocal response of the Spanish people, he said that a better future for our nation cannot be constructed unless it is done from a profoundly democratic order. One cannot talk of order and peace, if it does not derive from the moral force of a state which is firmly established in justice and the utmost respect for the fundamental rights of its citizens. One cannot assure the right to culture which is the ultimate dynamic of the change and porgress of its peoples, if it does not derive from the most categorical guarantee of basic freedoms.

The representatives of the opposition groups reiterated the offer made by the Socialist group to form a broad-based government which, they said, would serve to strengthen the constitutive order.

All the addresses were received with applause by the whole chamber and, the debate having ended, the session has just been adjourned.

REPORT ON CSCE SESSION ON DISARMAMENT PROSPECTS

LD031600 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1400 GMT 3 Mar 81

[Jose Manuel Salgado report from CSCE session at Madrid's Palace of Congresses]

[Text] The CSCE is beginning to take on a new aspect. During the past days, in anticipation of a statement from Leonid Ilichev, Soviet deputy foreign minister and head of the Soviet delegation, work has slowed down, despite the offer made by Brezhnev at the opening of the CPSU Congress. But today Leonid Ilichev arrived with new instructions. And given that the party general secretary has accepted one of the conditions indicated in the French proposal for a disarmament conference, namely, the extention of the territory over which confidence-building measures would apply, his representative today voiced the view that such measures must, logically, be verifiable, and he accepted--well, that is what it amounted to anyway--that they might even be mandatory. As for the fourth point, [passage indistinct]

All of this creates a new situation at the Madrid conference. It is clear that the Soviets are anxious to get their disarmament conference, but it is not certain that the Western delegations, especially the United States, are all that convinced. It also seems to be the case that if Washington eventually decides to support the French view it is because they think it would be unacceptable to the Soviets.

And what will happen now? Just as the return of Ilichev was awaited, so today, after his statement, U.S. delegation head Max Kampelman, who is back in his own country, is also awaited. He will probably arrive tomorrow and everyone is waiting to see what reply the United States will give to the Soviet Union. According to a number of delegates, including some from neutral countries, negotiations will now begin between the two blocs, which might produce results: That is, a disarmament conference within the framework of the present conference, a condition upon which the Soviets have always insisted, and also agreements on the remaining matters which, though they might make less of a splash, would nevertheless be positive for all the people of Europe.

CALVO-SOTELO HOLDS POSTINVESTITURE NEWS CONFERENCE

LD031429 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 26 Feb 81 p 7

[Unattributed report: "Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo: 'Strengthening of Democracy Does Not Require Coalition Government With Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE)'"]

[Excerpts] Madrid, 25 February--Immediately after his investure at the Congress of Deputies, new Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo gave a press conference at which he answered several questions from newsmen, mainly in connection with the latest events.

Calvo-Sotelo began by saying that he was not yet formally prime minister since his investiture still had to be officially announced in tomorrow's official state bulletin.

Asked why he does not accept Felipe Gonzalez' offer to form a coalition government, he said that he spoke with Mr Gonzalez this morning and that the latter had extended this offer to him then. "After any offer," he stressed, "there must be an adequate period for reflection, but I would like to say that my thoughts have already been sufficiently clear for me to say that I will not form a coalition government, but a government composed of Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] members."

Mr Calvo-Sotelo stressed the following reasons for forming a single party government:

"1. Because I want to form a government as soon as possible and a proper coalition government would take time, a great deal of time.

2. It can count on specific backing in parliament in order to govern vigorously and resolutely, and it does not need the PSOE to guarantee the strengthening of democracy.

3. I believe that inasmuch as the serious events that occurred yesterday are of concern to everyone, they can be better resolved by a UCD government than by a coalition government."

"I am grateful for Confidence Expressed in Spain's Democratic Continuity"

In answer to a question he said that he did not notice the UCD parliamentary group's applause when Felipe Gonzalez announced his offer of a coalition government. "But," he said, "if that applause did occur, it shows the freedom practiced within our parliamentary group."

Asked his opinion about the serious incidents in the Congress of Deputies, he replied: "We do not regard it as trivial, but neither do we see it as a current and serious threat to democracy. It constitutes a stimulus to continuing the task of strengthening democracy and trying to make the state's institutions function better within a steadfast and united democracy."

He said that the recent events reflected factors here, within Spain, and that they were in no way related to Spain's possible entry into NATO.

He revealed that he would soon be having talks with the presidents of the Catalan Generalitat and of the Basque autonomous government.

Calvo-Sotelo also said that the events could in no way influence Spain's entry into the EEC, since "Spain's EEC membership has its own timetable and they cannot influence the timetable for this membership."

Asked how his government will respond to the demand for an elucidation of the recent events, Mr Calvo-Sotelo said: "The government that I will form will carry out the elucidation of these events entirely and resolutely, although it is not strictly the government's responsibility to carry out such an elucidation and to impose sanctions in connection with it."

"Transition Completed"

With regard to the kind of image which Spain has managed to project abroad, Calvo-Sotelo stressed that this image could not have been harmed, "since the matter was resolved in a prompt and exemplary manner."

Following repeated questions from journalists concerning whether he regards democratic normality as a reality in our country, Calvo-Sotelo said that democracy is fragile and exposed to dangers, but that it is complete and that the transition must be considered complete. "Because," he said, "the interim and transitional phase is over. I stress that the transition began with the political reform law and ended with Prime Minister Suarez' resignation, although this does not mean that democracy has been consolidated."

At another juncture he said that a coalition government is not the only form of cooperation among political forces, since the government composed solely of members of a single party "can carry out forms of dialogue with other political forces or parliamentary groups. My aim is to extend the scope for dialogue with other political forces on state issues, and I told Felipe Gonzalez this morning."

He cited the following specific state issues: "terrorism, the origins of the events in the Congress of Deputies and the consolidation of the autonomy process."

"No Dress Rehearsal"

Asked whether he believed that the events in question constituted a "dress rehearsal for a subsequent action," Calvo-Sotelo replied as follows: "Those of us present at the time know that it was no rehearsal. The government that I will form will take the necessary measures to ensure that such a possibility is eliminated."

When journalists pointed out that he was a member of a government taken by surprise by the events in question,the prime minister said that the outgoing government was indeed taken by surprise by the events, but stressed that "we will make quite sure that these events are not repeated."

He also said that it is a serious problem affecting a tiny sector of the public order forces and which might have affected a sector of the armed forces. "This," he said, "is a state issue which will also be broached with other political forces."

In reply to one question he said specifically that measures would be taken to improve the government's intelligence services.

Asked whether he will consult the armed forces over the formation of the government, he replied briefly as follows: "I have not considered consulting them."

LA VANGUARDIA ON KING'S CALL FOR UNITY, CALM

LD031705 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 26 Feb 81 p 4

[Text] As our readers will recall, the evening before last the king received in an unprecedented audience the leaders of the principal political parties, Rodriguez Sahagun, Felipe Gonzalez, Santiago Carrillo and Manuel Fraga, as well as former Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez, whom he congratulated on the happy outcome of their kidnapping in the congress, and at the same time read out to them a message expressing his impressions concerning the events. This is the text of this message:

Now that the difficult moments which we and Spain have experienced during the last few hours are over, I wish to express through these lines which I am reading out my satisfaction at having surmounted a situation full of anxieties and dangers. I experienced with you the tension of your enforced confinement in the Palace of the Congress, and I congratulate you on and express satisfaction at the outcome of such an unfortunate adventure.

For my part I had to make the opportune decisions with the utmost decisiveness, and my stance is clearly reflected in the brief message which I conveyed to the Spanish people through television.

"A Delicate Situation"

I wish to draw everybody's attention to the significance of the events which have just taken place, and we must not forget that, even if the problems which concerned us so much have been resolved, a delicate situation has been created which must be tackled with the utmost calm and restraint.

An open and tough reaction by the political forces against those who committed the acts of subversion over the last few hours would be highly unadvisable. But it would be even more counterproductive to extend that reaction to the armed forces and security forces as a whole.

Just as the king is very satisfied at not having lost his composure and having been able to help resolve the situation, at some critical moment, within the constitutional rules, it is necessary for all political groups now to maintain the same calm and discretion.

The king earnestly asks this of you for the sake of the maintenance of the constitutional order, democracy and peace.

It will be necessary to draw judicious conclusions from what has happened in order to determine future rules of conduct. Now that the democratic order has been preserved, I call on everybody to reflect on and reconsider stances which will lead to greater unity and harmony within Spain and among the Spanish people.

The responsibilities for the actions which have occurred will be determined in accordance with the applicable rules by the competent jurisdiction and with the vigor which is precisely necessary.

The throne feels proud to have served Spain with firmness and with the conviction that democratic life and strict respect for constitutional principles are the majority will of the Spanish people.

The King's Stance

However, everybody should be aware, on the basis of their own responsibilities, that the king cannot and should not repeatedly face situations of such considerable tension and gravity with his direct responsibility. Yesterday, there was the circumstance that the government was being detained in the congress.

I have assessed very positively the conduct of the armed forces and the security forces, which have constantly displayed their discipline, patriotism and loyalty to the throne.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff performed an efficient task, for which I wish to sincerely give thanks.

I also give thanks for the attitude of all members of the administration, the Permanent Commission of Secretaries of State and Under Secretaries, political parties and trade unions during the last few hours filled with anxiety and difficulties.

"I Request Cooperation"

And last, I reiterate to everybody my request for loyal and disinterested cooperation, surmounting secondary differences for the sake of agreement on the country's gravest and most fundamental problems, so that we can consolidate our democracy within order, unity and peace.

NEWSPAPERS CITE LESSONS OF ATTEMPTED COUP

LD031029 [Editorial Report] Madrid in Spanish newspapers on 25 February 1981 carry editorials commenting on the attempted coup in Spain, expressing the viewpoint that much remains to be clarified and emphasizing the need for a strong government.

EL PAIS asks on page 6 several questions concerning the scope of the conspiracy, and assets: "We believe that we are merely expressing an idea shared by many people in deeming implausible the theory of a 'wildcat group' headed by a lunatic which was supported by a few fanatical or unbalanced officers and obeyed in a disciplined manner by non-commissioned officers and enlisted men who were unaware of the significance and ultimate scope of the action which was undertaken."

With respect to Spain's political future following the coup, it states: "The political forces, the parties, the employers' organizations, the trade unions, the cultural institutions, the members of the church and of the armed forces, and the whole of society should be mobilized in defense of the constitution of freedoms. It is too early to make an analysis of the immediate political situation, but it seems clear that a strong government supported by the maximum parliamentary forces which will continue the democratic process and guarantee observance of the constitution is necessary. It is also necessary to demonstrate to Spanish society that these seditious troops rebelling for the second time will not do so a third time.

ABC says on page 2 that "We would clearly all be mistaken to believe that what happened in parliament is simply the adventure of an extremist which would now enable us all to wash our hands of the matter." Outlining the abortive coup's consequences, it assets: "With respect to the world it has robbed us of much of the prestige as a responsible and democratic people which we had succeeded in accumulating over several years; with respect to the national consciousness it has served to reveal a deep chasm at the bottom of which all the specters which we believed to be buried remain alive."

It praises the role of the king, the most senior army officers and the people in general in the attempted coup, and calls for an investigation of the attempt and of the circumstances in which it took place, adding: "But the examination will have to go into greater depty. Is not what happened in parliament yesterday bound to influence the new government and the manner of governing? Can the session of investiture continue simply as if its interruption were due to a mere indisposition of the candidate or of the members of parliament?"

It concludes: "It is clear that the differences between a rightwinger and a leftwinger are considerable. But this difference pales beside the difference between those who prepared to observe the constitution and those who aspire to crush it.

"This value of defense of democracy and the constitution should take precedence over all others. And it is necessary to draw the conclusions from this precedence. Values such as national honor must on no account be placed at stake. Parliament must not continue to be filled with ambiguities which may have given some unbalanced individuals not a justification but a pretext or excuse.

"The problem 3 days ago was whether Calvo-Sotelo would reach the end of the legislative term. We have now seen that there is rather another problem: Whether democracy will reach that end."

YA describes the attempted coup on page 5 as "the gravest event which has occurred in Spain during the last 45 years." It also praises the conduct of King Juan Carlos and the Spanish people, and maintains that "henceforth things will have to change in Spain: Never as now have we been able to realize that if we want democracy, it must be a strong democracy." Henceforth, "it must be realized that the war against rightwing and leftwing extremises is not solely or primarily a task of the public order forces but a social commitment," while "the political parties will have to realize that the Spain which we desire cannot be created without everybody's effort, and not through the reticence of everybody except the ruling party."

COUNTRIES CRITICAL OF U.S. EL SALVADOR POLICY

LD031840 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1700 GMT 3 Mar 81

[Text] All the Nordic countries are critical of the U.S. policy toward El Salvador. This is the conclusion drawn by Sweden's Foreign Minister Ullsten after having met his Nordic colleagues at the meeting of the Nordic Council in Copenhagen. The Nordic foreign ministers will shortly meet representatives of the United States. The envoys have been sent to Europe to try to explain U.S. support for El Salvador. One of President Reagan's envoys arrived in Stockholm this evening.

PRIME MINISTER DISCUSSES NORDIC COUNCIL MEETING

LD031830 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 3 Mar 81

[Text] In Copenhagen, the Nordic prime ministers today discussed at the meeting of the Nordic Council the development of the international situation. According to Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto, the participants took a more optimistic attitude toward the development of the international situation than they have for the last few years. Heikki Kymaelaeinen has interviewed Prime Minister Koivisto:

[Begin recording] [Question] Prime Minister Koivisto, the Nordic prime ministers have discussed topical issues of international politics. How was the situation viewed?

[Answer] Of course, we had no special, exceptional information, but on the basis of the information available it seems that the prime ministers to some extent have taken a more optimistic view than before of the future of the international situation.

[Question] There has been unrest in international politics. What are the reasons for a more optimistic view?

[Answer] One may, of course, think that we have concluded that matters can no longer get much worse. The year 1979 was one of real setbacks in international relations. Last year brought no improvement, but not much deterioration either, and there are now some signs that relations between the big powers could start to improve slightly.

[Question] President Leonid Brezhnev has made an opening, or a proposal, for talks on relations between the big powers. Was this matter discussed and if so, how was it viewed?

[Answer] It was discussed, and we especially noted that it contains new openings which hopefully will turn the dialogue on important international problem issues in a more fruitful direction than it has taken so far.

[Question] The Nordic countries have a more or less uniform way of thinking on many issues of international politics. Were there any differences of opinion worth special mention?

[Answer] Hardly worth mentioning. The fact is that as regards the matters raised in the United Nations, for example, the Nordic countries do not have differing views on most of them. In their security policy decisions, the Nordic countries have to an extent taken different courses, [word indistinct] but so far it has not been any hindrance to us being able to discuss not only international matters in general, but also matters which more directly touch upon the Nordic countries.

[Question] If security policy and foreign policy necessarily have to be discussed at sessions of the Nordic Council, how in your view should this be approached?

[Answer] Lately, the situation has been most unsatisfactory. At the outset we stated that international political issues in dispute and issues of security policy are matters which do not belong in this forum. However, they come up now and again--perhaps, one can say, quite regularly--and the discussion is carried out in quite unsatisfactory conditions. [Words indistinct] after the meeting all the Nordic countries will once again have to discuss whether any improvements can be made in this regard. [end recording]

In the opinion of Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto, the foreign and security political debate at the sessions of the Nordic Council should be carried out in an organized manner. This question should be discussed by the governments so that the right form can be found for the debate. Of the days available for the session, for example, one could be reserved for the foreign and security political debate, since the matter comes up repeatedly, says Prime Minister Koivisto.

When Finland joined the Nordic Council it set as a condition that it would not discuss foreign and military political matters. If foreign and military political issues are to be regularly on the agenda, it would presumably require that the Finnish Government cancel the condition under which it joined, says our reporter in Copenhagen.

TRADE UNION OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON VISIT TO POLAND

LD031727 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 28 Feb 81 p 23

[Text] In the next few weeks the Norwegian Trade Union Federation (LO) will decide how further contacts between the Norwegian and Polish trade union movements should be developed. This week LO International Secretary Kaare Sandegren paid a visit to Poland.

"Solidarity representatives once again asked if we could obtain paper and small and medium-sized printing equipment," Sandegren said. "But this does not mean that the movement is short of money. It is not money that Solidarity wants. It is help in obtaining the equipment it wants but which currency regulations make it difficult to obtain.

On his trip to Poland Sandegren had talks with top Solidarity leaders headed by Lech Walesa. He also met with representatives of the local Solidarity branch at the Lenin Shipyard in Gdansk. In addition he had talks with the other two trade union movements, the federation of autonomous trade union organizations and the coordination commission of branch associations. The former was formed as recently as January this year. This means that there are now three trade union organizations in Poland all recognized by the authorities.

"This trade union pluralism is a situation which all three say they are satisfied with. Indeed, they even expressed the desire that this structure in the Polish trade union movement should be preserved," Sandegren told ARBEIDERBLADET. His visit was primarily intended to gather information. Sandegren will now report to the LO Secretariat and administration before a decision is made on what is to happen in the future.

"But I expect there to be new developments in the contacts before the LO congress begins at the beginning of May," he said.

At present Solidarity is busy structuring itself as an organization, as opposed to the looser movement that has existed up to now. At an all-union meeting in May organization statutes will be discussed, and it is intended to hold a congress at some time in the fall.

MITSOTAKIS DENIES REPORTS OF U.S. GUARANTEES

NC031655 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 3 Mar 81 p 3

[Text] Until this moment, the Foreign Ministry has no information pertaining to the Turkish press reports that the United States is prepared to guarantee Greece's borders with Turkey. This statement was made by Mr Mitsotakis in answer to a relevant question.

The [Turkish press] reports pointed out that the guarantees would not be included in the bilateral Greek-U.S. agreement under negotiation. However, according to the same sources, these guarantees would be part of another agreement, for which a different formula is sought. At any rate, irrespective of how accurate the Turkish press reports are, Athens diplomatic circles have remarked that it should not be regarded as unlikely if, during the course of the talks with the United States, the latter granted some form of guarantee, such as the one repeating the 1976 assurance by H. Kissinger.

KKE DAILY ON NY TIMES NUCLEAR ARMS ARTICLE

NC031840 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 3 Mar 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Mass Rally"]

[Excerpts] The Greek patriots have been shocked by the huge scandal over the secret agreements on nuclear arms. The rightwing government's foul plays have begun to be disclosed....

By whom? By the imperialists themselves. The New York TIMES report--a skillful leak to the press by the State Department--is revealing.

Through a secret agreement, initialed in 1977, the rightwing accepted the status of U.S. nuclear installations in Greece and renounced every right of control over them. In the same year, Mr Averof undertook the commitment that the imperialists would be free to use the base and nuclear weapons at Iraklion for "objective purposes outside NATO, against the Arab countries. And all this when the prime minister at that time was assuring the Chamber of Deputies that "there were no nuclear weapons at the bases." Who knows what other scandals about the life and behavior of the rightwing the Americans have deemed expedient to keep in the archives?

However, why this imperialist sensitiveness toward publicity? Naturally not in order to enlighten the Greek or American people, but to expose the Greek Government over the negotiations for the bases so that the imperialists themselves can impose upon the Greek people the acceptance of the sullen Americanocracy and the nuclear installations since the "New Democracy," for preelection reasons, continues to keep silent.

Such a government has no right to negotiate with the imperialists for the bases. Such a government cannot handle national sovereign rights when it gives other assurances to the Chamber of Deputies, tells different things to the people and signs other things in secret protocols.

However, very soon the time will come that they will have to account to the people for the state of affairs they have established: Athens, Iraklion, Khania, Drama have been turned into magnets of nuclear catastrophe. Every Greek camp with the U.S. military present is a U.S. nuclear wasp nest.

Therefore, it is necessary that the whole country massively rally against the nuclear missiles, that the puppet rightwing and its masters pack up and that the dreadful means of mass extermination be removed before it is too late, before our country and people experience a new calamity of unimaginable dimensions....

[Text] Ankara, 3 Mar (AA)--The National Security Council introduced on 3 March certain amendments to the legislative functions of the Council. The decree on this subject was also published in the Official Gazette on 3 March.

The main points of the amendments are as follows:

The secretary general of the National Security Council, Gen Haydar Saltik, will attend the session of the Council without having the right to vote. He will also be authorized to establish ad hoc committees to study draft legislation.

The quorum necessary for convening the National Security Council will consist of a simple majority and the Council will, in principle, meet in camera.

The draft budget will be submitted for the approval of the National Security Council at least 3 months prior to the beginning of the fiscal year, which is 1 March. The Council will conclude its debate on the budget and adopt it before 1 March.

It will be possible to start an investigation about the administrators of public economic enterprises if these persons are not discharged. [as received]

It will be possible to start an investigation about ministers on the order of judicial authorities. In order to do this, a request will be submitted to the National Security Council--which is the only body entitled to decide whether or not to start an investigation--through the Justice Ministry and the presidency of the Council. If the National Security Council supports the request, a committee will be set up for this purpose.

TERCUMAN ON COUNTRY'S SAFETY AS NATO MEMBER

NC031030 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 1 Mar 81 pp 1, 10

[Editorial by Nazli Ilicak: "Turkey and the West"]

[Excerpts] It would certainly be against Turkey's own interests if it assumed a special responsibility in the Middle East in order to fill the vacuum created by the downfall of the shah of Iran. However, we must not lose sight of another serious danger involving policies affecting "the Gulf." What would happen if the Soviet Union dominates the Middle East, seizes the oil resources which feed the West and weakens our allies and indirectly us.

Somehow, all eyes are turned toward a probable exploitation by the United States. It is a great source of worry that the installations, set up in Turkey in accordance with the U.S.-Turkish cooperation agreement, may be used to serve U.S. interests and that the "U.S. rapid deployment force" may be based on our territory. The prime minister as well as the foreign minister are constantly bombarded with questions on this, which should be answered.

So, wittingly or unwittingly, we serve the interests of Soviet propaganda. The main idea is: "For God's sake let us not incur Russia's wrath. Let us not give the impression that it is being squeezed in a corner." This is the main idea underlying the attitude adopted toward the neutron bomb and the Pershing-II and cruise missiles. This leads to untimely suggestions that "Turkey should not assume police duties in the Gulf."

The ideal thing of course would be not to get involved in a war at all, and to continue to live in peace while the big powers are at each other's throats. But unfortunately, the policy of a country with vast common borders with the Soviet Union cannot be based on the thought that "we must not anger Russia." Did the Finnish-Soviet nonaggression pact counter Stalin's attack on Finland on a small pretext? Has the Turkish-Soviet nonaggression pact been able to avert Soviet aspirations for a base on the straits and for the return of Kars and Ardahan to the Soviet Union? How were peace-loving Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania overrun by the Red Army?

NATO's strength is Turkey's only assurance. Before we anxiously turn our eyes to the demands that may originate from the United States, let us focus our attention on the "achievements of socialism" to which Brezhnev proudly referred in his 26th CPSU Congress address. The Marxist theory advocates that wars are created "by imperialism which constitutes the final stage of capitalism." This theory maintains that peace can be established only when all countries identify themselves with socialism.

What Turkey needs to do is not to view the United States with doubt and suspicion but to maintain our bilateral relations within the NATO framework and at all times to preserve its position as Europe's 'buffer strength' at a high level. The decision which the Council of Europe will adopt about our country is very important. If we are torn away from the European family, we shall be left alone with the United States.

If this happens, we justifiably start worrying as to whether "Turkey is doomed to become another Egypt in the Middle East." All those who sense this danger use their common sense and unite in efforts to keep our country in the Council of Europe.

HURRIYET ON U.S. INVOLVEMENT IN CYPRUS TALKS

NC030950 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 28 Feb 81 p 11

[Text] Nicosia, (HURRIYET)--Using the possibility that the Greek Cypriot Communist Party may come to power in the May general elections as a trump card, and also referring to Israel's security, President Kiprianou and Foreign Minister Rolandhis of the Greek Cypriot administration have developed a plan which is intended to secure U.S. intervention in the intercommunal talks in a manner favoring them.

Rolandhis' request for an early appointment with U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig has been granted. It has been reported that Rolandhis is going to visit the United States in April or early May, but the actual date has not been set yet. It has been also learned that upon the suggestion of Kiprianou and Rolandhis, a special committee was set up at the Greek Cypriot Foreign Ministry to prepare a detailed report on "the importance and functions of the Cyprus Republic and the responsibilities it may shoulder in the future for Israel's security.

It has been learned that stringent measures have been taken to prevent the press and the opposition elements from having access to this report. Diplomatic circles in Nicosia are convinced that the Kiprianou-Rolandhis twosome is embarking on such a plan in the hope that this may enhance the ruling party's chances in the forthcoming parliamentary elections from which Kiprianou's already diminished party is certain to emerge even smaller.

A short time ago, Papaioannou, secretary general of the Greek Cypriot Communist Party AKEL which is guided by Moscow, issued a statement advising his organization "to make preparations for coming to power." Upon this advice, the party organization and its auxiliary branches were mobilized.

All circles admit that the AKEL party possesses the majority of votes in south Cyprus. AKEL--which so far has refused to come to power, preferring to keep the government under control--issued an announcement that it now wants to come to power, which is interpreted as reflecting Moscow's new attitude toward latest developments in the Middle East.

By securing the support of the United States in the intercommunal talks, the Kiprianou-Rolandhis twosome is seeking to create the impression that only their party can resolve the Cyprus dispute, an impression which would deal a serious blow to Kliridhis [Democratic Rally] who is advancing similar arguments.

It is believed that in the Rolandhis-Haig talks, the Greek Cypriot leaders want the United States to press the Turkish side to abandon the principle of equality in the representation of the two communities in "constitutional institutions and to secure a compromise agreement on territorial distribution in a manner that would serve their puspose."

FOREIGN MINISTER PAHR PRESENTS POLICY REPORT

El Salvador; Arms Exports

AU051007 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 5 Mar 81 p 1

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "A.U.": "Pahr Criticizes El Salvador Intervention"]

[Excerpts] Vienna--"We always reject any intervention from outside, regardless of who does it." With these words, Foreign Minister Pahr for the first time established Austria's position on the El Salvador question at a Vienna press conference on Wednesday. He said that he had made a statement to the same effect a few days ago to a high-ranking U.S. delegation which sought support in Europe for the U.S. engagement. In Pahr's opinion, the problem should be solved on a social and economic level.

The press conference was held to present the new foreign policy report, which was released this year earlier than ever before and in the same good quality as last year. The report again attempts to present a comprehensive picture of Austria's foreign policy.

However, a large number of questions at the press conference concerned the problem of arms exports and imports. Pahr has no objections, from a neutrality point of view, against the planned tank sales to Egypt and Saudi Arabia, but he refused to make a similar statement with regard to Libya. [According to Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German on 5 March, page two, Pahr said in this context that "as far as Libya was concerned, this would still require thorough consideration in view of Chad and Western Sahara."]

In connection with arms deals, Pahr made two other statements that attracted attention: "It is not my business to watch over the morals of other countries, but to make a security policy for Austria." Asked about Austria's rather meager national defense spending as compared with the country's economic strength, the minister said: "It is news to me that Austria is one of the world's economically strongest countries."

Regarding conjecture about a Brezhnev-Reagan summit meeting in Vienna, Pahr said that with its facilities Vienna always offers itself as a venue for such meetings.

Pahr described the latest proposals by CPSU Chief Brezhnev to include the entire European Soviet Union in the confidence-building measures as a "very essential element that can be the basis for negotiations."

East-West Relations

AU041324 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Pahr presented the 1980 Austrian foreign policy report to the public at a press conference today. In his introductory remarks, Pahr declared that in the past few months there had been no major change in Austria's position in East-West relations. The proposals by Soviet state and party chief Brezhnev at the CPSU Congress for a new East-West summit were assessed by Pahr as conciliatory, but not adequate for a reversal of the trend in international relations. However, Brezhnev's proposals could lead to an extension of the consultations at the Madrid CSCE followup meeting, Pahr declared.

Regarding the South Tirol issue, Pahr stressed the need for the earliest possible implementation of the still unfulfilled measures stipulated in the "South Tirol package" agreement with Italy. Pahr did not exclude the possibility of another internationalization of the issue by taking it again to the United Nations, should the Italian Government fail to make any progress in that respect.

REPORTS ON TALKS WITH NICARACUAN FOREIGN MINISTER

[Text] Bonn, 4 Mar (DPA)--The federal government will continue its cooperation on development aid with the Sandinist revolutionary government in Nicaragua. This was stated by Alwin Brueck, parliamentary state secretary in the Federal Ministry for Economic Cooperation, in a talk in Bonn today with Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Peter Miguel d'Escoto Brockman. The Ministry said that during the talk, also attended by Minister of the International Reconstruction Fund Haroldo Montealegre, the foreign minister expressed his gratitude for the Federal Government's swift and unbureaucratic support since the revolution. Since July 1979, Nicaragua has received from Bonn aid worth DM95.3 million.

Brueck emphasized the Federal Government's interest in the independence and nonalignment of Third World countries, above all in the Central American areas of tension. He pointed out that the safeguarding of human rights while building democratic structures is a particularly important government task in a country such as Nicaragua since the overthrow of the dictatorship.

Foreign Minister D'Escoto was received yesterday by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. He today met CDU General Secretary Heiner Geissler for a talk on the domestic situation in Nicaragua and El Salvador. Geissler described party pluralism and freedom for political parties as essential ingredients of true democracy. He stressed that any obstruction of the Human Rights Commission in Nicaragua causes the CDU "the greatest concern."

D'Escoto-Matthoeffer Meeting

LD042326 Hamburg DPA in German 1757 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] Bonn, 4 Mar (DPA)--The Nicaraguan foreign minister met Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoeffer this evening. The Finance Ministry said that Matthoeffer offered his "good offices" with international contacts and international organizations in support of Nicaragua. Foreign Minister D'Escoto today visited the Friendrich-Naumann Foundation in Bonn, which is close to the FDP and supported the reorganization of LA PRENSA, the opposition newspaper in Nicaragua which had been destroyed by Somoza's troops.

D'Escoto Denial of Arms

PA042023 Managua Sistema Sandinista Television Network in Spanish 0200 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto affirmed today in Bonn that our country supports the Salvadoran people morally. He denied, however, that Nicaragua has sent weapons to the Salvadoran revolutionaries.

At a meeting with his FRG counterpart, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, D'Escoto refuted the false U.S. charges that Nicaragua allegedly is supplying weapons to the Salvadoran guerrillas.

The Nicaraguan foreign minister will be received tomorrow by Alwin Brueck, parliamentary state secretary for economic cooperation, and possibly by several high-ranking Finance Ministry officials. He will also be received by the Social Democratic party's top authorities, its president Willy Brandt and its vice president Hans-Juergen Wischnewski.

SPD DENIES BRANDT TO MEDIATE IN EL SALVADOR

LD041805 Hamburg DPA in German 1555 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 4 Mar (DPA)--SPD executive spokesman Wolfgang Clement today denied reports to the effect that Socialist International has requested SPD Chairman Willy Brandt to mediate personally between the opposing camps in El Salvador. Clement said that the Latin America committee of Socialist International requested Brandt as Socialist International president to intercede with the U.S. Government to bring about conditions for a peaceful settlement of the conflict in El Salvador. Brandt, the spokesman added, will continue to do what he can to bring about a dialogue of all the parties concerned.

PRESS BANNED FROM BRANDT-MITTERRAND MEETING IN GDR

LD041728 Hamburg DPA in German 1641 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] East Berlin, 4 Mar (DPA)--The GDR Foreign Ministry this afternoon banned several FRG journalists, who are permanently accredited correspondents in the GDR, from traveling to Thuringia to cover a meeting between SPD Chairman Willy Brandt and Francois Mitterrand, the French Socialist leader and candidate for the French presidency. The correspondents were told that their application for this trip had been rejected.

Brandt and Mitterrand will be meeting tomorrow on the motorway from West Berlin and Hirchberg. The French Socialist Party previously announced that Mitterrand wanted to visit the site of the former prisoner camp in Rudolstadt. He was a German prisoner of war in 1940 and later escaped.

In announcing its decision, the GDR Foreign Ministry argued that the Brandt-Mitterrand meeting is private and both men expressly want no journalists to cover the event. The Foreign Ministry first "requested" correspondents to respect this wish and later told them that their application had been rejected. This decision was communicated to correspondents of DPA, Second German Television and the Working Association of the Statutory Broadcasting Corporations of the FRG [ARD] radio.

The GDR Foreign Ministry's action is not supported by the text of the April 1979 regulation on the order concerning the work of foreign correspondents. Under that regulation, application at least 24 hours in advance are needed for coverage outside East Berlin. But there is no mention of official approval being required for applications. Also, the regulations on official approval being required for journalistic activities cannot be invoked since foreigners--including, in the GDR view, federal citizens--are not covered by them.

SPD Spokesman's Comment

LD042018 Hamburg DPA in German 1720 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] Bonn, 4 Mar (DPA)--SPD executive spokesman Wolfgang Clement said an understanding has been reached between the SPD and the GDR authorities, that is, the SPD will release no information on the place and time of the Mitterrand-Brandt meeting in the GDR. The SPD said that it will not encourage press activities. "We have kept strictly to these assurances," Clement said. Everything else is the responsibility of the GDR.

It is wrong to assume that Mitterrand and Brandt are shunning the public, Clement said. During their travels in the FRG, they want to provide opportunities for talks with the press.

CDU'S KOHL INTERVIEWED ON PARTY TASKS, OPTIONS

DW031343 Cologne KOELNER STADT-ANZEIGER in German 26 Feb 81 pp 4, 5

[Heinz Murmann and Heinz-Joachim Melder undated interview with Helmut Kohl, CDU chairman and CDU/CSU Bundestag floorleader, in Cologne]

[Text] Question: Mr Kohl, at the moment, the government and the coalition are definitely not in the best of shape. Following the elections, a negative development set in which nobody anticipated. What strategy have you mapped out for yourself in a situation which is so favorable for the opposition leader?

Kohl: I do not think you can make a good, reasonable and wise opposition strategy dependent on the particular daily condition of the opponent. It is necessary to keep daily politics as well as basic conditions in mind. The basis of the present distribution of power in the Federal Republic is the fact that the coalition has won the elections and has a quite comfortable majority in the Bundestag. It could govern, indeed, if it were capable of putting its own political convictions into practice--something which applies to both parties forming the coalition.

The Federal Government's real problem is the dissension in the SPD which leads to agony and a deterioration of the leadership authority of the chancellor, and thus also to agony for the government and the coalition. As far as we are concerned, this state of affairs does not call for gloating, say, along the lines of: see, we told you all the time and now it has happened. No one can feel joy or glee about our no longer making any headway on the basic questions concerning safeguarding the future for the citizens of the Federal Republic of Germany, or about there no longer taking place any governing or administering.

Question: But you will not simply want to wait, will you?

Kohl: Within ourselves, in any event, we have to accept the opposition role. We must not run around in panic saying: When will it be our turn, when will the coalition disintegrate? We must play our role with calm. This includes, of course, that we say that if the government is at the end of its tether, we must be capable of assuming responsibility from now on.

Question: Is this identification with the opposition role one of the reasons for the moderate tone compared with earlier periods or are you pursuing the strategy of letting the government stew in its own juices?

Kohl: No...

Question: ...it being necessary to add that possibly the moderate course is not shared everywhere. An interview by former chancellor candidate Franz Josef Strauss gave the impression that he wanted to embark on a harsher course.

Kohl: That impression is wrong. Franz Josef Strauss recently delivered a major speech during the budget debate. You could see even in your own paper that his tone did not at all differ from mine. On the contrary, many observers felt that I was the one who fenced with the sharper sword. As for the tone, let me add another remark: We had elections last year. This was 4 months ago. Many of our fellow citizens, and this cuts across all party lines, felt that the harsh remarks in the election campaign were not always appropriate. It is not an instrument of politics to wage an election campaign for 4 years.

Question: You hinted, Mr Kohl, that the option does exist, of course, that the government could fail en route. What would happen in such a case, technically?

Kohl: To begin with, I have no intention of going into how such a thing might happen. This would make me look as though I were waiting for this situation to happen tomorrow. This would be at odds with what I just said. As far as the pure technical aspect is concerned, it does not present any problem if during a legislative period the CDU/CSU is put into a position of having to nominate a head of government. This is up to the Bundestag faction. This has always held true and will hold true also in the future.

Question: That is to say, just as in 1966 with Kiesinger...

Kohl: Yes.

Question: You referred to an agony of the government...

Kohl: This is a process that could take a lot of time. I do not rule out the possibility that the Social Democrats who, just like the coalition of SPD and FDP, are being held together at the moment by only one factor, namely, the determination to stay in power at all cost and to continue to drag along in such a manner. To these gentlemen, it is not so important what they are doing. What matters to them most is that they want to stay in office. They have tied themselves to the mast in a stormy sea, as it were, lest they be swept overboard by the waves.

Let me give you but one example: Federal Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff goes and declares in the Bundestag on Friday that as far as Brokdorf is concerned, he expressly supports the government stance. For weeks, open threats of violence have been uttered in connection with Brokdorf. The county commissioner prohibited a preannounced demonstration, using our state's principles of justice, which are also subject to review by the courts. At such a moment, the North Rhine-Westphalian FDP land chairman, Burkhard Hirsch, raises his old protest and declares his solidarity with the demonstration.

Surely, you can conduct politics in this way as well, by having and offering one for each group, namely, Mr Hirsch for the one that opposes nuclear energy and Graf Lambsdorff for the one that wants Brokdorf.

You might as well apply this to the SPD. Just take a look at the remarks made in the North German SPD and at what the SPD on the federal level says. We also have a similar situation on the counterarming decision issue. It is necessary seriously to ask: When will the reputation of this republic collapse through such a policy?

Question: For the union to begin governing in the near future would require that the FDP on its own change sides or that the union bait it with good, objective arguments, thus persuading it to move over. Do you see any chance at all for such a change?

Kohl: This is not a question of wanting but a question of reality. I am not the right interlocutor for this question. The FDP will change its position only if and when it arrives at the conviction that it will be dragged into this process of agony along with the SPD. The FDP will definitely not change its position if the union makes any promises or offers. I think absolutely nothing of such a policy.

Question: One can occasionally again hear in Bonn that the difficult political decisions confronting the Federal Republic could best be made by a grand coalition.

Kohl: You can hear from some Social Democrats that things actually worked pretty well from 1966 to 1969. Some similar voices can also be heard from among the trade unions. I am absolutely against a grand coalition and I also was against one in 1966. The political responsibilities should be clearly delineated. Besides, a grand coalition would do even more damage to the credibility of the parties among the public than they have suffered already. We would be bound to encounter lack of understanding and resistance, especially in the young generation.

At best, in a situation of national emergency, I could visualize an all-party government for a limited duration. There is not the least indication of such a situation, however.

Question: In some fields which might be described as national questions, you have offered the government support. Isn't this a particularly subtle way of embarrassing the head of government since you thereby suggest that he no longer has a majority in his own ranks?

Kohl: I am not looking at it cynically at all. I do not believe, or let me put it in a positive way, I am most profoundly convinced that there is bound to be a number of fields in which, after discussing the facts, we jointly will attain a result. This is also the way our fellow citizens want it. An opposition party which is no longer capable of doing this is no longer an opposition, but is pursuing obstruction.

Question: Do you have a hard time in your own ranks in that respect?

Kohl: No, I do not have any problems there. Surely, it will happen that a man overshoots his mark in the choice of his tone in the heat of debate. But last but not least, it is this point on which our obvious gain in prestige and weight depends among the public. Just like members of the government, politicians of the opposition must ask themselves whether they have credibility. Our feollow citizens can sense whether we are doing something for the sake of the issue at hand or whether we are just talking big, to put it dramatically.

Question: Does this include arms exports as well?

Kohl: This is an issue in which my friends and I have advocated the view that, to begin with, a restrictive basic attitude is reasonable and, secondly, we need an arms industry of a modest size because we have an army of our own. We should ensure the bases of the arms industry which we have. I agree with what we have built up in this field over 20 years. We have modest arms exports and we produce a modest volume of arms. In that respect, we should consider quite thoroughly and carefully in the national interest what the effect is that we elicit with these exports.

Question: A statement of your Bundestag faction on arms exports contains a point No 4 in which two terms are particularly striking: One is the "vital interests" of the Federal Republic which must be kept in mind in this context, the other is the "foundation of economic life" of the Federal Republic. These are aspects which so far have not played any role in the case of arms exports...

Kohl: No, this is a new development. But then, the world, too, is different from what it was 20 years ago. We feel the second oil shock in our bones. It has dawned on us that the oil faucet could be turned off overnight. We did not experience this in this particular form 20 years ago. We have become a much more vulnerable country. After all, this must be reflected in our policies as well.

Question: Meaning tanks for oil?

Kohl: I feel we should definitely examine potential arms exports to Saudi Arabia in a benevolent way. But I must see as the primary factor the Soviet Union's having been in Afghanistan for a year now. This is important, indeed, for the security zone on the Persian Gulf. Secondly, I must proceed from the premise that the oil situation has become entirely different. Saudi Arabia is our most important oil supplier. Oil is not just any substance, rather, oil, in some form, is the elixir of life for the Federal Republic of Germany.

I cannot answer that question without looking at the Middle East problem. We must talk to our friends in Israel, Egypt and Jordan. One has to realize the effects something like could have, as well as the efforts of American policy, to achieve peace in these regions of the world. Prior to making any decision, one must consider everything we have discussed.

Question: Is the NATO counterarming decision a national question?

Kohl: I consider it wrong to seek party political advantages in this matter. We have a situation where the government could suffer a defeat, a situation in which our country could suffer a defeat vis-a-vis foreign countries. We can ensure peace and freedom only under the prerequisite that our American friends, our friends in the West, include the Federal Republic of Germany in their security considerations. We must abide by treaties. That should not be a dispute between the parties.

Question: Do you believe that this counterarming decision will have to be brought to the attention of the Bundestag again in some form or other, maybe in the form of a resolution?

Kohl: If you listen to the leading German Social Democrats, they simply say: This government of Mr Schmidt no longer pursues Social Democratic policy. It may very well be that the Bundestag will have to deal with such problems again due to general political developments. Think of the help for Turkey in May last year, where the government would not have had a majority without the agreement of the union.

Question: What about energy supply?

Kohl: Regarding energy supply, nobody in the opposition can ignore recent developments. In our constitutional state with its many legal possibilities, from the decision to construct a coal or nuclear powerplant through licensing procedures to its going into operation can last 10 to 14 years because of the many legal rules. What we don't do in these next 4 years, in this legislative period, will have consequences for the year 2000.

All countries that can do so financially and technically are making enormous efforts in the field of nuclear energy, including our neighbors. In the GDR, for example, a big nuclear energy program is being promoted. One can only be puzzled that the communist emissaries have the boldness to demonstrate here in the streets against powerplants.

The president of France presented a balance sheet in January, pointing out proudly that all French parties, ranging from the communists to the rightists, desire to implement the program for providing 90 percent of all French electricity by 1990 from nuclear powerplants. You can see in my homeland, the Palatinate--the same applies to Baden--that French districts in the nearby area tell German businessmen: Do not set up your new firm there, cross the border, then you will have a "safe plug," as the slogan is today. That is the consequence.

Question: And yet, Mr Kohl, one can very well be for nuclear power while being surprised that the discussion about it hardly makes progress in such a big party.

Kohl: Actually, one can only be surprised to hear you say that we have not discussed this point. Our discussion took place earlier and it was more intense. We were engaged in the discussion when it hurt us, when the Social Democrats--in part out of cowardice, in part out of laziness, and we cannot get involved with examining this--were not dealing with this issue. We organized a party congress on it in Hannover. We discussed this issue for almost 3 years. The problem of our approval of nuclear energy has been thoroughly discussed and debated.

It is a completely different matter that in connection with general energy supply problems, we all have achieved a new and more intense relationship toward environmental protection, and I find that most positive. I want to see that the awareness of my party is absolutely clear in this respect because we are a party originating from Christian-social, liberal and conservative traditions.

For me, it is a most conservative task in the best sense of the word to protect the forests and the environment handed down to us from prior generations. It must not go to wreck and ruin in our generation. Nobody can be allowed to destroy what would then be gone forever.

It is a matter of viewing the pros and cons. In saying clearly yes to the necessity of environmental protection, one must also consider that we are a densely populated industrial country. If there were mass unemployment, nobody would enjoy the environment. That must also be taken into consideration.

Question: The union is not actually considered an environmental protection party. Has something been neglected in this respect?

Kohl: Maybe the right presentation was neglected. Actually, there is no need for the union to make up for anything. I was minister-president of a German federal land for many years. I would gladly compare my environmental protection decisions with those of any Social Democratic colleague in the history of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Question: What does that mean with regard to practical environmental policy?

Kohl: To be quite concrete, it told my party that we must stop proclaiming environmental protection, we must implement it. A process involving a change in the way of thinking is taking place, not only in the Bonn policy but also in communal policy. I cannot expect the situation of our waters to improve if those emitting the sewage do not do what is decisive for environmental protection. I demand and expect business and industry to do it. I must also expect the communities to do it.

It is true that it is easier to make the citizens of a town agree to build a new city hall or a sports installation than to construct a large purification plant which costs enormous amounts of money. What we need in this respect concerns not only the CDU but all parties; however, the CDU must also promote the process of change in the way of thinking. I think the time has come for that. The breakthrough has been achieved when the reelection of a mayor depends on his answer to the question: What sensible environmental protection decisions did you make when you were in office?

Question: And yet many of your party members want to step up highway construction work.

Kohl: I believe that highway construction belongs in this context. We have much less money now. I think it is reasonable to think even more about the small steps we must make now.

I again will cite a communal example. In the times of allegedly full cashboxes, there was quite a bit of boasting. That was not limited to just one party. Every city that thought highly of itself wanted to have a subway system. If you look at all the projects in the Federal Republic, I would say that the quality of life for the people has not always been decidedly improved as a result. If we can no longer finance such things, the damage may not be so great anyway.

Question: Does a majority of the faction share this opinion?

Kohl: Certainly, the faction is at least as wise as the public.

Question: You have mentioned the empty cashboxes. That brings us to the issue of the economic situation. Will we have to "tighten our belts?"

Kohl: I do not like this formulation because it creates a wrong impression. It means in the vernacular that one will have to starve. But that is not true, that is not what is involved at all. In fact, we do not have to suffer privation, we just have to act sensibly and fight unreasonable actions in broad areas of our society.

For example, it has nothing to do with tightening one's belt if we were to decide, based of our conviction and without passing laws, to maintain a 40-hour work week for the time being in view ofthe world economic situation and the decrease in our competitiveness. The Social Democrats decided last year in Cologne to implement the 35-hour work week. I consider that to be simply cheating the people. That cannot be implemented in the current situation. Nobody will be tightening his belt by working 40 hours a week instead of 35 hours.

Let us take another example. We will certainly have to deal with the idea that in view of the public financial situation and in view of urgent investments for the future, it will no longer be possible to support the young generation as much as before with BAFoeG [federal law for the advancement of education] government scholarships under the law for promoting professional training. Why should it be impossible, without anybody tightening his belt, to demand a certain percentage of the loan back from students, for example, once they have reached their professional goals so that we can reinvest the money?

Regarding the tax law, we must also stop punishing those who are more diligent than others; those who report sick must not get more money at the end of the year through annual tax return procedures than those who have worked thoughout the whole year. I consider this a decisive weakness and a great danger. More and more citizens will be unable to understand the state because the laws contradict commonsense.

Question: Let us assume the CDU would be asked to take over government responsibility prior to the end of the legislative period. You would then very much have to deal with these problems. Other governments have the same problems, such as Margaret Thatcher in England or President Reagan with his new tax reduction program. Is there something in these programs you would like to transfer to our conditions?

Kohl: All these programs must be viewed from the respective national situation, the national economy and the national social-political situation. Social conditions in England, for example, cannot be compared with ours. It is true, however, that the attempt is made in all three countries to handle these problems along liberal social system lines. We are the vanguards in this respect.

Liberal development, meaning that the state will not do everything and that important spheres can be taken over by society, is the only reasonable concept for the future, naturally adapted to current conditions. We are not living in 1948 or 1960 but in 1981. If I want to wipe out unemployment, I can do so only kicking the ball the whole length of the field, speaking in soccer terms. Those who make the investment decisions in the plants will then realize that now is the time to again make investments. That applies to the carpenter who will say: Now, I will buy the new machine. It applies also to the large installation of a chemical combine costing DM 100 million. One must again dare to do something, one must be a bit more optimistic about the future.

Question: Optimism, or better conditions for writing something off?

Kohl: I can achieve optimism only if better achievement once again pays. That cannot be gained by punishing achievements. It can be gained only by supporting them properly through tax measures.

DEFENSE MINISTER ON WEAPONS FINANCE PROBLEMS

DW040952 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1810 GMT 1 Mar 81

[Peter Elgaard undated interview with Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel in Bonn--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Having formerly been finance minister, should you, Mr Minister Apel, not have recognized from the very outset the specific budget problems involved in such complicated weapons systems?

[Answer] The share of the defense budget within the overall federal budget has gradually decreased in the past several years. In 1970, this share amounted to about 22 percent of the federal expenditures, while it will come to a mere 18 percent this year. Secondly, industry has fewer orders from the private economy, which means that it is producing faster in the arms sector than expected and consequently also sends out the bills earlier. Thirdly and finally, the new arms generation now being received, namely, the Tornado in the air force, the Leopard II tank in the ground forces, the frigates in the navy--and this is definitely not everything--is now entering into this financial bottleneck. This has indeed raised quite a few problems and has resulted in us making an inventory in a nonpublic arms conference.

[Question] Where can a solution be found? Could it be found in a reshuffle of your budget or do you anticipate potential outside help, a sort of budget increase?

[Answer] I think we must first take stock. We have to find out whether we can organize the addition of the new weapons systems differently. This means that it may well be that we will do some extending. In this connection, it will be very, very difficult, and I believe almost out of the question, to interfere in contracts, because that would be very expensive. In second place, we will have to broaden the scope. It is not just procurement that matters, but also construction. We must modernize barracks, we must finance the fuels which grow constantly more expensive, that is to say, we must extend the framework of our finance beyond the mere debate on armaments. And in third place, finally, after the closed arms conference next week, we will ultimately have to come up with a result that is justifiable from the security policy point of view. Thus, if and when we will have proved to ourselves and to the federal cabinet that we have found a reasonable concept in the fact of our narrowed-down options, a concept that is justifiable militarily, then we will be in good shape. If after going to great trouble, we do not attain this result, then we have no choice but to tell the German taxpayer that defense, security, the safeguarding of peace through the Bundesweher, through NATO, are bound to cost more money. We then will have to state how much and act accordingly.

[Question] Mr Minister, do the weapons systems really have to be as sophisticated as they are, or would one degree less in perfection not do as well?

[Answer] I find myself in a difficult situation there. What I have to deal with now was conceived 5, 10 or 15 years ago and is being introduced now; this is now hardly susceptible to change. But for the period of the late eighties and the nineties, when I definitely will no longer be defense minister, we must indeed think anew, radically anew.

You are right, a Tornado now, all inclusive, costs about DM70 million, the Starfighter having cost a mere fourth of that. Things cannot possibly go on this way. But there is still one other thing: It is necessary for the conscripts to be able to operate these weapons systems. This means that there are quite a few interesting beginnings on which some work will yet have to be done on our part to make everything compatible, first, the financing capability; secondly, the conscripts must be able to understand and operate them; but thirdly, and this is also important, we must exploit our techological progress vis-a-vis the Warsaw Pact. We just cannot make deterrence visible and credible with bow and arrow.

CDU EXPERT OUTLINES VIEWS ON DEFENSE FINANCE GAP

DW041022 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1810 GMT 1 Mar 81

[UDO Philipp undated interview with CDU/CSU defense spokesman Peter-Kurt Wuerzbach in Bonn--recorded]

[Text] [Question] What is the cause of this [weapons finance gap], Mr Wuerzbach?

[Answer] We have to believe that the cause is that in the past several years, the defense minister withdrew hundreds of millions from this project to stop other gaps, that he failed to make up for this shortage of funds in good time and that, despite both verbal and written warnings by his experts in the Defense Ministry, he pushed the matter ahead of himself, thus allowing a wave to form in frort which now also flows over into other fields.

[Question] But parliament has experts who are charged with overseeing the minister. Has this control failed?

[Answer] These experts had to rely on the figures they received from the minister. These figures, and I quote my SPD colleague Wuertz, were doctored so that parliament cannot be saddled with any blame here. Parliament used the data provided by the minister.

[Question] Is it necessary then to change budget practices at Hardthoehe, especially when such long-term, expensive arms projects are involved?

[Answer] Really, nobody knows this better than the man who went to the Defense Ministry with experience as finance minister. If he now sees no other way out than this call for help, then I must say that nobody who is familiar with the circumstances will believe him.

[Question] What alternatives does the opposition offer for getting out of this mess?

[Answer] First of all, we need to have clear facts. What we need to have on the table is reliable, honest, undoctored figures from all sectors, not just for the Tornado but from all branches of the armed forces: the army, the navy, the air force, the infrastructure, personnel. Then the defense minister and, along with him, the chancellor would be well advised to draw the oppostion over to their side in good time and openly, to inform it properly so as to retain the operational capability and to jointly seek ways to pay the bills that will be coming in.

[Question] Suppose it turns out that defense can no longer be financed with the funds now available, would you be willing to support a tax hike?

[Answer] Let us not talk about tax hikes here. But the government is aware indeed that the opposition will not deny the government its support on any question concerning security, measured by the growth in threat--and the chancellor himself says that we have come close to being open to blackmail.

[Question] If we take a look at the individual weapons systems, we find that they become constantly more complex, sophisticated and perfect. Doesn't this offer an option for making a beginning to obtain less sophisticated weapons systems for which we can pay?

[Answer] We must consider this: Should any weapons system be constantly further perfected? Surely, there is a limit somewhere, and this will happen sometime in the case of manned aircraft as well. It is my claim, by the way, that all defense ministers and all committees have constantly posed this question to themselves, also in the case of the Tornado aircraft. To say now that this system is overly perfected cannot constitute the marvelous, ideal solution. We do need this system. But it is necessary to keep pondering this thought.

FRG PRESS ASSESSES RESULTS OF CPSU CONGRESS

DW041219 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Press review]

[Text] Today's central editorial topic is the conclusion of the 26th CPSU Congress. The Duesseldorf RHEINISCHE POST writes in this context:

The party congress of the Soviet communists had already had its headlines a week ago when Brezhnev surprised the world with some remarkable proposals concerning military detente and also with far milder replies to the harsh charges from Washington than the propaganda prior to the congress allowed people to anticipate. What subsequently followed was the routine boredom which has almost become typical of communist party conventions.

Essen's NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG takes a different approach: After all, the grandfathers of revolution soberly struck a balance and indicated consequences: a farewell to Khrushchev's bragging proclamation of outrunning the United States, more realism in economic forecasts, less ideology for the benefit of greater effectiveness and, above all, the postponement until doomsday of the ultimate goal of the Marxist doctrine of history--achievement of communism before the end of this millenium. This is an admission of having to put the worries of the drab monotony of everyday life above the dreams of Red paradise. The old men in the Kremlin, at any rate, are acting cautiously, never losing sight of their interests. This makes it easier for the West to talk with them properly about the future of the world, which soon will know more hotbeds of crisis than projects of cooperation.

The editorial of FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU reads in part: The barely 10 days which the 26th CPSU Congress lasted did not shake the world. It was hard to discover in the abundance of stereotyped utterances even a hint of what would deserve to be called historic. The aged administrators of Lenin's revolutionary legacy lost their ideological wind long before this routine congress. They hardly have anything new to offer, barring empty phrases and the use of their power, concerning the pressing issues of the present. The confirmation of the overage but unchanged 14-member Politburo headed by General Secretary Leonid Brezhnev indicates that stagnation is intended to be the solution for the next several years.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG makes the following comment: On the surface the confirmation of the complete Soviet leadership team in their offices, without the beginnings of rejuvenation, has some positive aspects but offers a highly negative outlook on a long-term basis. The rulers in the Kremlin are known in the West, as is their policy of the calculated risk. We are somewhat safe against unpleasant surprises, which has its advantages. On the other hand, the policy of Brezhnev and a senile team is so static that the readiness for changes necessary in the East bloc for further peaceful development cannot be expected of them. This is a dangerous disadvantage.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG writes: Having just been reelected general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, Leonid Brezhnev rode the wave of acclamation and capped it with an appeal: What is needed is the soaring of ideas. Brezhnev's demand came too late for the 26th party congress. Not for one minute did the danger exist that any of the speakers might make a mental liftoff from earth. On the contrary, the CPSU, which views itself as the vanguard of the communist formation of the world, almost fearfully endeavors to prevent any digression from its policy or from its leaders. The upshot when it comes to the party is: Continuity and persistence.

The editorial of the daily DIE WELT says: You could call it continuity, yet at the same time it is probably an expression of anxiety over the future as well. Everything is to remain as it is; and yet, it was especially this congress which brought to light the fact that actually nothing can remain as it is. Even the huge Soviet empire cannot dodge elementary changes. Granted, taking refuge in the old men is in keeping with the thinking in terms of security by the Moscow party apparatus. Yet at the same time it is expressive of a profound loss for answers in view of the unsolved economic and ideological problems which the Soviet empire is facing.

The Mainz ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG sums up its opinion as follows: Leonid Brezhnev has a firm grip on power. His reelection as the general secretary of the CPSU at the 26th party congress was never in doubt. The internal leadership arrangements in the Kremlin are much more balanced and continuous than people in the West would think. Just as the personnel decisions are constant, the policy of the Soviets is predictable.

The basic outlines of foreign policy as defined by Brezhnev will remain valid in the coming years and even beyond the Brezhnev era. It would be wishful thinking to believe that economic difficulties would entail political changes or that the grievances denounced at the party congress would perhaps be blamed on the leadership.

SCHWARZWAELDER BOTE notes: This party congress did not decide anything either programatically or politically, nor did it set any personnel policy courses. All it did was simply to take place, just as the ritual dictates. What might appear at first glance to be indicative of continuity, in truth is the expression of a high degree of sterility. What is meant primarily is the unchanged return of the old top leadership under Leonid Brezhnev which has been confirmed without exception for another 5 years. From now on the question will be raised time and again everywhere as to how long the Brezhnev era will last and what will come thereafter. This uncertainty makes Soviet policy less predictable than would be desirable.

Next follows a quotation from the Muenster WESTFAELISHCE NACHRICHTEN: Party congresses are intended to set signposts, also in the Soviet Union; they are supposed to set the sights on new objectives for the years to follow. It is justified to doubt that the 26th CPSU congress, which was concluded yesterday, lived up to this requirement. For a week the world had a chance to observe how helplessly the age-stiffened leadership team in the Kremlin, which has been reelected without exception, reacts to the challenges which the Soviet Union is facing in the eighties. This party congress was marked quite strikingly by the characteristics of transition, without showing what will come thereafter.

The editorial then continues: What remains the key foreign policy problem is the relationship with the United States. Quite obviously the shadow of an immenent new cold war hung over the Kremlin Palace. The Soviet Union, too, cannot be interested in a cold war because it would cause the arms burdens to soar to immeasurable dimensions. Apparently aging Brezhnev does shrink back from adventurous experiments; hence his offer of talks to the new strong man in the White House. But he would not be Brezhnev if he had not built the well-known traps and tripwires into this offer, with the help of which he seeks to prevent the West from catching up with the Soviet arms lead, says WESTFAELISCHE NACHRICHTEN.

BERLINER MORGENPOST also discusses Moscow's foreign policy positions when it writes: That the ruling team of old men remains unchanged is intended to emphasize unanimity and continuity of policy. This also applies to the outside world. This means that the Soviets would not dream of leaving their position in Afghanistan. It further means that the threat against Poland remains. Brezhnev said that Moscow and its allies are prepared to grant the dreaded fraternal assistance. This means, finally, that the partition strategy against the West remains on the agenda. Well-sounding proposals and long-lasting negotiations are intended to prevent NATO from answering the change in the military balance caused by Moscow with counterarmament.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE writes: The whole bundle of Brezhnev's proposals deserves to be held up to the light for a long time and examined minutely. It conveys the impression of a program of contrast: the offer to give U.S.-Soviet bilateralism priority again, on the one hand, and the special luring of the Europeans and the inclination to internationalize some conflicts, for instance in the Near and Middle East, on the other. Brezhnev's arms control catalogue, too, is primarily a Soviet list of wishes. The individual suggestions, ranging from a moratorium for medium-range weapons to the resumption of the SALT negotiations, are first of all of more significance for the atmosphere. They do not contain any substantial concession. But it is not the character of the Soviet Union to make advance concessions. A potential readiness to make concessions will become visible on Moscow's part only in tenacious negotiations.

GALLEY INTERVIEWED ON GULF, AFRICA POLICY

LD041611 London AL-MAJALLAH in Arabic 28 Feb-6 Mar 81 pp 15, 16

[Interview granted by French Defense Minister Robert Galley to AL-MAJALLAH correspondent in Paris--date not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] Do you believe that the current war between Iraq and Iran will have an immediate military effect on the situation in the Gulf region in general and on oil supplies to the West in particular?

[Answer] We would be grossly mistaken if we believed that one day the war between Iraq and Iran might not have immediate military effects on the situation in the Gulf. For its part, France did not hesitate to send a naval force especially equipped to combat sea mines following the outbreak of the military conflict between the two countries. France's sending of this force was motivated by its determination to preserve by all means freedom of shipping in the Gulf and also the safety of oil shipments passing through it. However, reason should prompt us to consider that the danger of oil supplies to the West being cut off seems less likely today. It is in nobody's interest that shipping on that maritime route should be exposed to any kind of danger. Moreover, the safety of shipping in the Gulf does not only concern the question of oil shipments to the West but also directly concerns the growth of the countries of the entire area.

[Question] If the Gulf region is exposed to a real danger, do you believe that France will find itself compelled to take immediate military action in that area?

[Answer] France is watching with great interest what is happening in that part of the world. It is now exerting and will always exert maximum efforts so that peace will be restored to the Gulf region but the peace that we all desire cannot be achieved solely through our will and desire. The disputes between certain countries on the one hand and the conflicts of various natures on the other continuously help to expand unstable and explosive spots. Such spots, when aggravated, have grave consequences not only for the future of the peoples but also for raw material supplies and energy. Therefore, France cannot stand idly by or behave merely like a spectator or observer of what is happening but adheres to its full right to move at the appropriate moment to any spot where world peace is endangered or where its vital interests are endangered.

[Question] What is France's military strength at present in relation to the military strength of the two superpowers?

[Answer] As you know, France has no expansionist intentions in any part of the world. It is not one of our objectives to compete with the two superpowers or with either of them, either with regard to destructive capability or the stockpiling of arms. Our defense means basically consist of the strategic nuclear force, conventional armies and special forces for fighting outside France. All these military forces have been primarily established to preserve the safety of our national soil and to repel any aggression of which we might become the target. They also are designed to protect our interests wherever such interests might be endangered. And, finally, they are designed to be able to shoulder our responsibilities and to fulfill our obligations in Europe and in any part of the world. Here, I would like to point, in particular, to the commitments we have undertaken to our African friends with whom we have defense agreements. The military means that I have mentioned are important and developing. Thanks to financial sacrifices by the French people and to the high technological standard that France has reached, we are continuously working to improve and develop our military capability and are making it suitable for various critical conditions that might arise in this world which is threatened with danger and in which instability is increasing daily.

[Question] Recent reports have mentioned the possibility of France carrying out a military operation in Chad to counter the Libyan military presence there. What is Mr Galley's view of such reports? Would you support a French military intervention in Africa?

[Answer] France recently sought to strengthen its military presence in Africa in response to appeals made to it by certain African countries with which we have defense agreements, particularly after these countries felt real concern because of the recent developments in Central Africa. It must be recalled that France previously had intervened militarily in that part of the world. There is no doubt that we will continue to respect our obligations to our friends if those friends face a real danger.

PCI'S PAJETTA BEWILDERED OVER MOSCOW TREATMENT

AU041603 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] Rome, 4 Mar (ANSA)--Italian Communist Party (PCI) foreign policy [words indistinct] Gian Carlo Pajetta voiced bewilderment here today about the treatment he received in Moscow at the Soviet party's twenty-sixth congress.

"Incomprehensible" was his answer when reporters pounded him upon his arrival in Rome today for an explanation of the snub he got at the congress.

Pajetta, the chief of the PCI delegation to the congress, was denied the right to address the assembly proper and had to made do with a trade-union hall outside the Kremlin's walls to state the views of the Italian party.

"I don't see what my hosts had gained by it", he said today. The veteran Italian Communist denied that the Soviet party wanted to put the largest communist party in the West "on trial" by its move.

"I got the impression", he commented, "that they had the suspicion that it was we who wanted to put them on trial".

The Italian party has refused to toe the Soviet line on such crucial international problems as Afghanistan and the Polish crisis.

In his arrival statement today, Pajetta stressed that events at the Moscow congress did not lead the PCI to change its foreign policy opinions.

PCI'S BUFALINI ON POLAND, ALLEGED CPSU LETTER

LD040921 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 15 Feb 81 pp 1, 19

[Enzo Roggi interview with PCI Directorate member Paolo Bufalini: "Bufalini Talks to Us About CPSU Letter on Poland"]

[Text] Rome--The press has given broad coverage to the publication by the weekly PANORAMA of a document attributed to the CPSU Central Committee in reply to the PCI in connection with the Polish situation. We decided to ask Paolo Bufalini about it to clarify the matter of the document itself and the significance and political substance of the dialogue that has opened up between the PCI and other communist parties.

[Question] So, Mr Bufalini, are we witnessing a sensational disclosure?

[Answer] The publication of the translation of a document attributed to the CPSU and addressed to the PCI Central Committee basically does not seem to me to constitute the "disclosure" which at the outset it might have seemed to a sector of the press and the readers. In fact, I myself announced on 6 December that our party Directorate had not only publicly expressed its assessments concerning the events in Poland--which at that time seemed to be experiencing a worrying and crucial situation--but had also communicated these assessments and stances directly to the communist parties of the socialist countries concerned.

[Question] What form did this communication of our assessments and positions take?

[Answer] Previously, in the latter part of November, the PCI Directorate had made an examination of the Polish situation at a meeting which ended with the drafting and approval of a note designed to serve the purpose of informing and orienting discussion with the party on the international situation and the Polish question. It was also decided to communicate that note to the Warsaw Pact communist parties. And indeed we carried this out over the next few days in various ways and had exchanges of opinion and discussions with those parties which also produced some useful mutual elucidations, though it had to be acknowledged that in general some major differences and divergences remained.

[Question] Does this mean that there was in fact a written reply from the CPSU to that note?

[Answer] We have already said and repeated that the communication of respective stances, the exchanges of opinion and the discussion of them took place in various ways and that it was jointly considered opportune that they remain confidential. As far as we are concerned, we have rigorously observed this confidentiality.

[Question] This method could be criticized as "secret diplomacy."

[Answer] It would be an unfounded criticism. First, it must be borne in mind that the political substance of the stances and divergences is well known, because it has always been made public. And I stress again that the PCI Secretariat, in its 9 December communique, announced that the PCI had carried out official demarches with respect to the communist parties concerned to make its positions known. I would also point out that my report on the Polish situation to the 18 December Central Committee meeting stated as follows: "On the basis of these assessments, the PCI Directorate has formulated with the regional secretaries a stance on the events in Poland to be made the subject of debate throughout the party and has also carried out demarches with respect to the other communist parties concerned to inform them of this stance and to confirm that it would consider any military intervention unacceptable."

[Question] The verdict on our conduct expressed in the Soviet document is very harsh: It mentions "interference" in Polish domestic affairs.

[Answer] The assertion that we very persistently issued recommendations and advice that could only be interpreted as "interference" seems to me frankly incomprehensible. Precisely the opposite is true: We acted to avert the danger of any kind of interference taking place.

Basically, we have clearly expressed our stance in three points: First, in making an objective assessment of the Polish situation it is necessary to proceed from the observation that a very broad sector of the working class no longer identified with the trade union or the party; that the party's and the government's leadership work had been challenged with forms of mass open struggle; and that new trade union bodies considered more effective and more truly representative of broad masses of workers had been formed. And that all this had revealed a very profound economic, social and political crisis and at the same time created a new situation. In view of this situation we believed that the present Polish party leaders were right to express the intention to take the new situation into account, to observe the agreements reached between the government and the workers' struggle movement and to establish positive relations with the new trade unions. We also acknowledged the great difficulty of pursuing a regeneration process in unsettled circumstances.

[Question] What is the second point?

[Answer] We pointed out, on the basis of Italian experience--but without lecturing anyone--that the Italian Communists have always maintained and still maintain that the working class' national leading role manifests itself, even in capitalist societies (and all the more so in a socialist society), through its capacity to regard and recognize as its own the general problems of the nation and of its economic development. This is why we considered the effort to assert the principle of the workers' share of responsibility and involvement in the new Polish situation fully justified. The problems of economic reform, we pointed out--still on the basis of our own experience--demand from all sectors of society commitment, hard work, the desire to produce more and better and the ability to take into account economic compatibilities, and cannot exclude the indispensable sacrifices demanded by the general interest and the requirements of progress.

[Question] Were there any dangers of a radical destabilization of a socialist society, and if so how should they have been tackled?

[Answer] This was the kind of issue broached in the third point in our stance. We drew our party's attention to the fact that in the development of a thorough and unsettled regeneration movement--though full of positive potentials and guided by the just line expressed in the formula of "regeneration without anarchy"--it is inevitable that extremist thrusts and infiltrations by hostile forces will occur; but that these can be combated and surmounted only through a task of regeneration that will make it possible to isolate and therefore defeat the hostile forces. It seems to us truly extraordinary that all this can be portrayed as interference or as destructive criticism when, on the contrary, they are considerations that emphasize the working class' necessary sense of national responsibility--let alone as "an expression of solidarity with the forces that have unleashed a full-scale offensive against socialism in Poland."

[Question] In any case, did the Polish Communists themselves not adopt the line of regeneration and of restoring society's confidence?

[Answer] Exactly. The fact is that the Polish comrades themselves formulated and adopted the regeneration line and have been implementing it in what the information and data available to us show to have been a substantial manner; and it seemed to us (though obviously we cannot be well acquainted with such a complex situation at long distance; and it is not up to us to issue verdicts on specific decisions) that hitherto a general approach has been presented which we have esteemed.

[Question] Are there at present any signs of dangers or threats to a positive evolution of the Polish crisis?

[Answer] We considered and still consider the difficulties and causes for concern substantial, though now, following the decisions taken by the latest plenum and by Parliament, it seems that the latest phase of worrying tension is being superseded by a more positive climate. Of course, there have been on the one hand some forms of conservative resistance and, on the other, some extremist thrusts and threats to and conspiracies against the socialist character of Polish society and Poland's international position as a member of the Warsaw Pact. Bearing in mind international relations and European balances, these must be isolated and conquered in the interests of detente and peace for the sake of a future elimination of the blocs and for the defense of socialism.

Be that as it may, we still consider fundamental and we still stand firm on the principle, which we have clearly expressed, that it is up to the Polish working class, people and Communists to tackle and resolve, in full independence, the difficult problems confronting them.

We have therefore always confirmed that our party would consider any solution based on the use of force dangerous and any form of foreign intervention, whose consequences would be disastrous, inadmissible.

[Question] How does the PCI feel about the possible evolution of the Polish situation?

[Answer] Despite the thrusts, attacks and conspiracies which I mentioned, we believe that the Polish party--bearing in mind also the sense of responsibility and political maturity which, on the whole, have prevailed in the conduct of the other major protagonists, including the new trade union and the Catholic Church--can succeed in performing its duties. Nor must one ignore the economic aid given by the USSR and other socialist countries, and even Western countries.

We express the hope and wish that not only the working class, but all the working classes of the countryside and the cities, all the socialist, democratic, progressive and patriotic forces of Poland will commit themselves--as outlined by the Polish United Workers Party and under the Polish Government's leadership--to the task of regenerating, defending and developing socialist society, with the necessary steadfastness, caution and moderation, so that any threat of tragic and dangerous outcomes is dispelled and the results already achieved along the difficult path of the democratic regeneration of socialism are strengthened.

PCI'S NAPOLITANO COMMENTS ON EUROCOMMUNISM

LD031846 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1810 GMT 3 Mar 81

[Text] Rijeka, 3 March (TANJUG)--In an interview to the review "PANORAMA", published in Italian in Rijeka, Yugoslav Constituent Republic of Croatia, member of the Italian Communist Party Directorate Giorgio Napolitano rejects the claim that Eurocommunism is in a crisis.

Eurocommunism is a combination of strategic orientations which are by no means in a crisis, Napolitano says.

Napolitano says that modern Europe should play an active and independent role between the East and the West. He stresses that communists together with socialists and social democrats of Western Europe can significantly contribute to easing international tensions.

Referring to Eurocommunism's obligation to provide answers to crises in Western Europe's capitalist development, Napolitano emphasizes that the European Community should provide a framework for a process of integration in keeping with the interests of the people and not the interests of monopolist groups.

Napolitano expresses the opinion that Eurocommunism strives to base socialist transformation on the development of democratic traditions and liberties which are characteristic of Western Europe and which are an integral part of the history of the Workers' movement in Europe.

Napolitano says that the high level of cooperation between Italian and Yugoslav communists is a result of the two parties' similar stands on the international situation and problems of the workers' movement, their mutual understanding, spirit of independence and rejection of dogmatism and prescribed models and patterns.

PRIME MINISTER CALVO-SOTELO REJECTS COALITION OFFER

LD042234 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo met with the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] secretary general, Felipe Gonzalez, this evening at Moncloa Palace. Pedro Fernandez Cespedes interviewed Gonzalez on the 90-minute meeting:

[Begin recording] [Question] Did the prime minister completely reject your repeated offer of a coalition government?

[Answer] Yes, I have to be absolutely clear. The prime minister thinks that there is a constituted government, a government constituted in accordance with the constitutional rules, and he is thinking of maintaining that government. Consequently, he is not considering a coalition government.

Of course, we maintain our position. We do not want to make a bitter debate out of this but merely defend what we consider to be a correct position, in the same way that the government is going to defend what it considers the correct position, which is that there can be no coalition.

As the position was clear on both sides, we did not, therefore, particularly devote time during the meeting to that subject. Afterward, we made an analysis of the situation, of the situation which is directly related, and on which I am going to be absolutely discreet, to 23 and 24 February and of the general situation in Spain, including an analysis of the basic problems such as autonomies, public security and terrorism, and some of the larger subjects such as economic policy, industrial restructuring and energy policy.

[Question] Mr Gonzalez, by way of those subjects, did you try to find an intermediate course which would not be a coalition government, but would mean, specifically, support in parliament from the PSOE?

[Answer] Well, the attitude of the prime minister, who did not refer at all to parliamentary activity in particular, is an attitude of dialogue on those subjects. Naturally, we are open to a dialogue which could result in a solution of those problems which are fundamental, namely, and I repeat, autonomies, public security and the fight against terrorism; although, it is clear that our position in this sense has always been a very clear position, and the fundamental elements, I repeat, the subjects of public security and terrorism, are handled by the executive power. [end recording]

Without violating the discretion which he promised at the beginning of the dialogue on the events of 23 and 24 February, Felipe Gonzalez was somewhat more specific on this point:

[Begin recording] I have the impression from our discussion that the information which the public has is quite extensive at the moment; that is, there are few areas which are not known to the public and which are specifically known to the country's highest political leaders. I believe that the public has an extraordinary instinct and extraordinary commonsense, and thus when the public is concerned, there is a reason for its concern. [end recording]

PCE'S CARRILLO ON COUP, NEED FOR NEW GOVERNMENT

LD041625 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 1 Mar 81 pp 1, 16

[Augusto Pancaldi dispatch: "Carrillo: Those 17 Hours in the Putschists' Hands"]

[Excerpts] Madrid--Some 1.5 million people assembled in the streets of Madrid and several million in avenues, streets and boulevards throughout Spain in support of freedom, democracy and the constitution. EL PAIS' headline calls it "the greatest rally in Spain's history" and PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo told us: "It was a demonstration of the Spanish people's united will against the coup."

Carrillo believes that although it is true that the coup failed," the situation remains very dangerous. Why? Because the political change of the past years has not changed the state apparatus and the leftwing forces have not been sufficient to get it changed. Spain has been living amid a permanent conspiracy on the part of those who did not want the democratization. Through the fault of other forces, the policy of democratic concentration did not succeed. Now unless we unite with a leftwing strategy against the bosses, the apparatus and big finance, there is no solution and 23 February can only be a dress rehearsal for something much more disastrous."

Behind everything, apart from the country's disappointment and passiveness created by the economic crisis, which has eroded the social fabric, there has been, Carrillo pointed out, a constant fascist-type campaign against the parties, parliament and the institutions. A new policy is needed to prevent yesterday's major unitary political revival from remaining an isolated event and this flame of social enthusiasm from being extinguished too soon.

"This is the central point," Carrillo said. "A new government is needed, and the Communists have been advocating it for some time, since well before the appearance of the red warning light which Felipe Gonzalez mentioned only 2 days ago and which prompted the Socialists to propose a coalition government, which we would have supported but which the Union of the Democratic Center rejected. We need a government which, albeit with the necessary prudence, will sever the roots of putschism in the army and the police force. Let us remember that Tejero was not alone. Unless such a government is formed, I repeat, Monday's coup will be repeated one day on a larger scale. The country must be given the assurance that there is a government that will fill the power vacuum which we have been proclaiming for some time. There is no other way."

PSOE SECRETARY GENERAL'S 25 FEB PRESS CONFERENCE

LD041157 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 26 Feb 81 p 7

[Text] Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez held a press conference yesterday afternoon at the conclusion of the vote of investiture, during which he stated that in a situation like the present one, in which the democratic institutions are in danger, the "only formula is a government with the greatest possible popular support." The Socialist leader stated that the decision of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] to form a "one-party government" is a political mistake, indicating weakness, "and political mistakes are paid for sooner or later." Mr Gonzalez also asserted that civilian forces connected with the previous regime were involved in Monday's attempted coup, which was planned: "It is not a matter of an incidental or isolated event."

"I do not know whether or not Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo has rejected our proposal of a coalition government," PSOE Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez said at the press conference, "but what I can add is that neither the prime minister nor any responsible member in the chamber has given a reply to the analysis which I made. No reply is being given concerning the conclusion which I drew, and this is a bad sign in principle, which I would describe as a political mistake and one of weakness. And political mistakes are always paid for sooner or later."

[Question] Mr Calvo-Sotelo has referred on several occasions to the circumstances which brought about this situation....

[Answer] I ascertained yesterday and the day before yesterday that the government knew no more than the opposition about what was happening. I believe that this is not the time for making criticisms in the bitter sense of the word, but it was a UCD government which did not even have information about what was happening. I have little further information, and I will handle it with the utmost discretion, not commenting on what others must comment on. What I can say is that our party will demand from opposition that the affair be clarified in the best possible way, so as not to implicate the armed forces and the state security forces.

[Question] Do you believe that it is possible to clarify what happened with the government which is being formed?

[Answer] Hasty judgments or judgments of intent should not be made. The fact is that what heppened here theday before yesterday is not something incidental or isolated, and from a technical viewpoint it seems to me that its execution, to use a word which will not be irksome, its execution was impeccable. Not only the people's will, which the congress represents, but also the government of the nation was kidnapped, and in light of this fact everybody must acknowledge the ungovernability represented by the UCD. How are we to extricate ourselves from this? I believe that the only formula is to attempt to involve the greatest possible number of political forces with the greatest possible popular support in the task of government, with a clearly defined area of commitments.

"If Best Response Is UCD Government, It Should Already Have Been Made"

[Question] Mr Calvo-Sotelo has just stated that the problems of the last few days can be resolved better with a UCD government than with a Socialist government, and that this is one of the reasons why he rejects your call for a coalition government.

[Answer] I respect all opinions, but I believe that history has demonstrated the contrary, and I believe that there is no better evidence than what has been happening over the last 3 years, and especially the evening before last. If the best response is a UCD government, that response should already have been made.

[Question] Calvo-Sotelo has just said that consultation will be far more important than coalition governments during the coming state. What is your opinion?

[Answer] That is very easy. If a coalition is useless, why would consultation serve to resolve these problems?

[Question] Do you believe that there are any political forces or personalities which may be involved in the failed attempted coup?

[Answer] I am convinced that there are civilian forces.

[Question] Which are connected with the previous regime?

[Answer] I am convinced that they are connected with the previous regime.

It Is Necessary To Reflect

[Question] Do you believe that this government will last until the end of 1983?

[Answer] It is not a very opportune time to make excessive predictions. I believe that it is no stronger than the previous government. And I do not believe that the previous government lasted long. There has been a new development.

[Question] Does this new development strengthen the one party UCD government formula?

[Answer] If there were any possibility of criticizing that formula for many reasons, there is now a convincing argument. I believe that it is time to reflect on the fact that sufficient progress has not been made in the democratization of the state and in the democratization and modernization of civil society, and that forces have not been joined to combat these grave problems. I believe that it is time for change and for advancing, not retreating or stopping.

[Question] How would a Socialist government tackle the state intelligence services when they seem to have failed glaringly? Should a single body or several bodies bear that responsibility?

[Answer] I believe that there has been a failure which I cannot assess from the viewpoint of intentions, because I do not have sufficient information and, without going too deeply into this issue, the least that can be demanded in a responsible state is that the intelligence services be unified and coordinated and operate exactly like a single intelligence service, even if it has several branches.

[Question] Is it not time that there was a civil body in Spain to judge these military coups when they involve harm to the civil bodies?

[Answer] I believe that civil society and the civil power must assume the highest powers of representation of the state, and that a profoundly democratic state should be achieved, with a profoundly democratic civil society, which would be above all powers and which all powers would obey. The king's role is a role which everybody acknowledges as being enormously important in the course of the crisis but which everybody regards as something very grave which he would not have had to do if there had been a sufficiently effective executive power to avert the king's direct intervention in a problem of this importance.

[Question] What are the issues on which the Socialist Party would be prepared to reach an agreement with the UCD government? Would it include among these issues that of the autonomies and that of the organization of the state?

[Answer] I believe that this issue cannot be included, bearing in mind the stance of Calvo-Sotelo, who has told us absolutely nothing and answered none of our questions with respect to the reorganization of the state's powers on an autonomous basis. We have frequently reaffirmed our readiness to discuss this issue.

[Question] How do you interpret the fact that 20 UCD deputies applauded at the conclusion of your speech?

[Answer] I interpret it as meaning that they liked it and are in agreement with my speech.

"If This Is Not a Danger Signal..."

[Question] You said from the rostrum that a red light had lit up. What is your analysis of this red light, which has now gone out?

[Answer] Initial assessments are always difficult to make. I believe that the red light is on. The UCD said in Mallorca that as soon as there was a danger signal for the institutions it would change its stance. It is clear that this danger signal has been lit. If this is not a danger signal, God knows what is....

NORWAY

FOREIGN MINISTER OPPOSED TO NATO-LINKED RDF

LD041415 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 3 Mar 81 p 17

[Rune Jorgensen dispatch: "Norway Opposed to Expansion of NATO Area"]

[Text] Copenhagen, 2 Mar--"Norway has always been consistent in its opposition to any possible expansion of the NATO area, and we will continue to be so. If the British and the Americans want to set up a force in the Persian Gulf, that is a matter between the two countries. I am sure that the Germans at any rate would not want to participate in a multinational force there, Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund told ARBEIDERNES PRESSEKONTOR [labor press office].

It became known that there were plans for a standing intervention force in the Persian Gulf, with ships and naval forces from the United States, Britain, France and West Germany, after Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher met President Ronald Reagan last weekend.

"In the past, Norway has been opposed to the deployment of NATO forces outside the organization's territory. It is in principle risky that there are now draft plans in existence.

"This is basically a hypothetical question. Norway has always been consistent in its opposition to an expansion of the NATO area. However, we do not want to interfere in what individual countries in the alliance wish to do," Knut Frydenlund said.

The United States already has two aircraft carriers in the area in question today, and it is intended that the force in the Persian Gulf and in the Indian Ocean should be based on the forces which are already there. The United States has also entered into a number of agreements with countries in the area on base facilities and the contingency stockpiling of equipment.

The planned force will not be under NATO command, reports indicate. However, Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund did not wish to say whether the demarche was a challenge to NATO. Nor did he wish to make any statement on whether the demarches which have come from Reagan's staff could create difficulties for cooperation within NATO.

Foreign Ministry Under Secretary Johan Jorgen Holst has also announced that Norway has received no indications from the United States on the desirablity of economic or other support for nations in Southeast Asia. It is unlikely that Norway would have acceded to such a request.

MINISTER ON SCANDINAVIAN NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

LD031511 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 28 Feb 81 p 36

[Text] "The demand that a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries should include the Kola Peninsula is both unrealistic and inadequate," Minister Without Portfolio Jens Evensen said in a speech yesterday. This was because in the present strategic situation the Kola Peninsula is an essential part of the balance of power between the two superpowers, and a unilateral reduction in this area seems unrealistic. Evensen thought it natural that the work for a Nordic nuclear-free zone should be seen in a broader European context.

It was the "no to nuclear arms" movement which arranged yesterday's Oslo meeting, at which Evensen was the main speaker. In his speech the minister stressed that the Nordic countries today are unfortunately not a nuclear-free zone, at least not in the sense in which the term is used in the United Nations, in foreign policy and legal contexts, as the UN disarmament session makes clear.

He stressed that the concept of the nuclear-free zone is based on four main cornerstones:

1. A legal commitment neither to produce nor to deploy nuclear arms on one's own territory;

2. Strict respect for the status of the nuclear-free zone and renunciation of the use or threat of use of nuclear arms against states in the zone;

3. International control apparatus to ensure that both the members of a nuclear-free zone and the nuclear powers adhere to the agreements and the guarantees they have entered into;

4. Nuclear-free zones as a central factor in the work for detente and disarmament.

In the light of the nuclear threat in today's world, Evensen asked: "What can Norway and the Nordic countries do to stop this landslide?"

"We must no longer put up with the elite philosophy and the domineering ambition which the superpowers exhibit. The nuclear threat affects us all. The whole world is balancing on the brink of self-destruction, not only the superpowers," Minister Evensen pointed out.

"Developments since World War II, especially those in the last decade, have meant that Norway and the Nordic countries have come to occupy a particularly exposed strategic position. A significant armed conflict between the two superpowers would inevitably lead to a nuclear war. To believe that in such a situation nuclear arms exist in order not be used is an illusion. Norway would inevitably be one of the first countries to be drawn into such a conflict. No alliance in the world could prevent this," Evensen said.

"The work for nuclear-free zones is not intended to take Norway out of NATO or to lay Norway alone open to attack or invasion. Work to establish nuclear-free zones is in perfect agreement with the NATO pact, in which the signatories commit themselves 'by peaceful means...and the reciprocal relations between peoples, to refrain from the threat or use of force,'" Evensen said.

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES TRIDENT MISSILES ISSUE

LD041247 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 4 Mar 81 p 36

[James Wightman report: "Trident 5,000m Pounds 'Justified']

[Text] Amid the suspicion that Labour is planning to make nuclear disarmament a big issue at the next general election, the government set out yesterday to justify its decision last year to replace the ageing Polaris deterrent with a system of Trident missiles launched from submarines.

Mr Nott, recently-appointed defence secretary, said in opening the debate that the system's estimated cost of 5,000 million pounds was justified overwhelmingly in terms of cost effectiveness.

"If we are not prepared to afford Trident we had better get out of the business altogether," he said.

The estimated cost was a huge investment but, spread over 15 years, it would average at some three per cent of the total defence budget.

But for Labour, Mr Brynmor John, shadow defence secretary, said his party gave a pledge to cancel the Trident programme. The country could not afford Trident and its cost would distort the whole of the rest of the defence effort.

Some Conversative concern about the massive cost involved surfaced during the debate, although on balance Tory support was in a vast majority.

One Tory sceptic, Mr Bruce-Gardyne, Knutsford, said it was conceivable that the situation might change as a result of changes in the cost of Trident or from other pressures on rsources, and asked: "At what stage would it be possible for us to revise this decision without incurring very substantial costs thereby?"

There were cheers from the Conservative benches when Mr Nott replied: "The decision has already been taken. It is a decision of government, and I see no reason to speculate about the opportunities of making a change of course."

He also assured MPs that an overwhelming proportion of the 5,000 million pounds for Trident would be spent in this country.

The submarines would be built in British yards at Barrow, and the warheads would be made here. Only the missile system would be bought in the United States, representing 10 to 15 per cent of the total cost.

In the first speech by a Social Democrat since Monday's break with the Labour Party, Dr David Owen criticised the decision to go ahead with Trident now but supported Britain's retention of Polaris or some other less costly nuclear option.

Dr Owen was almost immediately challenged, however, by Dr Gavin Strang, Labour MP for Edinburgh East, who argued that the Social Democrats had a tenuous, if not fraudulent, right to speak as they had not resigned to fight by-elections.

Dr Owen said it was wrong to ask MPs to take a decision now on Trident, suspecting that the project was being undertaken at this time out of desire by the prime minister to project herself as the "iron maiden."

"I studied this issue extremely carefully in 1978 and 1979 and came then, even against a much better economic climate, to the conclusion that the country was not able to afford the expenditure on the Trident missile system at that particular moment."

By contrast, Polaris was a marginal but nevertheless important contribution to NATO, even if its life could not be extended. Other nuclear options than Trident were available.

TERRORISTS ASSASSINATE LABOR ATTACHE IN PARIS

TA041411 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] The Turkish labor attache in Paris, Resat Morali, was martyred in an armed assault against him in Paris today. A religious official, Tecelli Ari, was seriously wounded in the same incident.

A new attack was added today to the ones aimed against our diplomats abroad. Our correspondent in Paris reports that the incident occurred as follows: Resat Morali and Tecelli Ari were leaving the labor counselor's office on (Bonmarche) Boulevard at about 1500 Turkish time today when two or three terrorists shot them. Resat Morali died on the spot. Tecelli Ari was seriously wounded and taken to a hospital.

'Armenian Attack' Condemned

TA041417 Ankara ANATOLIA in French 1405 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] Ankara, 4 March (AA)--Turkish authorities have condemned the Armenian attack perpetrated against two Turkish diplomats in Paris on Wednesday. The Turkish labor attache, Mr Resat Morali, was killed in the attack while Mr Tecelli Ari, his aide, was seriously wounded. Mr Hikmet Buyuklimanli, the under secretary of state with the Labor Ministry, condemned the attack and expressed his regrets over the incident.

French Laxity Deplored

TA041522 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1515 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] Ankara, 4 Mar (AA)--Minister of Tourism and Information Ilhan Evliyaoglu said the assassination of Turkish labor attache Resat Morali in Paris today clearly demonstrated the existence of a clandestine Armenian terrorist organization.

Commenting on the mortal attack on the attache, which also injured man of religion Ali Tecelli Ari, Evliyaoglu deplored the failure of the French Government to take precautions against such attacks on Turkish diplomats. He believed it was time the French Government took "effective measures" against such attacks in its territory which had become so frequent recently.

More on Assassinations

TA041711 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] The minister of state, acting foreign minister and government spokesman, Ilhan Oztirak, has said the following on the assault in Paris: Up to now, 17 of our ambassadors and embassy officials stationed abroad have been killed and many have been wounded as a result of base attacks. The fact that the perpetrators of these inhuman murders, this international terrorism, cannot usually be seized is one of the major reasons why these murderers fearlessly continue to commit crimes. The obligation of all countries to take serious and effective measures to ensure the security of the representatives of foreign countries whose security of life and property has been entrusted to them can not be delayed even for a day. The most effective measure to prevent these crimes is to induce in these murderers the fear that they will definitely be captured and will have to account for their deeds.

Unfortunately, none of the murderers of Turkish diplomats in many countries and especially in France have been captured. There is no doubt that if the concerned countries attach importance to the issue and if they take the necessary measures, these treacherous attacks can be prevented. We insistently demand from the French Government that the culprits of the recent deplorable incident be captured and brought to trial.

Demarche to French Ambassador

TA042122 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2100 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] Minister of State and acting Foreign Minister Ilhan Oztrak has invited the French ambassador in Ankara to the Foreign Ministry and has expressed the grief of the Turkish Government over the attack which resulted in the martyrdom of the Turkish labor attache in Paris, Resat Morali, and the wounding of religious official Tecelli Ari. According to a statement issued by the Foreign Minister Information Directorate General, during the meeting Oztrak said that the fact that attacks against Turkish diplomats in France has been continuing since 1975 is very sad. Noting that the fact that the perpetrators of these attacks have not yet been captured is encouraging the assailants. Oztrak said that the culprits of the recent attack should be apprehended as soon as possible and should be brought to trial. He called on the French security officials to take more serious and effective measures against such attacks.

Turkey will return to democracy, Demirel said, but she should not lose her military and economic strength in the meantime. It would be in the interest both of Europe and Turkey for her to maintain her function and mission in Europe, he added.

MILLIYET URGES CAUTION AS U.S.-USSR SPLIT WIDENS

NC041152 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 2 Mar 81 p 1

[Editorial: "The World and Turkey"]

[Excerpt] In reacting to external world events, the people consider obvious results, not causes. For instance, the inflation which the high oil prices have brought about as well as the current economic stagnation cannot be attributed to the ideological or strategic behavior of the Soviet Union. But the newly-elected Reagan administration in the United States has been arguing that the main source of all outstanding issues is the Soviet-U.S. struggle. Reagan has won the election by promising military supremacy to the American people who were bored by economic instability.

As a result, the Western alliance agenda is loaded with new disputes. The United States is expecting a more disciplined alliance whose borders should embrace the Persian Gulf. This expectation stems from the desire to ensure the safety of the oilfields.

But the fundamental approach, that is, the attempt to interpret every issue as being related to the Soviet-U.S. struggle, is giving rise to erroneous results. The United States, which views the Middle East and the Palestinian issue from the "Camp David accord" angle, is now moving again toward the point of being Israel's sole support. The Arab-Israeli dispute and the Palestine issue, which are as important to the royalists, republicans and socialst regimes in the Middle East as the Soviet-U.S. disputes, are saturated with days of tension. Particularly, if a "rapid deployment" type of military force as dreamed by the United States is formed in the region aimed at protecting Israel's interests, even pro-Western regimes like that of Saudi Arabia will find themselves in a difficult position as far as their peoples are concerned.

Similar issues are on the agenda of the Western alliance. Eventually, one could say that the United States is no longer the undisputed boss of NATO it was in the 1950's. Moreover, the health of Western European economies depends on trade with the Middle East and on conciliatory policies toward the Soviet Union. So, whether Reagan likes it or not, the United States' approach to certain issues cannot be accepted by the European members of the Western alliance.

Turkey will certainly act cautiously during this transitional, toughening period. If countries like Turkey wish to refrain from becoming the focus of a conflict between the superpowers during such periods, they have to resolve their differences with their neighbors, because conflicts between superpowers usually reflect on disputes between smaller countries which may appear insignificant but which may turn them into arenas of conventional conflicts.

Turkey must therefore maintain good, peaceful relations with its neighbors, and it must intensify its good will efforts toward settlement of the Iranian-Iraqi conflict. We must not expect everything from the government. The press and broadcasting media must refrain during this period from provocative broadcasts against any of Turkey's neighbors.

PLO'S QADDUMI ARRIVES TO DISCUSS MIDDLE EAST

AU051229 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 5 Mar 81

[Text] Faruq Qaddumi, the PLO official in charge of foreign policy affairs, arrived today for a brief visit in Vienna. Qaddumi will discuss the Middle East conflict with Chancellor Kreisky and Foreign Minister Pahr. The talks are expected to center on the question of whether the PLO is ready to cancel that passage of its program which calls for the annihilation of the State of Israel. Qaddumi, who is on a tour through several European countries, was invited by Foreign Minister Pahr.

Report on Meeting with Kreisky

AU051900 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1700 GMT 5 Mar 81

[Text] Faruq Qaddumi, unofficial PLO foreign minister, met with Chancellor Kreisky in Vienna today. It had been reported from the federal chancellery before the meeting that in view of certain statements made in PLO quarters, Kreisky would question Qaddumi concerning elimination of that passage from the PLO charter which refers to the destruction of Israel as a declared aim of the PLO. After the almost 2-hour meeting, it was, contrary to general expectations, not the federal chancellor and his guest, but only PLO representative Qaddumi who faced waiting journalists. Edgar Sterbenz reports:

[Begin recording] A change in the PLO's attitude toward Israel and a revision of the PLO's charter was not discussed, Qaddumi stated tersely and dryly. The general Middle East situation, world problems relating to the Middle East and new initiatives for solving the Middle East problem were the subjects of the talks. In this context, Qaddumi brought up the old proposal which was, however, reiterated by Soviet state-party head Brezhnev last week, to convene an international Middle East conference with Soviet participation which, according to the Kremlin, would produce a comprehensive, realistic solution to unsolved problems. This initiative, with which the Soviet Union wants to again jump on the Middle East mediation bandwagon and take a foothold in the crisis area, is being assessed as constructive and positive by the PLO which, like Moscow, rejects the Egyptian-Israeli separate peace and the Camp David peace process initiated by the former U.S. administration. [end recording]

[Begin Qaddumi recording in English] It is a positive and constructive initiative. [end recording]

[Begin Sterbenz recording] Asked about the European mediation efforts in the Middle East, for example by the European Community, which for some time has shared Chancellor Kreisky's view that the PLO is the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, the unofficial PLO foreign minister stated tightlipped and to general surprise that thus far he does not see any European Middle East initiative. [end Sterbenz recording]

[Begin Qaddumi recording in English] I have not seen any European initiative thus far. [end recording]

[Begin Sterbenz recording] Qaddumi then repeated the well-known positions of the PLO. The PLO objects to forming a PLO exile government as suggested by Egyptian President as-Sadat. It rejects the so-called Jordanian option proposed by the Israeli Labor Party, which envisages a Palestinian state on Jordanian soil. The United States is continuing its anti-PLO policy. Mutual recognition of Israel and the PLO is not yet ripe for a decision because the PLO is not willing to recognize Israeli occupation and aggression.

And finally, a solution of the Middle East problem and of the Palestinian issue seems to be only possible and promising within the framework of the United Nations.

The federal chancellors office released no statement on the Qaddumi-Kreisky meeting. [end recording]

[Vienna Domestic Television Service in German at 1830 GMT on 5 March carries the following further recorded comment by Qaddumi: "The so-called Jordanian option is completely rejected and opposed by the PLO."]

PAHR ANNOUNCES NORTH-SOUTH SUMMIT MEETING

AU051013 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 5 Mar 81 p 1

[Excerpt] The foreign ministers of 11 countries will meet in Vienna next week for the second preparatory conference for the North-South summit meeting between industrialized and developing countries. That was announced by Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr yesterday at a press conference during which he commented on the most important aspects of Austrian foreign policy. The foreign minister's meeting is to take place on 13 and 14 March at the Hofburg Conference Center. All the foreign ministers who attended the last meeting in November 1980 will again personally participate: the foreign ministers of Algeria, the FRG, France, India, Yugoslavia, Canada, Mexico, Nigeria, Austria, Sweden and Tanzania. The conference will have to settle technical questions regarding the implementation of the North-South summit meeting, especially the agenda and the selection of participants. The summit meeting itself will take place in Mexico.

FOREIGN MINISTER VIEWS FRG-U.S. RELATIONS IN NATO

[Excerpt] Bonn, 5 Mar (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher emphasized today the key function of German-U.S. cooperation for the Western alliance. Genscher said in an interview for a number of dailies that, because the Federal Government is aware of this responsibility, good relations with the United States form part of the basis of Bonn's foreign policy.

The minister emphasized that the governments in Bonn and Washington consider as a necessity a comprehensive Atlantic dialogue on the shaping of a common, determined and cohesive Western policy. Genscher continued by saying that "unfortunately, criticism of the United States, a lack of defense spirit, illusions about the security situation and the claim about allegedly contradictory European-American interests frequently exist side by side." He pointed out that the Federal Republic is making an extraordinary contribution in the Western alliance within the framework of the division of labor. For instance, Bonn is giving all-round, regular and free defense assistance to Greece, Portugal and Turkey. Bonn also has sought stabilization outside the NATO sphere, for instance through all-round economic assistance to Pakistan.

NICARAGUA'S D'ESCOTO INTERVIEWED ON EL SALVADOR

DW061149 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0605 GMT 5 Mar 81

[Correspondent Gerhardt interview with Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto Brockman in Bonn--recorded in English with German translation superimposed; date not given]

[Text] [Question] Do you believe that Foreign Minister Genscher during his Washington visit planned for next week will be able to induce the U.S. Government to change its hard stance on Nicaragua and El Salvador?

[Answer] I think that Foreign Minister Genscher understands very well what is happening in Central America, that he will exchange his ideas and opinions with the American side and that it will be helpful to Central America if he moderates the American attitude so that the Americans will better understand the nature of the struggle in Central America.

[Question] How far does Moscow's communist influence go in Nicaragua and in El Salvador?

[Answer] I think the United States, a country, by the way, which I love very much, in which I lived for many years and which I know well, is being haunted by anxieties and a sort of obsession. It must learn to comprehend that revolts happened even before the words communism or Marxism appeared in the world's dictionary. The U.S. Constitution itself in the first section formulates the inalienable right of nations to revolt against tyranny. If this were written today, some people in the United States would say that this was communism.

[Question] Are there any Cubans in Nicaragua?

[Answer] We have relations with Cuba, and there are Cubans in Nicaragua. We have 137 physicians, and some others are teachers. But there are also Costa Ricans who are teaching, as are Spaniards. We are grateful to all these people who have come to Nicaragua to help us. So far, nobody has come with the aim in mind of transforming Nicaragua after the model of their own country, with the exception of the United States. This has always been the temptation of the United States. It would like to turn us into another Puerto Rico. We will be neither another Cuba nor another Puerto Rico, nor another anything, but a first free and independent Nicaragua.

[Question] Are arms from the East bloc reaching El Salvador with Nicaraguan help?

[Answer] Why is it that the Salvadorans do not denounce us for that? They do not because they could care less about such lies.

FOREIGN MINISTER, CHANCELLOR SCHEDULE VISITS

Genscher to Warsaw, Moscow

LD042236 Hamburg DPA in German 1327 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 4 Mar (DPA)--Visits to Washington and Moscow are the major items in Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher's March schedule. He will be the first member of the Federal Government since President Ronald Reagan took office to visit the U.S. capital. His 2-day visit begins on Sunday.

At the end of the month--the precise date has not been fixed--Genscher will fly to Moscow for 3 days at the invitation of Andrey Gromyko. About a week before that, he will pay a 2-day visit to Warsaw, which has been planned for some time. Apart from East-West relations, Brezhnev's proposals are expected to be leading topics in his talks with the Soviet leadership.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE COMMENTS ON REAGAN INTERVIEW

[Editorial signed R.H.: "Reagan's Bet"]

[Text] In advance of the successes which have not yet come, Ronald Reagan can chalk one up already: His dealing with the public is so skillful, and not just smart but prudent, that it was worthwhile to listen to his latest interview at 0200 in the morning in central Europe. Therein, the West is talking in simple, clear language. German smart alecks who believed they had a reason to fear the worst are not disappointed, inasmuch as Moscow is adapting to the new tones in nuances which are being portioned out. The people who wanted to send the "dual decision" to the domestic policy shredder will perhaps be forced to realize soon that this topic will be negotiated far above the level accessible to the Germans when commonsense forces Washington and Moscow to continue the SALT talks.

But we have not reached that point yet. The United States is still sorting out its cards: Reagan insists on containment of Red expansion in Central America, and he desires a revision of the occupation of Afghanistan as a token of good will on the part of the Soviet Union. Time will soon tell whether this is utopian.

In the interview the President granted to Walter Cronkite, he made great effort not to be misunderstood when he dealt with a question which apparently has nothing to do with world politics. In reality, however, Reagan is betting his whole stake, American success at home and abroad, on one card when he almost recklessly insists on going through with an economic bludgeon method as part of conservative revolution: the tax cuts which are fabulous by European standards and which are intended to benefit the major part of the U.S. middle classes and to stimulate the entire economy.

Without hesitating, Reagan predicts that ultimately the state will thereby collect more money than before. If this fails, Reagan's Presidency henceforth is sure to earn only bad marks. Should he be right, the power of the United States will be strengthened enormously. The influence of these ideas cannot be dodged even in faraway places, particularly by those countries whose democracy is ailing from a too democratic, namely populist, spending zeal. This, having been advanced with a voice devoid of pathos and not demonstrating any particular boldness, is Ronald Reagan's great bet on America's ability to renew itself.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG ON REAGAN, 'MOSCOW'S OFFER'

DW041141 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 2 Mar 81 p 4

[Commentary signed A.: "Moscow's Double-Edged Offer"]

[Text] President Reagan's desire to be in a position to deal mainly with U.S. economic problems during the first few months of his term in office in all probability will not materialize. Moscow's offer for a Soviet-U.S. summit meeting, for the continuation of negotiations on SALT and on missile armament in Europe cannot be shelved by the Washington government.

There can be no doubt, however, that Brezhnev's gesture was meant to elicit a particularly rapid effect in West European capitals. The Russians did not fail to observe the great uneasiness in West Europe over the exceedingly rude initial statements that the Reagan administration addressed to Moscow. Every skillful Russian move, which apparently is aimed at preventing another deterioration of East-West relations, in all probability at first causes new dissension in the Atlantic alliance. Up to now, this alliance has lacked a mechanism for regulating political coordination. Discord on this prevails now as before among the nations concerned. This is why the not always successful shuttle diplomacy of ministers has to continue: Italy, France and Britain already have explained their ideas in Washington. Early in March, it will be the Federal Republic's turn.

It is evident that Reagan is not being urged to make haste by his European friends. With differing emphasis, they admonish him to go more slowly. Prime Minister Thatcher already warned that one must not allow oneself to be lulled into detente once again. Francois-Poncet, on the other hand, recognizes French ideas in Brezhnev's proposal. For the time being, Reagan is already satisfied that the Europeans want to have consultations with him. It is Reagan who wants to have consultations in both directions.

DER SPIEGEL PUBLISHES PUBLIC REACTION POLL

DW051409 [Editorial Report] Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German on 2 March 1981 carries on pages 34-36 the results of an Emnid Institute opinion poll on German reaction to President Reagan's harder political course vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, on the Polish crisis and on the fear of war.

Asked how Bonn should react to the course of the new President, some 60 out of 100 questioned were in favor of the FRG putting more distance between it and the U.S. policy, while 31 out of 100 were in favor of adapting to it. Greater distance was suggested by 77 out of 100 SPD voters, by 46 out of 100 CDU/CSU voters and by 66 out of 100 FDP voters.

DER SPIEGEL says: This result is surprising inasfar as recent reports and commentaries mentioned adaptation more often than distance. It would be wrong, however, to interpret it as the majority's support of "a neutralist or even anti-American standpoint," because it contains the opinion of those in favor of "also having a say, of taking the Germans seriously as an alliance partner" as well as those in favor of "a neutral Germany between the blocs."

Answering a question on Western superiority or equality vis-a-vis the East, 16 out of 100 questioned were in favor of "superiority vis-a-vis the East," 75 were for "a balance with the East," while 8 wanted to "accept superiority of the East bloc."

Asked about the current situation, 10 out of 100 questioned believed that the West was stronger than the East, 52 believed the East was stronger than the West, while 37 believed that the East and West were equally strong.

Another question in the opinion poll asked about the likelihood of a third world war. In December 1979, after the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan, 80 percent of those questioned believed that a "world war is unlikely," 50 percent believed "world war is possible," while 10 percent believed that a "world war is likely." After the Polish crisis in 1980, however, 62 percent thought "world war was possible," while 3 percent thought "world war was likely" to take place.

Regarding the situation in Poland and the possibility of a Soviet invasion, 8 out of 100 questioned said it is "rather certain" that "the Russians would march in," 39 said it is "likely," 45 said it is "unlikely," while 8 said it is "as good as impossible."

PAPER EXAMINES NEUTRON WEAPON AS DETERRENT

[Adelbert Weinstein editorial: "Basically New Event"]

[Text] A philosopher coined the handy formula. Karl Jaspers called the atomic bomb a basically new event, "because it leads mankind to the possibility of total destruction through itself." Therefore, security policy in a nuclear age cannot move on the crutches of inherited strategic doctrines. It must be oriented by the substance of an unusual destructive weapon. The nuclear element is good for military use only indirectly, as an instrument of threat. Nuclear strategy is deterrence. Its objective is the preservation of the state of nonwar.

To those who recognize this strategic order, the neutron bomb is not a provocative term and NATO's nuclear counterarmament is not a polemic slogan. Radiation weapons and Pershing II missiles as well as cruise missiles can be sensibly included in a complex security system. Modern conventional armed forces form its basis.

Thus, counterarmament must be seen as a necessary completion of Atlantic defense. The so-called strategy of "flexible response" matters to NATO as before. The Atlantic alliance will counter an attack with the means necessary for bringing a specific situation under control. Escalation and deescalation, the increase and decrease of the effect of weapons are characteristics of this strategy. The weak spot in our defense is that the other side determines the timing of a military action, because the West will never be the aggressor. If we had enough classical divisions, an effective flexible response to an attack would be possible. The Soviet armies, too, cannot launch a surprise attack. The hours of final preparations could be used by strong NATO units for an effective counterstrike. But such units are not present in sufficient quantity. The first stage of our strategy of deterrence is ineffective.

Therefore, other forces must deter the possible enemy from crossing the borders, that is, the Pershing and cruise missiles. However, they must not be put into action as an isolated task force. They must act as nuclear spearheads of conventional troops. Such a combination of deterrent elements has a dual advantage. On the one hand, the possibility for NATO to respond lightning quick with its "counterarming weapons" makes up for the disadvantage which lies in the fact that the West has to wait for an attack by the East and is unable to forestall it. On the other hand, the extensive range of action of the Pershing and cruise missiles turns defense from forward-based positions [vorneverteidigung] into defense through advance [vorwaertsverteidigung]. This is of psychological importance for the credibility of deterrence.

This deterrent and also preventive strategy would hold another trump with the neutron weapon. The Soviet Union's numerical superiority in tanks is a means for exerting political pressure on the West in times of nonwar. But in a war, thousands of Russian combat vehicles are a means of attack by which the troops of the West are to be terrorized psychologically and destroyed militarily.

If NATO had the radiation weapon, the tank masses of the East would be rolling scrap. The backbone of the Red Army's combat plan, which is based on an operational breakthrough, would be broken if its flexible and armored elements met with a Western neutron defense. Thus, the deterrent element of the neutron weapon neutralizes the East's offensive potential.

A word should be said on the significance of conventional divisions. Nuclear power also has changed the rules of action of ground troops. Roughly speaking, the Federal Republic, Belgium and The Netherlands are an uninterrupted urban area. A war with nuclear arms would claim millions of lives here. If the Red Army were to carry its combat actions so far forward that the decisive operations were to take place in densely populated areas, the use of nuclear defense weapons by the West would be possible only at the cost of its self-destruction. It means that the allies would have lost a decisive means of deterrence.

This dilemma into which nuclear defense plunges the West is also seen by the Russians. They will want to exploit it to their advantage. Militarily, they might, therefore, aim at carrying war deep into the West's territory to attack cities and towns. The NATO divisions would only have the alternative of either taking the risk of massively destroying their own areas by their own nuclear weapons or giving up entire provinces because of their numerical inferiority.

It is, therefore, urgently necessary for the West to deploy more operational units which must be the centerpiece of the defense organization. The neutron weapon cannot serve as a substitute for Western tanks and precision weapons. It makes sense only if it is seen as "ultima ratio." Its presence is to deter every aggressive intention. It must be a risk factor for the East, not for us, an instrument deterring the mere thought of a big adventure. Divisions plus neutron weapon plus Pershing plus cruise missiles--a package of deterrrent elements which ought to prevent war.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE LAUDS THATCHER SUGGESTION

[Commentary signed Ein.: "Mrs Thatcher's Idea"]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher has a sense for practical things. She suggested in Washington that a Western naval unit be allowed to operate permanently in the Persian Gulf. She has in mind strategic naval cooperation among the Americans, the French and the British. In line with the present ratio of power, the U.S. Navy is supposed to take over the supreme command. The British Government chief intentionally left out details about the distribution of competences, tactical and operational zones, as well as the subordination setup. She supplied the strategic idea. It was in the wind. The French maintain a unit of two dozen warships in the Arabian Sea. The British are continuously present with six to eight units. Even The Netherlands has regular exercises in the Indian Ocean. The U.S. Pacific Fleet is superior to all with regard to its combat strength, maritime mobility and readiness for action. Mrs Thatcher does not want to have a "second NATO front." She wants to have an effective coordination of interests among the Atlantic partners. She does not want those next door to be politically ignored. Sound commonsense stands behind this initiative.

PAPERS ON NETHERLANDS COUNTERARMING REJECTION

[Commentary signed R.H.: "A Preliminary Decision"]

[Text] Giscard d'Estaing caused a sensation the other day when he, without naming names, mentioned a head of government of the Community who had attracted his attention with neutralist utterances. Well, it could not have been the representative of The Netherlands, but in the event the party of top candidate Joop Den Uyl wins on 26 May and forms the government, the three leading countries of Europe would have reason to worry even without strict "neutralism" (for that is far from Den Uyl) in the case of The Netherlands. The party congress of the Netherlands Social Democrats refrained from even more rigorous decisions only because of the resignation threat of the top candidate; but the unanimous rejection of counterarming by NATO and the deployment of 48 cruise missiles on Netherlands territory alone could well become bad enough for the allies. The approval of the Federal Republic in December 1979 was linked with the condition that it not be made the sole deployment place for the future medium-range weapons. A no by The Netherlands threatens to weaken the position of the chancellor in the internal German debate at large and in the SPD in particular. The whole system of counterarming and its weight as an argument in negotiations with the Soviet Union is in danger if one of the alliance partners envisaged for deployment steps out of line.

The Netherland's no is not supported by a mere small minority. The background feelings about The Netherlands being a "nuclear-free country" and for unilateral disarmament are respectable as the fruit of an historical process. The allies, however, note: With the same degree of self-righteousness with which the reformed Netherlands once wanted, like Spain, to conquer the world, it is today on the opposite course. It wants to withdraw from history as a "small country" and pull the blanket over its head while the storm is raging outside. But The Netherlands is not that small, its gross national product comes to half that of Great Britain.

Joop Den Uyl said not so long ago that the Federal Republic must remain tied to the Community lest it become a hotbed of war. He and his comrades ought to consider this argument in the opposite direction.

CROAT GROUP TAKES REPONSIBILITY FOR RADIO BOMBING

LD051650 Hamburg DPA in German 1616 GMT 5 Mar 81

[Summary] 5 Mar (DPA)--Responsibility for the bombing attack on U.S. broadcasting stations Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty in Munich has now been claimed by the "Commando of Croatian Revolutionaries in Europe." According to the Bavarian criminal investigation office, identical letters were sent to the U.S. Consular General and a Munich newspaper. The letters, which were written in Croatian, were posted at Munich-Riem yesterday. In them, the commando declared that it accepts full responsibility for the attack.

Last Friday, a similar claim was made by the "Armed Secret Organization-Execution Group" in a letter written in Polish.

FOREIGN MINISTRY ON MURDERED TURKISH DIPLOMATS

LD051206 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 5 Mar 81

[Text] Following the murder of two Turkish diplomats on a Paris street near the [Place de la] Bastille yesterday, the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs has just published a communique in which it strongly condemns "the odious attack perpetrated against two Turkish nationals." The Quai d'Orsay points out that every step will be taken to ensure that the perpetrators of the attack are identified and brought before the courts.

BARRE, JAPANESE ENVOY DISCUSS ECONOMIC RELATIONS

OW050137 Tokyo KYODO in English 0122 GMT 5 Mar 81

[Text] Paris, 5 Mar (KYODO)--French Prime Minister Raymond Barre met with Katsuichi Igawa, Japanese ambassador to France, Thursday to explain the outcome of a special ministerial meeting held the previous day to study matters related to economic relations with Japan.

During the 30-minute meeting at the prime minister's official residence, Barre explained in detail the gist of a statement issued at the end of Wednesday's ministerial meeting to the Japanese envoy.

At the ministerial meeting held under Barre's chairmanship, French Government leaders adopted a series of measures to be taken to cope with surging imports of Japanese goods, particularly automobiles. They decided to take a "resolute" stance against what they called a "torrential" influx of Japanese goods into France.

It is unusual for the French prime minister to exchange views with the Japanese ambassador on a specific issue. Japanese sources said this indicates the French Government attaches a great importance to economic relations with Japan.

Barre told Igawa that he felt it necessary to explain the outcome of the ministerial conference to him directly in order to secure the Japanese Government's thorough and correct understanding of the French position. In reply, Igawa said he fully understood that the French Government attaches a great importance to the bilateral economic relations between the two countries. He promised to convey Barre's explanations thoroughly to the Japanese Government.

Meanwhile, it was revealed here Thursday that the French Government decided at Wednesday's ministerial conference to establish a special institution to study Japanese affairs. The "research center on Japan" will study Japanese matters from every angle, including the Japanese language and culture.

Wednesday's ministerial statement called on French enterprises to have a better understanding of Japanese affairs to help in penetrating the Japanese market.

GOVERNOR DENIES PORTUGUESE INVOLVEMENT IN COUP

LD060056 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0000 GMT 6 Mar 81

[Text] Still in connection with the abortive coup in Spain, reports have now come to light about the participation of Portuguese volunteers. AFP last night reported from Madrid that according to police sources, a group of about 250 Portuguese secretly entered Spain on the evening of 23 February planning to help the Spanish putschists.

Also according to AFP, this group was reportedly led by an ex-banker from Luanda and comprised of former officers, noncommissioned officers and soldiers from Portugal's former colonial army. The group is also said to have planned to call on the Portuguese Armed Forces to rise up had the coup in Spain been successful.

Manuel Lopes, our correspondent in Madrid, today asked the civil government of Badajoz [Spanish town near the Portuguese border] about the truthfulness of the AFP report: The civil governor of Badajoz, Lorenzo Martinez, this afternoon denied to Lisbon domestic radio reports that a group of 250 Portuguese extreme rightwingers crossed into his province on the night of 23-24 February with a view to taking part in the attempted coup. The agency responsible for the report in question, however, has stood by its report, claiming that they had access to reliable sources and knew [words indistinct] the Portuguese, former servicemen in the former Portuguese colonies, had been there that night, adding that they did not disclose any names for security reasons.

DEFENSE MINISTRY CLARIFIES REQUEST FOR U.S. ARMS

["Note" from the Press Office of the Ministry of Defense]

[Text] In view of the general concern expressed by some media, and in particular by the Madrid ABC columnist whose pseudonym is "Candido," regarding the possible sale to Spain of U.S.-made Chaparral missiles, the directorate general of armaments and equipment, through the Ministry of Defense Press Office, considers it appropriate to provide certain information:

First: On the Spanish side it is a question of acquiring antiaircraft defense weapon systems for the immediate protection of troops and air and naval bases. They are exclusively assigned to confront low-flying aircraft and their range does not exceed 15,000 meters nor does their ceiling exceed 4,000 meters.

Second: Therefore, no country, whether a neighbor of Spain or not, can be alarmed, because this improvement is a defense with a type of weapon which is already in the arsenals of the armies of France, the FRG and Morocco.

Third: The request made to the U.S. Congress does not constitute more than an initial formality so that the manufacturing company can negotiate its sale to Spain.

Fourth: Together with the American offer the Ministry of Defense is studying other similar offers from France and Great Britain, relating respectively to missiles of the same type--the Roland and Rapier models. The matter will be submitted to the government for its final decision in a few months.

With the information provided, it is considered that it has been made sufficiently clear that the acquisition of this type of weapon system does not mean that Spain, contrary to what columnist "Candido" says, will assume commitments or risks of a dimension comparable to the installation of Soviet ballistic missiles in Cuba which gave rise to the 1963 crisis. Far from it. The Office of Information Dissemination and Public Relations of the Ministry of Defense, nevertheless, offers itself unconditionally to the news media for any clarification which they might want on the matter.

ARMY CHIEF OF STAFF INTERVIEWED ON COUP ATTEMPT

LD052050 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 5 Mar 81

[Interview with Lt Gen Jose Gabeiras Montero, Spain's Army Chief of Staff, on 5 March; place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] General Gabeiras, what was the situation, the general conduct of the army, during those tense moments of 23 and 24 February?

[Answer] The news of those events caught me by surprise while carrying out my daily work at my office, and it surprised me just as it surprised the entire army, the state administration, and all Spaniards.

From the first moment, I do not think that even 10 minutes had gone by, I began contacts with His Majesty the king and with the captains general to whom I gave the appropriate orders and from whom I received the corresponding expressions of expected calm. There was only one exception which is known to all, that of the Third Military Region. These expressions of expected calm were received in the form which is appropriate to an institution such as ours--with a very clear and concrete mission within the constituion.

I was not able to maintain contacts directly with all of the captains general, but I did have contact with all of them via the assistance which General Quintana, the captain general of the First Military Region, provided from the outset.

I do not think I have to say any more because everyone knows how the incidents developed and is aware of the impeccable conduct of all the garrisons in adopting the "Alert II" situation, anticipated in Operation Diana, which came about less than 1 and a 1/2 hour after the commencement of the assault on the Palace of the Congress of Deputies.

[Question] General Gabeiras, now that the events have been overcome, what is the present situation, the state of mind in the army?

[Answer] The army is right now in the same situation as before 23 February. It is absolutely calm and fulfilling its duties, and continues to work toward perfection.

In answer to this question I have to repeat to you something which I have already said several times, namely, that the army of today is the army of yesterday and the army of always. It is perfectly aware of its duties and it is only trying to maintain and defend its prestige and inspire love of the country, loyalty to the king, subordination to the government, love for the people from which it comes and a dissuasive respect in its possible enemies.

[Question] What would you say to the army so that it will continue along that line?

[Answer] On the afternoon of 24 February itself I was able to send to all captain generals an informative note to be read to all their subordinates: generals, commanders, officers and noncommissioned officers in all the garrisons. The note contained the necessary details which would provide knowledge on all the decisions made during those moments of grave general preoccupation. I do not think I have much more to say on this. As I have sometimes said, no one among us dreams about impositions or dictatorships.

The army, the armed forces, are irrevocably committed to the salvation of Spain and, for the sake of this duty, to fulfilling exactly that which we are ordered by the constitution, that is, the constitution on which, as Article II clearly says, our duty is based, the duty to defend the indissoluble unity of the Spanish nation.

I also have to add that we are aware of the fact that we constitute a firm institution, as can be seen in the words spoken by His Majesty the king at the last Pascua Militar [day on which the military pays tribute to the king] and as such we are the protection of the citizenry.

We are also conscious of the fact, and we admit it, that our only honorable, dignified and lawful way of conduct--I repeat it--is confirmed within strict respect for the constitution, and we are not qualified to assume the highest responsibilities which are legally reserved to the crown.

The conduct of the army and the armed forces on these two indescribable days in February demonstrated our attitude in the service of Spain via His Majesty the king, captain general of the armed forces.

[Question] And what would you say to Spaniards in general, irrespective of beliefs and ideologies?

[Answer] That they can be assured that our conduct is as it has always been: honest and purely noble. And, as always, we continue and shall continue to stimulate our spirit, increasing further, if it is possible, our love for the profession, the elevated sentiment of our duty and enthusiasm for our business which we consider to be the business of Spain and of all Spaniards of whose community we form a part.

And, finally, I give thanks to the Spanish people for the expressions of support which I receive continually, in which the armed forces' conduct in the recent incidents in the service of Spain and its king is recognized.

[Question] In conclusion, General, how do you view the immediate future of Spain?

[Answer] With faith in God, in the institutions and with optimism.

[Question] Lieutenant General Gabeiras, chief of the army, many thanks for speaking to us.

INTERVIEW WITH PSOE SECRETARY GENERAL GONZALEZ

LD050923 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 27 Feb 81 p 11

[Barbara Spinelli 26 February interview in Madrid with Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE) Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez]

[Excerpts] [Question] Felipe Gonzalez, you have said that Monday's coup is not an isolated event, that such phenomena could recur and that putschism has not been defeated. Will Spain's democratic institutions succeed in withstanding further tests?

[Answer] Spain's democratic institutions and entire state apparatus are still contaminated by the Francoist virus. There has not been a radical break here, as there was in Portugal or in post-Fascist Italy. The transition adopted very special characteristics in Spain, and the transition to democracy has been painless but incomplete and tenaciously opposed. In any case this evolution was foreseeable: Before and immediately after Franco's death the particular kind of dialectic that had become established between the traditional democratic forces and the Francoist elements wanting some kind of change gave rise to a balance of forces that was difficult to change, at least initially. The transition therefore took place peacefully, without any real breaks with the Francoist apparatus, which was able to survive intact, establishing itself in the state structure, the administration and partly in the army. But Monday's coup dramatically confirmed to anyone who did not yet realize it that the democratic institutions that emerged from this special transition experiment are unable to effectively withstand further traumas and that further attacks on democracy are to be expected, unless the strength of the executive is increased and the government's popular base of support is extended.

[Question] Hence the PSOE's request to join a future coalition government?

[Answer] Just a moment: It is not simply a matter of extending Calvo-Sotelo's government to include the PSOE. The stakes are much higher. The problem today is how to accelerate Spain's democratic evolution without abandoning its characteristic traits of gradualism; how to thoroughly democratize the state apparatus by eliminating the vestiges of Francoism lurking within it; and how to issue a clear sign to civilian society that will indicate a real desire for release from the hidden powers that are still resisting change. And this effort cannot be made by the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] alone, since the putschist temptations are particularly strong in the UCD, as has been seen in recent months. I say that unless we take this qualitative leap forward we will experience further tragic events not unlike Monday night's nightmare at the Cortes.

[Question] Do the armed forces pose a real threat to democracy? Or are the vestiges of Francoism stronger elsewhere?

[Answer] Francoism is present everywhere: in the rightwing and center political forces, in the state administration and in a section of the army and security forces. The armed forces as a whole are not aiming for the elimination of democracy, and even during the recent events they showed the desire to observe existing law. But there are undoubtedly some people who have been granted positions of trust because of their antidemocratic and authoritarian convictions--a great number of them.

[Question] I would like to ask you about terrorism and the economic crisis. Are these not also elements which have delayed the democratization of the state apparatus?

[Answer] Yes, and this is why I say that the program of a government with a broad parliamentary majority should concentrate its efforts on the antiterrorist struggle and on economic reform, precisely so as to prevent further putschist "relapses." From this viewpoint, the recent history of Basque terrorism is highly indicative and also very suspect. Before the death of Arregui, the Basque terrorist who died following torture suffered in prison, terrorism's popular roots had begun to weaken and the phenomenon was losing its virulence. This is why I say that Arregui's killing was a provocation.

[Question] A provocation by whom?

[Answer] A provocation by whoever was directly implicated in Monday's attempted coup d'etat.

[Question] Some people in Spain say that Madrid's entry into NATO would to some extent constitute a democratic guarantee. The Spanish military would follow the allied countries' example and would inevitably have to democratize itself.

[Answer] I do not agree in the least with this analysis. In any case there is no shortage of examples to prove the exact opposite. It is enough to look at the U.S. reaction: Reagan was the last head of state of all the democratic countries to congratulate the king on the defeat of the coup d'etat. He decided to speak only after the events--neither before nor during them. In any case it all depends on how you see the ultimate purpose of military alliances. In my opinion they must be purged of all ideological connotations. It is claimed that the Warsaw Pact was formed to defend the people's democracies. In fact, its task is to defend a totalitarian method of exercising power, and it is no coincidence that it is used to crush the people's will in Czechoslovakia or might be used to do so in Poland. The same applies to NATO. The dictatorships of Salazar, the Greek colonels or the Turkish military are apparently entirely compatible with membership of the Atlantic alliance.

Truly Representative Government

[Question] Last, the attempt to safeguard Spanish democracy must come from the heart of Spain. It must come from a truly representative government.

[Answer] From a government which, as I said before, must include the entire left, directly or indirectly. From this viewpoint I would like to stress that the communist party's contribution is valuable. Santiago Carrillo is well aware of the obstacles of his government participation. The PCE is still a small party and not fully representative. This is why Carrillo has very responsibly offered his backing for a UCD government with socialist participation and for a program that is in agreement with all the forces of the constitutional spectrum. Moreover, only thus can Spain defeat the forms of fanaticism that are assailing it. The public itself demands it: The disunity among the population is a result of the gulf between the government and society. The government leaders of the past few years, including Calvo-Sotelo himself, are not equal to this task. Their ties with Francoist traditions are still strong and their silence on what is really happening at government level is no longer acceptable: It is a residue of a Spain that must disappear.

PAPERS ON SPEED OF NEW GOVERNMENT'S FORMATION

LD051033 [Editorial Report] Spanish newspapers published 27-28 February 1981 carry editorials on the formation of the new Spanish Government, noting particularly the speed with which this took place.

Madrid EL PAIS 27 February asserts on page 8 that the new government "can be interpreted either as a joke in dubious taste or as a temporary formula devised in order not to keep the public administration's functioning in a dangerous state of uncertainty." It continues: "It seems necessary to rule out the hypothesis of a joke, since it would mean nothing else if the new prime minister were to regard the deep political crisis initiated by Adolfo Suarez' still unexplained resignation and exacerbated by the thwarted 23 February coup as closed with his own investiture and a few adjustments in the cabinet."

After commenting on the specific cabinet changes, it reaches the conclusion that, "in the light of these dismissals and changes," "the hypothesis that this government only intends to fill the interregnum until a more well-considered and renovative formula is achieved imposes itself as that which is most plausible and consistent with the delicate situation which this country is experiencing."

"Felipe Gonzalez' offer [of a coalition government], although rejected yesterday by Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, still stands to make both the Union of the Democratic Center and the Catalan minority and the Basque Nationalist Party--essential elements in a possible coalition government--reflect. It is understandable, although it could be dangerous and hazardous, that the new prime minister should wish to take some time, with a temporary government in operation, before deciding on what course to take in this maze which our political scene is today. We can only wish him luck in an enterprise whose success or failure concerns us all, because the survival of the democratic institutions in Spain depends on the success which Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo has over the coming hours, days, weeks and months in making it impossible for events such as those of 23 February to occur again."

Madrid YA 27 February notes on page 9 that the speed with which the government was formed "has caused some surprise." And it maintains:

"Calvo-Sotelo has responded to the Socialists' offer to join in the tasks of government with great restraint in terms of change. For some people it may be an excessively monochrome government. For others, the extremely grave events experienced by the Spanish people during the first days of this week required a strengthening of a team which had proved weak. Many people may reproach the prime minister for not taking into account the deep dissensions in his own party which were made clear during the Palma congress. He undoubtedly believed that the most important thing at present was for the power vacuum not to be prolonged; that it was vital to come to the aid of the country's highest interests and that a homogeneous team with the reins of power in its hands was far more necessary than changes which would require a breaking-in period. What matters least now is the political complexion. The essential thing is to govern quickly and receive the support which the delicate situation, pointed out by the king, requires."

Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA 28 February also asserts on page 5: "The immediate formation of the government, with a minimum of changes, confirms the impression of speed which Mr Calvo-Sotelo wishes to impart to the pace of his conduct." While contending that the leftwing parties' cooperation will be essential with respect to socioeconomic issues, it adds:

"But Mr Calvo-Sotelo prefers to tackle the issue of relations between government and armed forces, which is currently the most acute, with unavoidable tact and on his own, certainly for fear of arousing possible suspicions. The same could be said of the issue of Spain's entry into NATO, which with last Monday's events acquires even greater topicality. The socialists' contradictions and hesitations would delay perhaps fatally, the starting of this process, which today, in light of the uprising, is viewed, even in the ranks of the opposition, from a different viewpoint. From the viewpoint of national security and the modernization and professionalization of the army, NATO was viewed as a guarantee. From a purely civil and political viewpoint, it can also offer protection both in the struggle against terrorism and in the consolidation of democracy, which is today threatened by the extremisms, both of which are of an authoritarian nature.

"Immediate rapprochement with the West, and specifically with West Europe, which has been sensitized by the recent events and the dangers resulting from them, is an important initial step which the new government can take in order to begin to restore confidence. Mr Calvo-Sotelo's haste gives the impression of being justified."

NORDIC COUNCIL TOLD: STRESS FOREIGN POLICY

LD051241 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 3 Mar 81 p 6

[Elisabeth Crona dispatch]

[Excerpt] Copenhagen--"More foreign policy in the Nordic Council" was the gist of Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen's somewhat unusual call to Nordic politicians when the council opened its 29th session in Copenhagen Monday [12 March].

Anker Jorgensen drew a distinction between Nordic action and Nordic thinking and wanted to play down the Nordic countries' different solutions to the security policy question. In fact, he said, Nordic cooperation had actually grown since Denmark and Norway joined NATO.

"The Nordic Council's work does not include foreign policy as such. But it is perhaps time to relax this restriction a little."

"The possibilities inherent in Nordic cooperation are perhaps made clearer if we talk about the international background to Nordic cooperation. To a greater extent than we do today we ought to unite according to our views, and less according to our nationality."

Anker Jorgensen said that in the world the Nordic countries were a political concept much greater than the countries' size or military strength. He thought that in today's political situation the Nordic countries should warn of what he called a militarization of thinking.

Jorgensen said that the Soviet Union with its occupation of Afghanistan carried a great deal of the responsibility for the increase in international tension and also said that there are many indications of a tougher U.S. demarcation of Western interests. Ill-considered decisions could set off dangerous chain reactions.

Concerning nuclear arms, the Danish prime minister said: "As is well known, the Nordic countries already are a nuclear-free zone. Despite the fact that individual countries have different foreign and defense policies, this is a reality.

Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland stressed the significance of Nordic cooperation in the economic field and said that the Nordic countries should make joint proposals to international organizations like the OECD.

In the general debate, several speakers raised the question of the Nordic television satellite, which will be investigated for another year before a decision is made at the next session.

DEFENSE COMMITTEE SUBMITS BUDGET PROPOSALS

LD051012 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0800 GMT 5 Mar 81

[Text] The third parliamentary Defense Review Committee proposes that defense expenditure be concentrated on purchases for the land forces in the next few years. The committee, which submitted its report today, proposes that a total of 17.5 billion markkas be used for military defense in 1982-86. Thus the real growth in defense expenditure would amount to 3.8 percent per annum. The share of military expenditure of Finland's GNP would remain roughly at the present level of about 1.5 percent.

The committee proposes that 38 percent of the funds allocated for purchases be used for improving the land forces, for instance for the purchase of vehicles, antitank missiles and artillery. The air defense share of the purchases should go down from 53 percent to 34 percent of the allocations in the next 5-year period. It is proposed that the surveillance of airspace be improved by purchasing half a squadron of interceptor fighters for the Pirkkala air base. The purchase should take place by the middle of the decade. The proposal allocates 18 percent of the purchase funds for naval defense. The navy is to obtain a flotilla of attack craft equipped with missiles. In addition two gunboats are to be modernized. The modernization of the coastal artillery will also continue.

In a statement on the strategic situation the committee notes that Finland's position continues to be stable, despite the deterioration of the international atmosphere. The foundations of Finland's security policy are also unchanged. The most threatened areas in Finland are still Lapland and southern Finland. But the committee regards a separate attack on Finland as unlikely.

Three members of the committee have included their dissenting opinions in the report. They regard the planned increase in defense expenditure as too high and oppose the purchase of new interceptor fighters, among other things.

AFTENPOSTEN CALLS FOR ALLIANCE REASSESSMENT

LD041831 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 2 Mar 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Readjustment in the West"]

[Text] Relations between the new U.S. administration led by Ronald Reagan and the NATO allies in Europe are in an important phase of clarification. In the last few days Reagan has been discussing the main points in the West's policy with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and French Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet at the White House. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will shortly be sending his foreign minister to Washington, and he will then be going himself. It would be superfluous to say that the dialogue across the Atlantic--which in the European view had obvious shortcomings before the change of presidents--is growing in importance day by day. The greatest possible degree of clarification of the U.S. and European positions is, in particular, one of the things necessary before the negotiations which will have to come between Washington and Moscow. For this reason it is satisfying to note that the new U.S. leaders attach importance not only to the expansion of the dialogue at the official level, but also to its being accompanied by a broad debate.

The Reagan administration has already thrown its main views into this debate. U.S. Assistant Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci at a conference of experts in Munich, which should have aroused greater interest in our area, advocated an "extended European security concept" as an important part of a greater division of the labor and burden with the United States. In broad terms, the United States wants Europe to be involved in meeting Soviet challenges outside the NATO area, first and foremost to secure oil supplies from the Persian Gulf.

It is obvious that the U.S. proposal does not aim at an extension of NATO's issue within the alliance. What Washington wants on this point is greater involvement from leading European states, for example, in the form of the planned joint force in the Gulf area, but also through coordinated security measures in Asian conflict areas. This division of responsibility and burden, besides creating a more effective "deterrent," will also make it possible for the United States to increase its striking power both within and outside NATO. Within the alliance itself, an increased U.S. defense contribution in Europe would also require that the European nations do more for their defense.

Even though all these ideas are not new, they now appear to be an integrated part of the plans for the U.S. global course under the new administration. For this reason, but even more because this concerns key questions in Western cooperation, we should now seize upon this new departure and carry out the oft-postponed reassessment of the relations between the allies and their common objectives.

Outside the official framework, but also of great importance, highly respected experts in the West have made a valuable contribution to this debate. The leading foreign policy institutes in the United States, Britain, France and West Germany have, for the first time, put forward joint proposals for new forms of cooperation between the NATO nations. One of the conclusions in the report is that Europe ought to share with the United States the burdens outside the NATO area--a proposal which is in line with U.S. views. But this is only a part of the allocations of roles among the allies, where increased influence for Europe is a prerequisite of cooperation on new foundations. These are ideas which should not simply remain on paper.
